Working Under Difficulties.

For fourteen years I have not had a day's real health. I have wakened sick and gone to bed weary, and I have done my work unflinchingly. And the battle goes on—ill or well, is a trifle, to us it goes. I was made for a contest and the powers have so willed that my battlefield should be this dingy and inglorious one of bed and the physic bottle.—Robert Louis Stevenson.

EYESIGHT OF SOLDIERS.

Military Efficiency and the Ability to See in the Dark.

Many military experts have given it as their opinion that the training of soldiers' eyesight is the first and most important feature of musketry, and a man who is a good judge of distance is of much greater value on the battlefield than one who is a skilled shot only.

Not the least interesting are the lessons for training a soldier to see in the dark. It is impressed upon him that the ability to see in the dark increases with practice. It is found that on open level ground a standing man in khaki can be seen on an ordinary dark night at about twelve yards, on a starlight night twenty-four yards, and on a moonlight night, with the moon behind the observer, fifty yards. When the moon is behind the person looked at the limit of vision is about 100 yards.

A column of fours moving toward the observer can be seen on an ordinary dark night at about eighteen yards distance; when starlight, at about forty yards; with the moon behind the observer, 120 yards, and about 140 yards when the moon is behind the men looked at.

Soldiers are trained to judge distances up to 1,000 yards. Eight hundred yards is fixed as the limit for the rank and file, because it is found that the most expert shots rarely hit a small target such as a prone figure at distances over 800 yards, even when the range is known.

The standard of accuracy in the British service requires that the mean error for trained soldiers in judging distances within 800 yards' range should not exceed 100 yards. In judging distance tests, officers, non-commissioned officers, and men whose error exceeds 20 per cent. are regarded as inefficient.

HEROIC VETERANS

Napoleon's Famous Fighters, the Imperial Guard.

LIVED UP TO THEIR MOTTO.

Even at Waterloo the Survivors of the Old Guard Fought Their Way on Their Retreat and None Surrendered. Their Shameful and Pathetic End.

Probably no household troops or bodyguards in the world ever achieved the reputation of Napoleon's imperial guard, and they had their origin in a manner that shows that imperial guards, like inventions, generally are often mothered by necessity.

It was during his Italian campaign in the days of the republic, while Napoleon was still General Bonaparte, that the Austrians nearly captured the Little Corporal. If they had succeeded probably the whole history of Europe would have been different and Waterloo would be still waiting for a reputation.

He was passing along the bank of a river with a small escort lent from the divisions of Augereau and Massena. An Austrian corps was hastening up the banks of the same stream to join Beaulieu. After General Bonaparte had ridden some distance in company with Augereau he then returned to Valeggio, where he stopped. He had been suffering from headache and believed that a foot bath would effect a cure.

So during his stop he pulled off his boots and sought to bathe his feet at a house in the village. While he was thus engaged the Austrians appeared. They came so rapidly that there was scarcely time to sound an alarm. However, the alarm was sounded, the gates of the carriageway closed, and the post began to make adefense.

Pulling one boot on one leg and fearing to spend the time to boot the other, Bonaparte rushed out through a back way and thus made his escape on his horse. He rushed as hard as his horse would carry him to Messina, and, although his troops were at mess, they were quickly gathered and started off after the Austrians, who, when they were met, were forced to flee.

But the experience taught Napoleon a lesson. He found that it was perfectly possible for a commanding officer to be taken prisoner with comparative ease, and he soon found a way to make this more difficult.

He organized a command, at first called guides, whose principal duty was to protect the commanding officer. By degrees this body was increased, and under the consulate it was known as the Garde Consulaire, receiving that title in 1799. At that time it consisted of 9775 men and was a mere body of household troops, although naturally with a man like Napoleon it was a combatant force and not for ornamental purposes.

In 1804, with the creation of the empire, this body became the Imperial guard. It grew in size and importance, and in 1809 it was divided into the Vielle garde and the Jeune garde. It was a place of honor. To be admitted the soldier must have served in three campaigns. Consequently it was known as the elite of the imperial troops. Every man was a veteran. It could be depended upon to do its utmost. In 1814, when Napoleon abdicated for the first time, the imperial guard had been increased to 112,482 men of all branches of service.

It was owing to the fact that this army, called the imperial guard, was composed of veterans, men who had seen service and were old campaigners, that Napoleon believed them to be unconquerable. The brunt of battle always had to be borne by the imperial guard. They consequently were always fearfully cut up. Only a remnant of the guard returned from Russia, and at Waterloo their ranks were cut down until few of the old guard remained. It was their motto that the old guard never surrenders, and those who were able to walk away from the battlefield at the foot of Mont St. Jean fought their way on their retreat, and none surrendered.

After Waterloo the old guard was treated shamefully. As many as could be caught were court martialed, and the remainder were regarded as so many banditti. General Lallemand brought 200 of them to America and with them founded a colony in Texas, then not United States territory. This settlement, which was unsuccessful, was named Champ d'Asile, or Field of Refuge. The Mexican government compelled them to leave, and they next sought refuge at Galveston, but again were made to move on, and finally after a few months, the 47 of the 200 that survived arrived in New Orleans. They came here in 1818, and it was not until 1820, when there were only a few survivors, that a sum of $60,000 francs reached the exiles.—Exchange.

The cost of living in Germany has increased considerably since the war began.

THEY ENJOY A FIGHT.

Tommy Atkins and Jack Tar Take Hardships Lightheartedly.

Nothing more clearly shows the excellent spirit of our brave soldiers than the light-hearted manner in which hardship, and even death itself, is faced. The man who marches to action with a rollicking song on his lips, who finds nicknames for the very guns hurling destruction at him, and who makes a jest even of his own sufferings, is a hard man to beat.

First and last, Tommy Atkins is a sportsman, and even when engaged in the grim game of war he cannot forget entirely the pastimes of peace, as witness the following incident: One of our batteries was firing at a building occupied by the enemy, and our lads in the trenches watched the proceedings eagerly. At the third discharge the target crumpled up like a house of cards, and a prostrate spectator flung up his arms excitedly and yelled "Goal! Hardy himself couldn't have stopped that one."

Again, when at Mons the long days of retreat became days of advance for our troops, a jubilant British private described the situation tersely as "Half time. Change over." Another football enthusiast, limping painfully away from the firing-line, answered a sympathetic inquiry with a smile, and the explanation, "Got fouled in the penalty area."

That magnificent bit of marksmanship, when H. M. S. Birmingham shot away the periscope of a German submarine, was aptly described by one of the crew, who remarked, "Well bowled. Just took the bail nicely."

During the early days of the war the scarcity of blankets was a frequent topic in the trenches. "I hear there'll be a lot of chaps without blankets to-night," said one Tommy. No sooner had he spoken than a perfect hurricane of lead swept over them. "If we get much o' this there'll be blankets without men, I'm thinking," came the grim reply.

A private in the trenches, raising himself to get a glimpse of the foe, had his sleeve ripped open by a bullet. "Well, I'll be darned," he said, quizzically. Another, on being told by his pal that they were facing a million of the enemy, took careful aim, fired, and replied, "No, lad, only 999,999."

Two riflemen were discussing the enormous amount of lead used daily, and one suggested the possibility of a shortage. "No fear," said his chum. "Lead's economical stuff; you can make a little go a long way." It was an Irishman who, on hearing that the German soldiers have an aversion to "cold steel," promptly retorted, "Sure, then, we'll just make it hot for them."

A FRIEND IN NEED.

The Pleasure That Came With a Little Act of Kindness.

"I am one of your new neighbors, Mrs. Estabrooks," said a cheerful voice at our door in the very middle of our first attempt at moving. "No, I can't come in. I just brought you a bit of lunch, knowing you would be too busy to fix any. Please call on me—just next door—if I can be of any help. Goodby!"

My husband and I glanced at that tray with its two bowls of hot soup and steaming little pot of coffee and then at each other in dumb surprise.

We had just reached that dreadful state in moving when nothing is in place and the things wanted first are underneath the things wanted last—that awful moment when a sense of helplessness, weakness and homesickness combined swoops down upon you.

We had not realized that we were hungry and physically exhausted, but after sitting down at an improvised table and sampling that delicious soup and drinking the stimulating coffee we suddenly knew what had been the matter with us. Courage returned.

"Blessings on our neighbor!" cried Ben.

"Yes," I answered. "She's the jolliest caller I ever received. She has taught me how to introduce yourself to new neighbors and win their everlasting gratitude. Whatever happens in this neighborhood I'll stand by Mrs. Estabrooks—see if I don't!"—Woman's Home Companion.

SUBSTANTIAL PROOF

By a Canadian Witness.

Beechmont, Ont.—"I feel it my duty to tell what Dr. Pierce's remedies have done for me. When I commenced taking them I was completely run down. I have taken altogether nine bottles of the 'Golden Medical Discovery' and 'Favorite Prescription,' together with the 'Pleasant Pellets' and can truthfully say that I feel like a new woman. I would certainly recommend these medicines to any one suffering as I did."—Mrs. Wm. Pumley, Beechmont, Ont.

An imitation of nature's method of replacing waste of tissue, enriching impoverished blood and increasing nerve force is when you take an alterative extract of herbs and roots made with pure glycerine, without the use of alcohol, like Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. This vegetable medicine coaxes the digestive functions and helps in the assimilation of food, or rather takes from the food just the nutriment the blood requires.

Pure blood is essential to good health. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery not only cleanses the blood of impurities, but it increases the activity of the blood-making glands, and enriches the body with an abundant supply of pure rich blood. It thus cures scrofula, eczema, erysipelas, boils, pimples and other eruptions that mar and scar the skin.

Hail Damages Wheat Crop

Hail and Windstorm Does Serious Damage in Sedley District

REGINA, Aug. 30.—Hail and strong winds struck the Sedley district, causing damage to about 500 acres of standing wheat. Of the 500 acres affected between sixty and eighty per cent. The hail was big enough in some places to break windows and kill chickens and ducks. At one place the hail was piled up six inches high.

Wild Animals in Borneo.

A peculiar feature of Borneo is that it is practically an immense game preserve. The white inhabitants are government officials, planters, and business men and have neither time nor inclination to do any hunting. The result is that the game with which the country abounds is rarely disturbed. Elephants and rhinoceroses are so plentiful that they are a nuisance to rubber and cocoanut estates by destroying young trees.

He—Yes, but you interrupted me again. I love you not for your money's sake.

She—Well, I'm so glad, for that was only a joke about the $50,000.

EXAMINER PATTERN SERVICE

A BUNGALOW APRON WITH STYLE.

By Anabel Worthington.

However strange it may seem to associate the idea of style with an apron, it is none the less true that the bungalow apron may possess this quality as well as that of utility. Glance at the illustration and it will be easy to understand how this occurs. In the first place we have the complete little waist, as plain as plain can be. To lift it out of the ordinary there are the raglan sleeves, which are cut in one with the back and which therefore produce the impression of a yoke in front. These sleeves are short, ending at the elbow. The skirt portion of the garment has a plain and narrow front gore, which has no gathers at the top. The side or back gores, on the contrary are gathered where they are held by the belt, and cover the sides and the back of the skirt. It is on these gores also that the small pockets are placed. Waist and skirt are joined beneath a narrow belt and both are closed down the centre of the back.

It is customary for many women to go out into the country in summer and live in small bungalows, where they must of necessity do their own housework. They wish to be presentable at all times, for neighbors are generally near at hand and friendly, and yet they cannot work with comfort in a dress. It is for these women, above all, that the bungalow apron was invented, and they often use it instead of a dress, fashioning it of something a little prettier than the usual gingham.

The pattern of this apron, No. 7209, is cut in sizes 34 to 44 inches bust measure. Medium size requires 4¼ yards of 36 inch material with 2½ yards of edging.

When ordering remember to give your name and address as well as the number and size of pattern required, and age of a child.

Price 15 cents, or 2 for 25c.

ANTIQUITY OF SUGAR CANE.

The Plant Is Mentioned in the Sacred Books of the Hindus.

Growing sugar cane is an industry so old that it antedates the Christian era by many centuries, according to an article by Edward Albes.

"Scientists admit they do not know just where the sugar cane originated," Mr. Albes writes, "for nowhere has it been found in its wild state. It has been a cultivated product for many centuries, and the first mention to be found in written records is in the sacred books of the Hindus, 'I have crowned thee with a shooting sugar cane, so that thou shalt not be averse to me,' was written many centuries before the Christian era.

"In the train of Alexander the Great, during his Asiatic conquests, were some observant persons who made notes of what they saw, when not too busy killing off the inhabitants, and in these written documents, according to later writers who fell heir to them, is told the story of 'a reed growing in India which produces honey without bees.' Thus sugar cane was evidently well known in that country before 320 B. C.

"As to the manufactured product of the cane, the first kind of sugar of which mention is made was a concentrated cane juice called 'gur' in India ('gud' in Sanskrit), and this seems to have been known as a food from prehistoric times. That its manufacture was a well established industry in India in the seventh century is attested by the old Chinese encyclopedia, the Pentsaokangmu, which states that the Emperor T'aitsung, who reigned from 627 to 650 A. D., sent some of his people to Behar to learn the art of sugar making.

"The manufacture of sugar even in the early centuries of the Christian era was not restricted to the mere evaporation of the juice of the cane to dryness, for the Arabs and Egyptians had soon learned how to purify raw sugar by recrystallization and incidentally how to make a great variety of sweetmeats or candy out of the product."

THE GERMAN TRENCHES SMASHED AT MANY POINTS

ARE ALLIES PREPARING FOR BIG ASSAULT

THE FRENCH ARTILLERY AND BOMBS SMASH THE GERMAN TRENCHES

Great Damage Done at Many Points on The Line by Big Guns and Grenades---Bomb Attacks Result in Heavy Losses to The Teutons---No Infantry Actions Reported In The West.

PARIS (French Official Communique) Aug. 30.—Whole sections of the German trenches were blown out by a concentrated attack by the French artillery and explosion of mines lost night. "The damage was most severe at Court Chausses, Meurisons and Bolante. The French inflicted heavy losses on the Teutons by attacks with grenades immediately afterward. There were no important engagements of infantry on the battle front last night."

PETROGRAD, Aug. 30.—The formation of a coalition cabinet to direct the affairs of Russia for the remainder of the war, was urged at a great meeting in Moscow. The Duma members and representative leaders organized the meeting. Resolutions were adopted declaring that the war should be continued regardless of its cost, but urging the immediate formation of a non-political ministry.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 30.—While awaiting word from Berlin agreeing to the American stand on the submarine warfare methods, President Wilson is overhauling various tentative drafts of message administration plans to send to London dealing with the British order-in-council and cotton contraband decrees. He is spending on it much of the time he has been able to save from his many other duties, since it became practically certain that the German-American controversy would be settled satisfactorily.

LONDON, Aug. 30.—The British steamer Sir William Stephenson of 540 tons, has been sunk by a German submarine.

BERLIN, Aug. 30.—Closing in upon the Russian fortress of Grodno the German forces have captured the City of Lipsk, twenty miles west of the Grodno forts. A second German force is approaching Grodno from the southwest. The evacuation of the fortress, the last Slav stronghold defending the Warsaw-Petrograd Railway, is expected before the end of the week.

LONDON, Aug. 30.—Reports from the eastern front indicating the Austrians and Germans are engaged in an effort to clear the last corner of Galicia still held by their opponents, have excited great interest here. The Russian lines on the Upper Bug and Zlota Lipa have been pierced, but it is not clear how serious resistance is being offered to the vast enveloping movement from the south. Having lost Brest-Litovsk the Grand Duke Nicholas cannot afford to hold the river positions in the south in fact of the important movement, for to do so would endanger his armies. The opinion is ventured by some English critics that this latest movement may conclude for the present the great offensive effort against the Russians, which has been in progress since May, and that once Austrian soil is cleared of the invaders a new campaign may be undertaken by the Teutonic forces, this time in the near east. In support of this theory is cited the report that the central powers are massing troops near the Rumanian border.

BERLIN, Aug. 30.—Gen. Von Beseler, the conqueror of Antwerp and of Novo Georgievsk, has been transferred to the operations in the Riga district. The War Office stated his forces have surrounded the bridgehead at Frikricksadt. German troops forced the Russians to retire from the tributary of the Wide and have forced a crossing of the Sukolka River. East and southeast of Brest-Litovsk the Slavs made an attempt to halt Gen. Mackensens' advance. A sharp engagement occurred yesterday south of Kobrin, but the Russians were defeated and to-day were continuing their retreat.

U. S. OFFICIALS SEE SOME HOPE OF PEACE IN FOE'S ATTITUDE

WASHINGTON, Aug. 29 Some of the officials in Washington think they can see in Germany's change of policy toward the submarine issue a larger purpose than the mere maintenance of friendly relations with this government They believe that Germany, if not actually seeking to pave the way for peace negotiations, is at least preparing herself for the day when such negotiations will be begun

As viewed by these officials and in diplomatic circles here, Germany is moving to rehabilitate herself in the eyes of the neutrals, so that when a movement for peace is actually undertaken she may be assured of a larger measure of sympathy and support from the neutral powers than would be accorded to her now

The view that Germany is looking forward to possible peace developments from a settlement of the submarine issue is very substantial foundation in suggestions Ever since the submarine issue became acute they have argued informally upon Washington officials the great opportunity for a step in the direction of peace if the United States could only successfully mediate the submarine and blockade differences between Germany and Great Britain It has been their contention that such an important step would probably prove to be only a beginning and that the way would then be open for the United States to use its good offices in promoting a still better understanding which eventually might result in peace

Since the Arabic incident and the more conciliatory attitude toward the United states, talk along this line has been revived in German quarters here

Mr J J Turner, Sr., was on the bench with Magistrate Dumble this morning casting a J P eye over the procedure Mr Turner believes that since he is a Justice of the Peace he might as well get some of the experiences which will enable him to accept any duties that may be presented to him Hence in giving his time to understudy duties this morning it was simply for the purpose of properly qualifying himself for possible eventualities Besides a Justice of the Peace has county jurisdiction which extends beyond the city magistrate's boundaries.

POKER GAME SUNDAY MORNING IN BOAT HOUSE

The police stepped in on a little five cent ante poker game about half past twelve Sunday morning in one of the boat houses above the C P R bridge, and in pleading guilty this morning through their counsel Mr Waddilove offered the excuse that they did not know it was after midnight Magistrate Dumble reserved judgment until to-morrow

Mr Waddilove told the court that after hearing the statements of the half dozen young men, some of whom are married, he advised them to plead guilty

"Do you want me to reward you for that," asked Magistrate Dumble with a meaning all his own.

BIG CAMPAIGN OPENS TO-NIGHT

Mass Meeting at Lakefield This Evening Under The Auspices of The Speakers' Patriotic League —Addresses Will be Given.

BIG CROWD EXPECTED

The big county campaign in the interests of the Peterborough City and County Battalion, Canadian Expeditionary Force, will be held this evening at Lakefield, when a mass meeting will be held in the village hall. It is expected that there will be a large attendance of citizens of the village and from the surrounding countryside. The Lakefield band will be in attendance and a number of the recruits of the 80th Battalion will also visit Lakefield. The speakers will be His Honour Judge Huycke, J. A. Sexsmith, M.P., and Lt.-Col. Miller.

In the announcement of the Havelock meeting for Thursday night, it was stated that Judge Huycke would be one of the speakers. This was an error. The Havelock speakers will be J. A. Sexsmith, M.P., Lt.-Col. Miller and F. D. Kerr.

RED CROSS FLOWER DAY A $160 SUCCESS

The generous Peterborough Floral Company, the Red Cross lady workers and the public are to be congratulated upon the success of the sale of the 5,000 flowers donated by the Floral Company alone and. These 5,000 blooms were sold, as well as about 2,000 additional contributed for sale by generous citizens. The amount realized was the tidy sum of $160.

This is all clear gain as the flowers cost nothing, and there was no expense incurred Mr. Roland Denne, president of the company, very kindly placing his shop at the disposal of the Red Cross workers, who did the rest. The committee in charge of the affair was Mesdames J. A. Aylmer and Mrs. Peter Campbell and Miss Laura Davidson. They were assisted by a corps of willing workers, members of the local branch, and by others. The work was no sinecure, as it took a good deal of time to arrange and tie thousands of bouquets and boutonnieres, and attend to their sale.

This happy thought of the Floral Company and its happy issue wrought out by the ladies did more than help the Red Cross funds, it involved, the local application of the Red Cross spirit, kindness to the sick Of the flowers sold, a large number were bought for the hospitals and churches, and some were used to equip two weddings and one funeral. The occasion demonstrated the plucky spirit of solicitude for our soldiers, shown by some who are making and have made great sacrifice One mother showed her interest by buying a ten cent bouquet to help some wounded or sick soldiers. She had before donating her "widow's mite," done her bit by sending four sons all she had to the war. One of them was with Major Bennett, and has not been heard from since the battle of St. Julien.

The company, which gave the ladies who sold, and the public who bought, the flowers on Saturday, in spirit placed flowers or their equivalent, at the table beside the cots of Canadian wounded and sick soldiers.

CARL SCHMIDT IS CAUGHT BY BORDER POLICE

Alleged Dynamiter Supposed to Have Been Implicated in The Walkerville Outrages is Under Arrest.

A SUSPICIOUS ACTION

WINDSOR, Ont Aug. 30.—Provincial detectives Nash and Smith this afternoon took into custody Carl Schmidt, the man who is believed to have been "second in command" in the recent dynamiting outrages at Walkerville. Schmidt was arrested as he stepped from an excursion steamer to Bois Blank at 5 o'clock. The island is directly across the river and opposite Amherstburg, and is in Canadian waters, a fact of which it is believed Schmidt was in ignorance when he boarded the boat at Detroit for a day's outing.

Immediately the prisoner was put aboard a small ferry boat which crosses from the island to Amherstburg, and after being held there a short time was brought to Windsor, and afterwards transferred to Walkerville jail

As Schmidt was being ferried across to Amherstburg he placed his hand in his pocket and took out a letter, which he quickly threw overboard. The movement, however, was not lost upon the officers, who stopped the boat and recovered the letter. It is written entirely in German, is addressed to a man with a German name in New York City and is signed "Carl".

THE WEATHER

There was another heavy downpour last night, accompanied by thunder and lightning The thunder was of an especially robust character The rainfall totalled 70 of an inch This gives a total for August of almost seven inches 6.87. This total is about three times the usual amount for the month of August.—W P

TWO HORSES WERE KILLED IN STORM

Lightning Struck Barn Belonging To Chamberlen Estate Which Was Destroyed—One Thunderbolt Awoke The City.

WAS NO INSURANCE

Two horses were destroyed as a result of last nights storm, which resulted in considerable damage throughout the locality. The horses were stabled in a barn belonging to the Chamberlen estate, and located about two miles south of the city. The first and only flash of lightning struck the building, which immediately caught fire One of the animals managed to find its way out, but subsequently died as a result of the terrible burns which it received. The other horse was cremated in the building A number of implements were destroyed, together with a quantity of feed. There was no insurance on the building Mr Keith Graham was the owner of the horses and also lessee of the property on which the building was located

The storm, which was particularly severe, was featured by one terrific crash of thunder that shook the buildings in the immediate vicinity A number of places were struck by lightning, but no serious damage resulted, with the exception of the barn that was destroyed on the Chamberlen estate.

A NEW ROLE FOR W. J. BRYAN

Kansas Farmer Waited Four Long Years for The Opportunity to Kiss The Former Secretary of State and When It Arrived He Was Not Slow to Act.

KINGMAN, Kan., Aug 30 A large wet kiss saved for William Jennings Bryan for four years ago by John Graber, a big farmer living near Murdock, was planted squarely upon Mr. Bryan's quivering lips just after he had ended a Chautauqua lecture here Mr Graber has whiskers

Throughout his address, especially when he touched upon the subject of the war, Mr Bryan had been interrupted by enthusiastic applause He knew that his audience was sympathetic, but was apparently amazed to discover that it was becoming amorous. Hardly had the last chunk of his silver voice faded into silence when Mr Graber rose from his seat and with outstretched hand and orisinal pioneers exclaimed that Mr. Bryan was a credit to his country.

Mr Bryan, who will shake hands with any one once reached out to accept the hand of Mr Graber and before he knew it experienced the sensation of being patted upon the beautiful face by an excited porcupine His genial face disappeared in the Graber whisker patch for a full moment and a smack, like an elephant associated with a hot water hose rang out spluttered through the whiskers Mr Bryan's face as lost as the wine Forty friends spank back and muttered something It was just God bless you

Mr Graber when he had completed the platoon meal announced that he has been reading Mr Bryan's newspaper for years and that when a chance presented itself to plant on his face he could not resist it

I made up my mind that the first time I saw you I would kiss you and the after noon Mr Graber said this was my opportunity

Mr Bryan who is visiting Fort Riley, Kansas, smiled happily

TREASONABLE POLITICAL PULL.

Mr. D. A. Thomas, who is in Canada on behalf of the British War Office to oversee the placing of orders for ammunition, made the following statement in Montreal this week to a representative of The Herald:

There is more "politics" in Canada at the present time than there is in England, and it is a bad thing for Canada. Big political interests here, at the present juncture, who are intimately connected with manufacturing concerns, are out after orders. Orders come first—the making of munitions being a secondary outcome. It is a bad thing for Canada.

So the feeling we have had that at Ottawa and elsewhere, patriotism has swallowed up politics is unwarranted. We have not all altogether taken to heart the warning involved in political pull and the party patronage list being responsible for the horse-buying scandal, the bad boots scandal, the automobile trucks scandal, the field glasses scandal, and the field dressing scandal. We don't seem to have seized the seriousness of the situation. Sir Robert Barden has been making fine sounding speeches in England, telling the home government and the home people what sacrifices Canada was prepared to make to save the Empire and help end the war, to help prevent the gyves of German militarism being fastened upon our ankles.

The great need—the greatest need is munitions of war—and even in this hour of stress and strain and dire need, the evils of political pull, and the curse of patronage, is being permitted to exercise their influence to prevent our doing our best. It is stated that orders for shells have been placed with people who had no previous knowledge, or experience of engineering work—while established engineering works have applied for shell contracts in vain. We are told of cases where, old buildings, and even town halls, have been converted into shell factories, while other places better fitted are neglected. In this connection it may be asked why the Government does not turn over the immense and splendidly equipped Transcontinental Railway workshops at St. Malo, Quebec, to shell manufacturing? Every man who can make a shell should be given the chance to do so without regard to any consideration, political or otherwise.

It would be a fine thing if we could be justified in believing that political pull has not been allowed to swamp our patriotism; but we cannot believe it in the face of the statement of a man entirely independent, and out of sympathy with party, who has been commissioned to comb the country to secure the manufacture of war munitions; who has investigated the situation and been forced to the conclusion, that political influence, is preventing Canada doing her full duty in regard to the greatest, most vital, and most insistent demand upon her resources. Men are needed, but munitions are more needed. We don't ask the recruit what his politics are; we accept him if he is fit. Why then, as Mr. Thomas says, that we do, do we examine the political credentials of the men or firms, that offer for enlistment in the ranks of shell makers? While we send our brave boys to the ranks to fight our battles, we at home, by permitting the interference of political pull, handicap them by refusing to supply them with munitions. We send them in a degree to face the enemy with bare hands.

We would like to believe that there is no political pull at work, at a time when partyism is wiped out in the hearts of the people, and all are pulling together. We would like to believe this, but can we do so in the face of the declaration of Mr. Thomas? His statement is not the result of partizan prejudice, but is founded upon full investigation and of full knowledge of the facts.

Any deference to political considerations in Canada's production of munitions, or in any other branch of war activity, amounts to treason; it is in effect treason, since it helps the enemy by weakening our own power of doing our utmost. Keeping ammunition and munitions from our own soldiers, is next door to supplying the enemy with them.

If Mr. Thomas' statement is justified, Sir Robert Borden has not come home a moment too soon; and he cannot too soon rigidly investigate to discover whether his absence from the country has been permitted to illustrate the provehb — "When the cat's away the mice will play."

RED CROSS JAM SHOWER DAY.

This ravaging war cuts out our work for all of us.

There is a chance for all of us, from the humblest to the highest, to do our bit.

We who can fight must get into the fight. We who can't fight, but can finance, must finance. We who can't give a machine gun, can do something else. The needs are so many, so various, that every little helps; every little counts.

Red Cross ladies—they are better than ladies—they are women—are putting their whole souls and bodies and spirit into their work, and are inspiring the public with a great deal of their spirit.

They are tapping every source of contribution to the help and healing, and comfort of our sick and wounded soldiers.

How they have attuned the public to listen to "the healing voice of charity," is witnessed by the great success of the flower sale on Saturday, when the public purchased seven thousand blooms and paid $160 for them—all for the Red Cross Fund—all clean gain.

Now for the Jam Shower for the sick and wounded Canadian soldiers the Red Cross is organizing.

At a meeting held on Friday there was a splendid representation of all the city churches, that are to cooperatee. With a splendid enthusiasm it was arranged to conduct a jam shower on and from Sept. 20 to Sept. 25. Messrs. Hall and Sons have placed one of their big display windows at the disposal of the committee, to store the contributed jam.

The households and housewives of Peterborough will be asked to contribute 2,000 jars of jam, and it must be the old-fashioned kind "that mother used to make." Canned fruit is not wanted being unsuited to the purpose aimed it.

Screw-top jars must be used to insure safe transport, and they may be filled with good thick jam; or jelly; or maple syrup or marmalade.

You bring your jar or jars to Hall and Sons, and the Red Cross do the rest—ship the fruit without charge to donors, direct to hospitals for use of sick and wounded Canadian soldiers. As Queen's University base hospital is now at the Dardanelles, a part of the jam will be sent there direct.

Now as to the modus operandi. Every church in the city is represented by a committee of ladies, two from each church congregation. A day is set apart for the collection of the contributions from each of the group of churches of one denomination. Two ladies from each church will take charge at the central depot on the day assigned.

It is expected that each church committee will influence the donations of its membership.

Though the work is divided among church groups, there is no such thing as tabulating contributions; as with the early Christians all the contributions will be pooled and no account will be taken of what any individual church or church group will contribute.

There will be no comparison of results—only results are aimed at.

The spirit felt at the preliminary meeting to organize the jam shower, showed a splendid enthusiasm of coperation which assures us that in providing food delicacies for sick and wounded soldiers, Peterborough ladies will do their bit in a way to maintain, if not better, their record for good work in other ways.

Here is a chance for the housewife to shine; to do her bit and her best. She may not be in a position to help otherwise, and in this she can show her woman's spirit, the spirit of tenderness. She can feel that what she does is another form of the cup of cold water of Scripture. Let her fancy her own boy, languishing in a hospital, surrounded by strangers, with all an invalid's longing for some little delicacy—some change from the hard routine of rations—and she will be well repaid for any trouble she may take to put some jam or jelly, or marmalade to the hungry lips of somebody else's boy.

It is not too soon now to begin preparing fruit. Take time to do it well, it should be of the best—it is a gift as unto the Lord, and the Jewish sacrificial lamb was to be "without blemish."

Many send jars of fruit to their neighbours who may not need it, only as a token of love. Providing fruit for the wounded and sick soldiers is the better way.

The Red Cross Society aims at 2,000 jars. Do not disappoint them and the sick and wounded soldiers who are longing for them. That would be about one jar in ten of our population, and you need not be afraid of giving too many jars. There are many that can do nothing, and you and others like you are expected to make up for the missing ones.

In a later issue will be found particulars of interest, more details. But no details are needed to put our good housewives to work, to be in readiness to meet the de-

ARMIES—CANADIAN AND AMERICAN.

Canada now has 150,000 men under arms, half of them on the battlefield, the remainder undergoing practical training in Canada. The United States Federal Army numbers about 80,000. If to the active military force of the United States is added the National Guard, then the total force available is not more than 202,000. Canada, on the other hand, has an additional force of some 70,000 volunteers, so that her total of trained men under arms, or immediately available, is 220,000. Montreal Herald-Telegraph.

IT MUST BE VICTORY.

In the twelve months to come must be fought out, in blood and bitterness, the destinies of mankind. From us, as from all men, the full issue of the battles of tomorrow is withheld. Only as in a glass darkly, can we perceive a nebulous vision of victory. We know it must be victory, because throughout in this conflict of the world we have felt truth and justice, honour and mercy working mysteriously to that end. Right, we know, is now on our side. London Daily Express.

HOW CANADA GOT ITS NAME.

It is probable that few people know how Canada came to get its name. The origin of the word is very strange. The Spaniards visited there previous to the French and made search for gold ornaments and finding none, they often said amongst themselves, "Aca nada" meaning, "There is nothing here." The Indians, who watched closely learned the sentence and its meaning. Then came the French and the Indians, who did not want them supposing they had come on the same mission as the Spanish, kept pouring into their ears the Spanish sentence, "Aca nada." The French, who knew as little of the Spanish as they supposed that the necessarily recurring sound was the name of the country, and ultimately christened it Canada, which it has born ever since.

A SOLDIER'S IDEA OF WHAT TRENCH-FIGHTING SOLDIERS NEED

PEMBROKE, Aug. 28. The following is part of a letter from Corporal George Graham who has been on active service since last fall in the trenches of France. The letter was wrote to his father, Mr. W. J. W. Graham who lives at Beachburg, only a short distance from here and goes to show just what the soldiers think of any resolutions passed to deprive them of any little luxuries they might be fortunate enough to receive from friends in Canada. The letter follows:

Dear Dad: Your most welcome letter received a few days ago and as usual, I was very glad to hear from home. I also received the second parcel of tobacco and must say you are a very good judge of tobacco not being a smoker yourself. Send the same amount every two weeks or so will catch me fine.

"While reading this afternoon I noticed a piece about the W.C.T.U. convention, held recently, where they passed a resolution deprecating the sending of cigarettes and tobacco to the soldiers at the front. Well, I don't know much about that society and guess their intentions are good, but I think I can safely say that seventy per cent. of the soldiers smoke cigarettes, and anyone who wants to be patriotic could not send a soldier anything that would be more appreciated than a few cigarettes.

"I know that most everyone in Canada has a horror of cigarettes, but in England and France it's different; practically everyone smokes cigarettes. Now I don't want you to think I uphold cigarette smoking. I don't when in Canada, but here it is altogether different, as it is hard to get pipes, and they are easily broken. Then again, in the trenches a pipe is too cumbersome; it is also harder to keep the glow from showing, while a cigarette is much easier a smoker smoke one more handy.

"If they think we should not smoke what are we doing sit in the trenches and shot our enemies. A cigarette is not only handy here, and if they would decide to quit them, well, I guess they had better quit the war off. Of course if they don't care to send the boys cigarettes, all well and good, they can buy cigarettes and tobacco here. The only drawback to that being that the French tobacco here is something similar to that stuff used by farmers to fertilize the land. Imagine the condition a man would be in after smoking a little of that.

"Then again about the rum issued to the troops. It is 'issued' for the rum I know of a good many times when after a hard march, we found we haven't our horses and the pace is rather swift, we are all heated up and have only the cold ground to sleep on and without blankets—only a rubber sheet. If we hadn't the rum we would have had pneumonia. In the trenches you certainly do need it, with water and mud to the top of your boots whenever it rains, and it's cold at night here, different from Canada.

"However, they need not worry about the amount of the ration issued to each man because it wouldn't hurt a canary. It's all very well for them to sit on their birthday in a nice easy chair at home and say what we should have and what we should not. Thank heaven they are not running this war.

"By the way, before I forget, I might say that we are not being issued with rum now, haven't been for some time, only on special occasions. I don't know why I said so much about it as I didn't really intend to when I started, but it makes me mad to think they would take a soldier's only luxury away from him. Well, that's enough about it.

"GEORGE."

TO THE WEST BY THE NEW ROUTE.

The novelty of making your next trip to Western Canada via a new route, giving you the opportunity of traversing new territory; providing new scenery, and making the trip by a new train should be interesting. This route is via Toronto and North Bay by the Grand Trunk Railway System, Cobalt and Cochrane through the famous Timagami Forest Preserve by Temi-kaming and Northern Ontario Ry., thence the Trans-continental Line to Winnipeg where connection is made with Grand Trunk trains for all points in Western Canada and the Pacific Coast. Ask any Grand Trunk Agent for full particulars, rates, etc.

THE MANITOBA CRIME.

It surely is an ironical stroke of fate that one of the three signatures to the Royal Commission's report condemning the late Conservative Government in Manitoba for a shameful betrayal of public trust should be that of Sir Hugh John Macdonald, a son of the greatest Conservative statesman Canada has known. The Commission finds that the responsible heads in this Government were guilty of a fraudulent scheme of conspiracy by which out of a sum of $1,664,242 paid out ostensibly for work done on the parliament buildings no less an amount than $622,963 was not for such work at all, but was diverted to fraudulent purposes. In other words, close upon one million dollars of the taxpayers' money was stolen. Montreal Herald-Telegraph.

MAKE SHELLS IN JAPAN

Will Establish Special Factories to Aid Allies.

TOKIO, Aug. 7. The establishment of special factories for the manufacture of shells will be a part of the increased assistance which Japan has decided to give her allies in the war, it is learned.

Details of the plans for carrying on the work of increasing Japan's munition supplies have been discussed by the Ambassadors of the Entente powers with Premier Okuma, the diplomats going in a body from the summer Embassies at Ghozenji to Nikko for the purpose following the Premier's recent audience with the Emperor.

EAST CITY TEAM ARE CHAMPIONS OF THE CITY LEAGUE

Beat Empires 13 to 8 in Deciding Game Saturday---Thistles Cinch Second Place By Beating Classics

The East City team are champions of the City Baseball League. After three weeks' delay they settled the issue beyond a doubt on Saturday, when they handed the Empires a 13 to 8 beating in the first game of the double header. As it turned out, the victory was needed, as the Thistles trimmed the Classics in the second game.

It was some heat for East City to win Saturday, as they had a shadow of their original team. Swanston, Hazerman, Barrie, Pinneau and McGuern were all missing. However, Kirn pitched steadily, and the subs who took the regulars places, worked well. Empires had a 4 to 0 lead at one stage but wilted before long.

The second game was a nip and tuck struggle, the Thistles winning by 6 to 5, after a last innings rally, and thus cinching second place. The Scores.

JIMMY DUFFY WANTS $50,000

Alleges Ganson G. Depew Was Careless and Negligent, Causing Automobile Accident Near Country Club

BUFFALO, Aug 30 James "Jimmy" Duffy of Lockport, contender for the lightweight boxing championship, intends to sue Ganson G. Depew, of Buffalo, for $50,000 damages for injuries alleged to have been suffered by him in an automobile accident on the Williamsville road, near the Country Club on June 28th. Attorneys Donnelly and O'Neil are preparing the papers in the suit and will have them ready for filing within a few days.

Duffy asserts in the documents that he will perhaps never be able to fight again because of the injuries that he suffered. He says that his left leg and hip were seriously battered up and that an operation was necessary to cut out portions of the flesh of his leg and crowded against the bone of the joint of his left knee.

Further in the papers he says that because of the accident, he has been led not being able to follow out his vocation. He claims that if he had been physically able to fight he would have made several appearances in the squared arena for which he would have received substantial sums.

The other $25,000 is what Duffy figures is due him for what he will lose in the future because of his incapacitation.

Duffy says that he was riding in a machine with Fred Keller, a Lockport business man, when the accident occurred. He blames Depew for alleged carelessness and negligence.

"A man who is deceived as to newspaper circulation is not entitled to much sympathy."

WALKING FOR HEALTH.

The Pedometer Habit Is a Splendid One to Cultivate.

A famous New York doctor was called upon some months ago by a patient who presented an appearance of illness, but with whom he could find nothing the matter. Questioning disclosed the fact that he had not taken regular physical exercise for years. "That's your trouble," remarked the wise physician. "I'll write you a prescription." When he got outside the office the patient opened the bit of paper and read, "Get a pedometer and bring it back to me in three weeks with the indicator pointing to 100 miles." When the patient returned at the time mentioned the doctor, without making an examination, told him he need not come back any more. His looks demonstrated the efficacy of the treatment. But he was counseled to persevere in keeping the pedometer busy and thereby save many a doctor's fee.

There are imaginative patients, most of whose troubles may be traced to the "thermometer habit." They are constantly taking their temperature, and their feelings are regulated by their discoveries. A splendid substitute is the "pedometer habit." Instead of continually fussing to keep his temperature below 100, for instance, the possessor of one of these clever contrivances can try how long it takes to send the pedometer above that figure. Lots of fun is to be obtained from ascertaining distances between various points by walking them. Incidentally the liver gets a good shaking up, the lungs receive the fresh air for the lack of which they have been starving, and the enthusiastic pedestrian feels a new joy of living. It is not convenient for all to play that most excellent of pastimes golf. But the pedometer game is available to most, and it renders interesting what is, after all, a rather monotonous form of exercise.—Pittsburgh Gazette-Times.

Lucky Thirteen.

The number 13, so universally declared as unlucky, is considered a lucky number by the pupils of the French military school of Saint Cyr. At the final examination the man who ranks as the thirteenth is believed to have a brilliant career before him. Marshal MacMahon as well as Boulanger were graduated thirteenth in their classes. General Lewal, who distinguished himself in the defence of Metz during the Franco-German war, also ranked thirteenth.

Locust Plagues.

History mentions many pestilences caused by the decaying bodies of dead locusts. On one occasion so many locusts perished off the coast of Africa that a bank four or five feet high and fifty miles long was formed on the shore by their dead bodies, and the stench of them reached inland for 150 miles. In another part of Africa early in the Christian era a plague of locusts is said to have caused the death of 800,000 persons, and in 591 nearly a third of Italy's population died of a plague.—New York American.

As direct representatives of 670 stockholders of the United States Rubber Company, John Muir & Co. have put before the Board of Directors of that company a petition asking for information regarding the condition of business of the United States Rubber Company. The petition represents the views of owners of more than 62,500 shares.

In his report on the earnings of the Atlantic, Gulf and West Indies Steamship lines for the six months ended June last, A. K. Nicol, treasurer of the company, shows an increase of $1,118,329 on the net income and a decrease of $452,319 in the operating expenses.

"It's no use talking, blood will tell," said John M. Shaw of the New York Stock Exchange. "I have a dachshund which is always seeking a place in the sun."

"Give free rein to fancy but not to reason if you want to make money in war stocks," advised a cynical member of the New York Stock Exchange. "The man who stops to think won't touch them."

The Great Northern Steamship Company announced its intention to sell its steamship the Minnesota, the largest in the transpacific trade, because the service has been unprofitable. The vessel is valued at $2,000,000.

Among the larger sellers of Tennessee Copper on the New York Stock Exchange were H. Content & Co., who disposed of 10,000 shares. Josephthal, Louchheim & Co. also were heavy sellers of the stock.

In its report of the revenues and expenses of the railroads of the United States for the fiscal year ended June 30 last the Bureau of Railway Statistics says the gross revenues from operation for the period were more than $123,000,000 below those of the preceding year and almost $200,000,000 under those of two years ago. Through economies, however, the net operating income showed an increase of almost $19,000,000, as compared with 1914.

Suits for coal royalties aggregating $328,906 were commenced against the Lackawanna Coal company in Scranton on behalf of the Winton Coal Company and the heirs of the Anderson, Deen and Livesy estates. The money is alleged to be owing for coal since 1871.

Application was made to the New York Stock Exchange to list $49,000,000 Pennsylvania Railroad additional 4 1-2 per cent. consolidated mortgage bonds, issue of 1915, due 1960.

As if in reply to the inquiries by New York bankers as to where the United States Treasury could obtain the $30,000,000 that Mr. McAdoo promised to deposit free of interest in the Southern banks for cotton loans the following came from Washington to the New York News Bureau. "Treasury officials said the gold coin in the Treasury vaults to-day aggregates nearly $65,000,000, while the gold certificates total approximately $45,000,000. These sums can be shipped out for deposit with banks at the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury. There is no difference, it was explained, between holding the money in the United States Treasury or depositing it in national or reserve banks."

Ought to be Heavier Odds.

New York.—London insurance underwriters are offering odds of 7 to 1 that there will be no war between the United States and Germany.

Third German Loan.

New York.—The third German war loan is expected to be offered at 90 and to bear 5 per cent. interest. Small investors will be permitted to pay subscriptions in easy instalments.

To Manufacturing Shrapnel.

New York.—Options have been obtained on six South Brooklyn machine factories, said to worth $1,000,000, and employing more than 3,000 men, and a corporation is being formed to utilize plants for turning out shrapnel and munitions.

Bethlehem Steel Strike.

Pittsburg.—The shrapnel department of the Remington Fuse Plant of the Bethlehem Steel Works has been tied up, between 500 and 600 men going on strike because they allege they were not granted the raise in wages the company announced would go into effect on Aug. 1.

Zinc Combination.

El Paso.—Suit has been filed in the Federal Court at El Paso against the American Metal Co. and several other companies by the San Roberto Mining Co. charging that the defendants have combined to control the price of zinc. Similar suit was filed in the State court asking $2,500,000 damages.

Refused Shell Order.

Minneapolis.—The American Hoist & Derrick Co., of St. Paul, has refused a $15,000,000 shell order from one of the allied powers. This is announced by Oliver Crosby, managing director. The company has a ten-acre plant and could make the material wanted by the addition of some equipment.

"The financial situation and uncertainty as to continuance of the war prompted the refusal to enter the order," said Mr. Crosby.

ALLIES' ARTILLERY IS DOING GREAT WORK ON WESTERN FRONT

PARIS, Aug. 29. The artillery has been the chief mode of warfare on the western front. The most activity has been displayed here by the forces of the allies, which have been shelling virtually the entire German line. In addition the allies have been using their aircraft in large squadrons to bombard German barracks and positions.

It is being vaguely hinted here that mid-October has been chosen as the time for the long postponed "big push" of the allies, but the point at which an attack is to take place is not being mentioned. The general public does not expect a strong offensive movement as yet, but in some circles there would be no surprise should Gen. Joffre, the French Commander-in-Chief, find it possible to attempt some kind of a forward movement before mid-October.

The French launched violent artillery attacks upon the German trenches in Flanders and the Arras region, and silenced German batteries at four points in the Argonne. From the admissions of the German official report it is apparent that the French were successful in an attack with grenades near Linopkopf, in the Vosges.

Fierce hand-to-hand fighting for the possession of excavations left by mine explosions occurred at Marie Therese and west of the forest of Malmourt. The French troops, having first gained a footing in these explanes were put to flight, one of them in spite of the numerous German attacks.

That there is little danger of any more German aircraft dropping bombs on Paris, was evidenced to-day, when six German military aeroplanes were put to flight, one of them being destroyed, on their way to attack the city.

The German aeroplanes, crossed the French lines in two squads of three each near Soissons and Compiegne at a great height, flying rapidly in a south-westerly direction toward Paris. At a point north of the city, near Enghien, they sighted a French aerial flotilla, which was waiting for them. Without giving battle they all wheeled about, starting for the German lines.

A lively pursuit ensued, in which the French aircraft caught up with the hindermost German aeroplane and opened fire with their machine guns. The German air-ship was hit many times and literally riddled with bullets. It caught fire and fell, a mass of flames, in a forest near Scubs. The burned bodies of two German aviators were found later amongst the debi.

The other five German aeroplanes managed to escape, but dropped bombs on Montmorency and other towns, including Compeigne, where two male nurses and a child were killed. The anti-aircraft guns at several places opened fire on the aeroplanes, but they ascended to a great height and disappeared in the haze.

The official announcement of the aeroplane battle says:

"Yesterday morning towards 10 o'clock three German aeroplanes sallied forth from the region of Soissons and three from the region of Compiegne heading for Paris. They were unable to reach their goal and only dropped a few bombs on Nogent-sur-Marne, Montmorency, Montlignon, Ricecourt and Compeigne. The only victims they made were at Compeigne, in which city two male nurses and a child were killed. The hostile aeroplanes promptly detected were shelled at various points, and chased by our airmen. The commander of one of the aerial squadrons chased one of the aeroplanes at a height of nearly 11,000 feet and brought it down to the north of Senlis. The pilot and his machine were found incinerated."

WHAT HE WANTED.

An evangelist, at the close of a meeting held in the village of L. . . invited those who had any special desire to see him to walk behind. A boy minus his cap being the only one to avail himself of the invitation, the evangelist clapped him on the head and remarked: "Well, my little man, have I really been the means of you finding the faith?" "A dinna ken," said the boy, "but A wush ye wud help me tae fin ma bonnet. A hae lost it in the hall!"

Public Penance.

A quaint old law for the punishment of petty offenders exists to this day in Middelburg, the Netherlands, and anything resembling it is not known to exist elsewhere. Owing to dampness weeds quickly spring up in the streets between the paving stones, and these, under the eye of a none too severe guard, the offenders are put to work with a large hoe shaped knife, cleaning away the . . . blades of green. Each is provided with a wooden stool; hence it may be inferred that they are not hard driven. Here men and women alike who have been convicted work in this manner.

Joy of Anticipation.

The youngest son of a Baltimore family was recently not a little distressed at dessert to discover that there was ice cream for dinner.

"Oh, papa," exclaimed the youngster reproachfully, who didn't they tell me this morning that we were going to have ice cream?"

"What difference would that have made?"

"Lots," sighed the child. "I could have expected it all day."—Exchange.

A Roland For an Oliver.

Manager I say—Can't get anything like a real doctor to do this joy town to attend a sick actor. Village Inhabitant—Sure. Just go to the local cemetery. You'll find a mole there. Who's all right at curing brain.—Baltimore American.

A RECRUITING SERMON BY REV. W. T. HERRIDGE

Well Known Divine Makes a Stirring Appeal For a Deeper Sense of National Duty—Recognizes That This is Our War—Full Force of The British Empire Felt.

The following sermon by Honry, Lieut.-Col. Rev. Dr W. T. Herridge, was published by request of the Honourable the Minister of Militia and Defence:

"He that hath no sword, let him sell his garment and buy one." Luke xxii. 36.

These words sound strange from the lips of Jesus Christ, and we must be careful not to misunderstand them. Throughout His whole career on earth He had taught his disciples that their triumph was not to be won by violence, but by character. Cruel war is incompatible with the ideals of the Prince of Peace, and when His ideals are accepted and put into practice, nation will learn war no more.

At the same time, even Christ shows the fighting spirit sometimes, and will not accept peace at any price. While He refuses to embark on mere selfish quarrels, and visits with care the humblest and most needy souls, His indignation blazes forth against greed and hypocrisy, and making a lash for the backs of the desecrators of His Temple, He drives them out. He is angry at the proper time because He is merciful; because His supreme passion, at whatever cost, is to sweep earth clean of the evil which defile it.

Christianity and the War.

The Christian religion is not an effeminate sentimental think which has lost the capacity for virile discipline. Though it destroys mean and petty hatreds, it creates nobler ones. It does not stab in the dark, or murder the innocent; but crooked, devilish ways it will resist even unto death. A false intolerance is exchanged for a true intolerance an irreconcilable hostility to every form of imposture, a vindictive face against tyrants and oppressors. A firm resolve that by the help of God all that is vile shall be utterly overthrown.

And therefore while no true disciple of Jesus Christ will rush into war, he may have war thrust upon him against his will unless he is prepared to plead for the withdrawal of Christian forces from the making of human history.

We have many faults to confess before God. But the crime of blood guiltiness does not lie at our door. Britain sought by every possible means to prevent strife, and only drew the sword when she could not do otherwise. We have not been trained to accept brutal outrage and unprovoked terrorism with calm indifference. Some of the scenes which are part of this war have been really calculated that will ensure an immortal execration. Some of the methods it has used or had would be repudiated by the best thought of paganism as too much for human beings. The spirit which our foes have precipitated because they believed the best was up to a spirit which, whatever God's ways would do, is not in accordance with God's character or God's purpose in its place the assumption of final supremacy.

National Duty.

It will be seen we can't [illegible] we [illegible] a Holy War [illegible] as well as to fanned to [illegible] a war in which we can humbly but sincerely invoke the help of God, a war to defend [illegible] and mankind against [illegible] purpose than Christian principles and the Christian spirit in the world.

For this struggle is [illegible] were [illegible] the light [illegible] [illegible] of [illegible] and [illegible] duty with regard to it. For [illegible] spirit of the new that has created [illegible] we must [illegible] [illegible] we [illegible] awake to [illegible] [illegible] of the situation and to [illegible] [illegible] in a clear and [illegible] way. Happily we have [illegible] from the [illegible] [illegible] England has experienced. They have created no panic there. But it would [illegible] disturb our equanimity to have Zeppelins dropping bombs over Paris [illegible]

For [illegible] British Navy should be reminded of the fact that, but for its existence, our home waters long ago, would have been menaced by hostile battleships, and our seaports subjected to fierce bombardment. When we think of the suffering of brave little Belgium, and read the gruesome tales of pillage and rapine, we have reason to thank God that the worst horrors of war have not visited us at all.

Need for More Men.

Yet this fortunate escape may perhaps make us more slow to recognize that this is our war; and even though we do not hear the actual clash of arms, the issue of it must needs be of far reaching consequence to every one of us. We have given some proof of the belief that our privileges as British subjects cannot be separated from grave responsibilities, and thousands of Canadians are now across the sea, or making ready to go. But I fear that many of our youth have not yet seriously considered the question whether they cannot do something, directly or indirectly, to strengthen our national resources in this epoch making hour. Why should we not have at least a quarter of a million men in training for such emergencies as the future may unfold, not all of them necessarily in the firing line, but fitted to serve in some useful way wherever duty calls them? We should then have barely done in proportion, what the Motherland has done already. And in view of the splendid valour which will make Ypres, St. Eloi and Langemarch immortal names in our history, I am persuaded that, apart from the martial re-enforcement which would thus be brought to our cause, such an awakening of Canadian manhood, such an impressive object-lesson in the unity of the British Empire would be bound to have its effect in shortening the duration of the war.

If we hope for a peace that shall endure, and that shall usher in the dawn of a new and brighter day, we must not shrink from the sacrifice which the stern needs of the time demand from us. No life, surely, can be just the same during this war as it was before it. We are forced to postpone mere personal concerns in the face of public duty, and to lift our eyes to the wider horizons which now thunder riven, are presented to our view. It is said, no doubt, to see our sons going across the sea, and to know that in all likelihood, some will not return. But it would be far sadder to risk the loss, or even the transient interruption of the blessings which we have come to regard as our indefeasible birthright; it would be far sadder if one by one, the lights of liberty went out around the world.

A Struggle for Liberty.

No good purpose can be served by depreciating our enemies. I daresay that many Germans at heart, oppose the naval armament which caused this storm, and sigh for the old days when "Kultur" was culture, and not its monstrous travesty. But while we have something better to do than indulge in wholesale abuse, or gratuitous suspicions, the fact remains that, so far as we are aware, the German nation is practically a unit in striking the present blow. It has been long accumulated and for years the most systematic and skilful preparations have been made for it. We may not [illegible] just now to take less [illegible] Germany for the madness [illegible] and false am[illegible] at least called forth [illegible] has stirred her cul[illegible] and women to contribute [illegible] to the common task, and has inspired a reckless disregard [illegible] of what we believe [illegible] commands [illegible] people, shall we, who believe that our cause is a just one be content in strenuous effort to make the full force of the British Empire felt in such stern reality to Kaiserism that its abhorrent [illegible] shall affright the earth no more?

Canadians at the Front.

Obviously, of course, we cannot all go to the war. Some of us are too old for active service. Some are physically disqualified. Some, in the long run, will be able to do as much for their country by the faithful discharge of duties at home. The eagerness of many of our youth to take part in this struggle is a credit to Canada.

I sympathize with those who, while burning to join their comrades, have not been deemed fit for the strain, and with those of like mind who, for various good reasons, must stay where they are. Yet there are others throughout this big land by whom, whether through dullness or indifference, the call of patriotism has been so far disregarded, and private interest held of greater moment than the public weal.

Now the sooner this easy-going selfish spirit is driven out, the better for us all. Whether we buy a sword or not by selling our garment, it will be a poor boast that we have kept our garment, even if we are able to keep it, when it becomes the badge of degradation. By all means let our young lads play their games and make their bodies strong and clean. But the professional sports, where a few are paid to take exercise, while the rest look on; the race-track courses, the moving picture shows and such like things attract too many of our full-grown men who might well ask themselves just now whether their time could not be spent in a more useful way. Perhaps we might even dispense for a while the elaborate sporting columns of our newspapers. They do not fit in very well with the cablegrams from across the sea.

Awful Seriousness of the War.

We have serious tasks confronting us as a people; and if we fail to discern their importance, and to try, as best we can, to discharge them, any attempt at lighter fun is nothing but a hideous and disgraceful mockery.

Under certain circumstances, "safety first" is an excellent motto. It is pure foolishness for any one to run risks which can be of no benefit either to himself or others; and every corporation which looks for public patronage is bound to show proper regard for the welfare of all those who have any dealings with it. But, in great crises "safety first" would be the watchword of a coward.

The quality of life on this earth ought to mean more than the mere length of it.

Many things come before personal safety;
Honour comes before it;
Freedom comes before it;
Righteousness comes before it.

Safety is the last consideration when the dearest treasures of the soul are placed in peril; and, however fierce the attack upon them no one worthy to be called a man would refuse to guard such an inheritance even unto death.

Unity the Watchword.

I have no doubt as to the final issue of this strife. It cannot be that military despotism shall yet prove victorious, and an outrage be fastened upon the conscience of the world. Fervent supplication will rise to God that such a calamity may never be, and hope, the last gift that remains to mortals when others have flown away, will turn from an outlook so gloomy and forlorn. But it will not be enough simply to wish for triumph, or to pray for triumph, we must also work for it. We must refuse the blandishments of ease and sloth, and accept the opportunity for heroic self-sacrifice.

We must silence all minor discords amongst us in one united chorus whose inspiring refrain shall ring from shore to shore. We must concentrate our best thought and our noblest effort upon the herculean labour which it is our privilege to share, and must not falter till we have fought out and won the battle for liberty, not our liberty alone, but the liberty of all mankind.

God bless our boys who have gone or who may yet go across the sea. We mourn for those who have fallen, and pray that a Divine comfort may rest upon the homes which they shall see no more. Yet we cannot feel that they have given their lives in vain. Their dauntless courage will never be forgotten, nor their splendid obedience as soldiers of the King. The voice of their blood cries from the ground in piercing tones; and it would be strange indeed if even the most careless and self-centred youth amongst use did not feel in his breast the thrill of a new patriotism, and the irresistible pressure of a new sense of duty waking the manhood in him to serve, to suffer, aye, even to die for God and his native land.

A Fight for Ideals.

For we need more men in training to take some part in this great war; and if they offer themselves, we must see that no removable hindrances bar the way. We need men who discern the signs of the times, and who will prove all the more efficient, whether in counsel or in fight, because they are men of clean hands and pure hearts. This war is no mere vulgar brawl to be settled in a day. It is a struggle between opposing ideals of life, and a long hard road may ye have to be travelled before the happy end is gained. We are fighting for the rights of others, not less than for our own. We are fighting for those intangible possessions which are the crowning glory of mankind, and the loss of which cover earth as with a funeral pall, and wrap it in eternal gloom. We are fighting for the overthrow of impious pride and cruel oppression, and for the final triumph of truth and righteousness.

Peace, and Freedom from Militarism.

I see in imagination a stalwart host of young Canadians marching as to war. The cause they espouse should nerve their arm and ennoble their character. They will be "compassed about with a great cloud of witnesses" who watch their valorous deeds and anticipate their final victory. The heroes of past days will seem to share their high endeavour, and from myriads on earth the voice of supplant prayer will mingle in its ascent to God with the shouts of conflict and the shock of arms. If, when peace has come again, they return to the land they have left behind, they will be greeted with the welcome which befits those who have done their duty, and if they are called upon to lay the sacrifice of their lives on the altar of freedom, their names will be enrolled in the ranks of the immortals, and their memory cherished by generations yet unborn.

FALL INTO THISTLE BUSH PROVES FATAL

Spicule Lodges in Man's Arm Causing Fatal Fester

ALLENTOWN, Pa., Aug. 30. Howard Stephens, aged 34, a cement worker, of Fogelsville, died at the Allentown hospital of gangrene. A week ago, while repairing a fence, he fell and landed in a thistle bush. One of the spicules lodged in his left arm and caused a festering that rapidly proved fatal.

While Stephens was in a dying condition his son, Howard, was brought to the institution with a badly injured foot, due to stepping on glass while barefooted. The boy, who was operated on, is in a danger ous condition and the development of gangrene is feared in his case. Mr. stephens leaves a wife and four children.

AMERICAN PASTOR ADDRESSES CONGREGATION OF KNOX CHURCH

Dr. Lawrence of Binghampton Has no Hesitation in Proclaiming His Sympathy for The Allies—Locates The Origin of The War in Berlin—The Inevitable Penalty of a Godless Civilization

"In the meantime Germany has got to be whipped into submission. Forty members have gone out of Our Church to join the colours, fourteen of whom belonged to the Y.M.C.A. Bible Class. Their service is now [illegible] by fourteen flags that surround the banner representing the class. Is there another young man in this Church who will add another flag to the number by enlisting? It is the way of the Cross."

With this stirring appeal Rev. Dr. Lawrence of Binghampton, New York, concluded an inspiring address which was delivered last evening to the congregation of Knox Presbyterian Church. The fact that Dr. Lawrence is a citizen of the United States added interest to his discourse, which were based on the European conflagration. In his opening remarks the speaker referred to a review of a book entitled 'World Empire or Downfall,' written by Bernhardi, the now famous German militarist, and published some time before the war. The writer sought to show that Germany had arrived at the apex of civilization and must eventually seek to extend her boundaries at any cost. Some pretext would be found for precipitating war on her neighbours. France would be crushed in the first rush and then Germany would turn her attention to Russia, who would be slow to mobilize. Dr. Lawrence was amazed when he read the review. He refused to believe that such a thing could be possible. Even while on a visit to England, when the disturbing question of Germany versus England, frequently came up, the speaker refused to believe that a world war was possible. It was while he was spending a vacation at the Kawartha Lakes that the first brush was accounted for, only to be followed by a formal declaration of war.

The Bryce Report.

Dr. Lawrence urged his hearers to secure a copy of the Bryce report, which the Examiner published in full if they would peruse the march of the vandal throughout Belgium where nothing was sacred. Treaties were violated while the world believed Germany [illegible] in gluttony. The [illegible] of [illegible] [illegible] the centre of the [illegible] Turk or a Negro, [illegible] covering [illegible] Berlin, said the speaker, who [illegible] that the greatest disaster [illegible] ever happened to Germany, was [illegible] victories over France some forty years ago. Since that it has been dominated by vicious ideals.

The man who is responsible for the war is in hell, where he deserves to be. Treitschke was the man who laid the foundation for world domination by brute force. His creed was blessed by the war makers and [illegible] who [illegible] the [illegible] fountain of German [illegible] has been poisoned by such teachings.

The Inevitable Penalty.

This war, continued Dr. Lawrence, teaches the inevitable penalty of a godless civilization. In Germany, hundreds of thousands have drifted away from the church, while the clergymen are looked upon as civil servants and very little more. They have torn the Bible to shreds and left nothing but the cover. This war has taught us the absolute folly and futility of armed peace. Disarmament must be the way out of the present [illegible] out by all the nations of the world.

"We have tried everything," said the speaker, in conclusion, "and we must ultimately come back to the teachings of Christ. The creed of Christ stands triumphant over the blood-stained battlefields of Europe. His teachings remain unshaken."

In urging the young men to enlist, Dr. Lawrence said he had two sons, both of whom were naturalized American subjects. If either one of them wanted to enlist he would not dare to oppose them.

ANALYSIS OF A PRETTY GIRL

A pretty girl is a combination of curves, hair, skin, and colour. She possesses these attributes in common with homely girls, but in such proportions that, in her case, the result is quite different.

A pretty girl is an exception to the rule, because if the majority of girls were pretty they would be so common that we should get used to them.

It is even conceivable that if pretty girls were in the majority then we might come to believe that under these circumstances the girls who are now ordinary would then be considered pretty.

Every pretty girl has many admirers, which is only natural, but which is placed in the usual manner on her shoulders, and let any man try it on each side. She also has eyes, cheeks, lips, and ears. But because of the pretty girl, be sure the [illegible] appurtenances are generally referred to as the pearly gates of [illegible] lips, brow and pink cheeks. Yet each one of them is as [illegible] ing, and color [illegible] precisely similar to the one owned by a homely girl, who, [illegible] however, never referred to in [illegible] matter of fact [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

DISTINCTIVE STYLES IN FALL SUITS FOR FEMININE APPROVAL

IN all our experience we have never seen the like of our present showing of Suit Styles. Beauty, charm and adaptability are embodied in every model. Each garment was selected with utmost care—each is an exclusive interpretation of the present vogue.

Close fitting and Russian blouse effects, finger tip lengths, set-in sleeves, notch and military collars are strong features of the coats. The skirts feature the normal waist line; both flare and pleated types are shown extensively. Serges, Gabardines, Whipcords, Broadcloths and Tweeds are the most popular fabrics, whilst in colors, Black, Navy, Baltic Green, Soldat and Marine Blues, London Smoke Grey and African Brown predominate.

Come and take a first glimpse of this attractive showing. You will find a distinctive style to suit your individual taste at the price you wish to pay. In view of the exceptional advance in prices of all wool fabrics, the values prevailing are nothing short of astounding.

AUSTRIAN AVIATION BASE IS DESTROYED

ROME, Aug. 29—Italian aviators have completely wrecked the Austrian aviation base at Divassa, east of Trieste, according to the official statement of the War Office. The hangars and hell were bombarded first on Friday and yesterday the work was completed. All of the Italian aeronauts returned safely.

The military authorities have ordered compulsory anti-cholera vaccination in both the army and navy. A good many Austrian soldiers who had been moved from the Galician front to the Italian front have recently been made prisoners and there are fears that they might bring the disease with them.

Gen. Rostagno Wounded.

It is reported that Gen. Rostagno has been seriously wounded while leading a successful attack against Austrian positions.

Yesterday Pope Benedict visited the convent the wounded soldiers in the Santa Maria Hospital opposite the Vatican. The Pope was visibly moved as he walked among the many beds, stopping to speak to some of the men. He took notes and distributed money. As he had about completed his rounds a wounded soldier priest recognized him and called out "Viva Pope! Viva Italy!" This was the signal for a great ovation from the other soldiers. Finally the Pope withdrew, giving the Papal blessing.

The Italian front has been divided by Gen. Cadorna, the Commander-in-Chief, into two wide sections, each conducting a vast enveloping movement, Trieste the objective in one case and Trent in the other.

The action is developing in each theatre in accordance with the predetermined plans. Reports from the front state that constant progress is being made, although movements are slow. Gen. Cadorna has given instructions that as little damage as possible be inflicted on the towns in the paths of the Italian armies.

WILL PUNISH REFRACTORY BELGIUM

BRUSSELS, via London, Aug. 30—General Von Bissing, Military Governor of Belgium, has issued an order providing for the punishment of every person, "who, without adequate reason, refuses to undertake or carry on work of public interest which is demanded by the German authorities and which is suited to his calling."

Punishment also is threatened to any person who hinders work ordered by the Germans or induces other persons to decline to work.

2ND BATTALION WAS ENFILADED BY GERMAN MACHINE GUNS WAS IMPOSSIBLE TO ADVANCE

Captain R. D. Ponton of Belleville, Who Has Just Returned from The Front, Furnishes Graphic Description of The Fight in Which a Number of Peterboro Men Were Lost—Every Officer Was Cut Down in The Second Battalion—Men Never Flinched

Captain R. D. Ponton is back in Belleville, having been invalided home, suffering from gas poisoning, water on the knee, and nervous breakdown. Captain Ponton's leg still bothers him and he looks rather white and thin. The effects of the gas have not yet worn off. He was with the Second Battalion, First Division, and was through the battle of St. Julien and the battle of the Orchard.

"On April 10, General Alderson inspected us," said Captain Ponton, "and told us we were under General Smith Dorrien. On April 12, General Smith Dorrien, himself, inspected us. Col. Watson was informed that the second battalion had been chosen to go with the British brigade to Hill 60.

"On April 18, we left for Poperinge, which was about two and a half miles behind the line west of Ypres.

The attack on Hill 60 having been postponed, we were not to join the British brigade until noon of April 22 and by the morning of that day we had been moved up further to Vlamertinghe. At 2 o'clock in the afternoon, when we were getting ready to move to Hill 60 we got word of the attack on the French Colonials, the Algerians, and were at once called out to give relief.

Overcome by Fumes.

"On April 22, the Battalion fell in at 6 o'clock in the afternoon, and immediately moved off to the Yser Canal. Quite a number of Canadians were overcome by the gas fumes as they reached us during our march. There was one pontoon bridge left the others having been blown up and the battalion got across with a few casualties. Fleeing Frenchmen were coming down one side of the road while we were going up the other. After crossing the canal we joined up with the 16th Canadian Battalion and ascertained where the advance line of the Germans was."

"We proceeded up the road towards St. Julien, and at 11 p.m. we opened into attack formation for charge. The 30 minutes waiting for the order to charge, seemed like hours. As soon as the order to charge was given the line advanced, cheering.

"It was a very impressive sight for at this time the moon shone out and enabled us to see our enemy. It seemed the work of Providence for the moon to come out just at that minute. Never were bayonets fixed quicker—not a man was lacking. The 16th Battalion ran into the German first line in the centre, and we (the 2nd battalion) got them on the left, and every man had an opportunity to carry out what he knew of bayonet fighting.

Major Bennett's Death

"The Germans, however, used great resistance, and did not hesitate long to retire through the wood where the artillery guns had been left by the British division. The casualties in the German ranks were extremely heavy. Unfortunately No. 1 company, under the late Major Bennett of Peterboro, was enfiladed by German machine guns to the north of the wood.

"Every officer was cut down, and only a few men were left to tell the terrible tale. It was impossible for us to advance any further, and we only had twenty-five minutes before daylight to dig ourselves in. And we had to collect in with the troops on our left. While this work was going on the artillery and machine gun fire was tremendous, and many casualties occurred in our ranks.

"When daylight came we were below the level of the ground. Our dispositions were completed and we were ready in case the Germans should attack. Daylight revealed a ghastly sight. The field in front and behind, for hundreds of yards, was strewn with Germans and Canadians.

"At 7 a.m. the Germans attacked in mass, to the right of the woods, but we repulsed that and three more attacks during the day. There was one brigade in this attack. Their casualties would be easily six to our one. They came eight abreast, and it was the easiest way imaginable. In the whole fight there were 85,000 against 12,000, which made it develop into a general engagement. Their artillery bombarded us during the day from all angles. We were back to back with the British division. They had pushed one way and we had pushed the other. The gas of the night before was in the air, and during the day the Germans gave the Canadians another taste of it."

Water Supply Gone.

"Through these gruelling moments the men stuck to it and would not budge. The Germans soon found out that they were up against the real thing, for each time they charged we could see they were half hearted. Sometimes they would come out 12 or 15 yards and then retire—they could not stand it.

"Messages of encouragement from the brigade and battalion headquarters were passed along the line, which assisted greatly in keeping up the spirits of the men. Every hour great gaps were made in our ranks. But this was no time for mourning. It was necessary to stick until reinforcements arrived.

"Our emergency rations had all been consumed, and even the emergency rations off the casualties, and the water supply was all gone. Many wounded remained out all day between the two lines. Some of the lines were only fifty yards apart, and the wounded could only be brought in at night.

"Just before darkness fell the Germans made another attack, but we stopped it in the mud. Although the rifle fire quieted down the artillery kept it up all night. We were getting better artillery support from our guns this time. At midnight, biscuits, water and ammunition were brought to us by transports who deserve the greatest possible praise. They drove right up to our lines.

An Early Attack.

"Lack of sleep was beginning to tell on many of the men who were worn out, but no grumbling was heard on the whole line. Many officers had been killed during the day, and our only hope of surviving was that reinforcements would come before daylight. We had no sleep for 48 hours. During the night our trenches were made more perfect, and many wounded were taken away to the dressing station. The dead could not be carried as other and more important work had to be done.

"Saturday morning brought an early attack from the Germans, but with our new supply of ammunition we mowed them back with heavy loss. All the morning long we made them keep their head down. We kept firing away until the stocks of our rifles were burning. The spirit of the men with all their hardships, was wonderful. Each of them remembered General Alderson's message, 'Canadians Never Budge.'

"At 11 a.m. we heard that the battalion on our right was retiring through St. Julien to a new line, about 500 yards to the south of the village built by engineers under heavy artillery firing.

Major Bolster Killed.

"This left our position very dangerous. At last, with our right and left exposed, we received orders — at three o'clock in the afternoon—to retire. Such a sight will never be forgotten by those who have survived. We knew we could have held this position until darkness, and we also realized that in retiring our losses would be deplorable. The — division had come to reinforce us, and were going to attack to protect our retirement. It was necessary to leave many in the trenches, to be cared for by the Germans, and the dead officers and men remained unburied.

"The retirement was an orderly one but how any of the battalion escaped is a miracle. The Germans came out of their trenches in a horde. Their machine guns seemed to play on every foot of ground, and the artillery simply rolled shell all around. Many of the poor fellows were cut down and had to be left behind.

"Col. Watson's gallantry, in remaining in that exposed position until every man had retired, will never be forgotten. It seemed ages in gaining a new trench. Everyone was simply excited. The new line was made by the Argyle and Sutherland Highlanders and the Royal Warwicks, and they immediately went into the attack to meet the Germans.

"Our men were mixed up with other regiments in the new line, and it was impossible to find what officers or men had escaped the terrible ordeal. I was in No. 4 Company under Major Bolster, of Cobourg, who was killed on Friday morning. We were able now to get our first five minutes' breathing spell.

Those Who Escaped.

"No one will forget the greetings of one man to another as we struggled into the support trench. The enquiries about the missing ones, and the remarks of sympathy for those who had given their lives will always be remembered.

"On Saturday night we were subjected to heavy artillery fire, but could not retaliate, being in the support trench. The remaining days were full of excitement in learning that Col. Watson, Capt. O'Flynn, Captain Ackerman and Capt. Richardson had survived. It was necessary the next three days to support the French, who were waiting for reinforcements from Alsace and Lorraine. During these days we did not suffer any casualties, although the exposure was beginning to tell upon everybody. We were shelled heavily all along the Yser Canal, but the men did splendid work in protecting the pontoon erected by the engineers."

A Boon For Traffic Policemen

Aurora, Ill., Runs Branch Steam Pipes to Corners for Protection Next Winter

CHICAGO, Aug. 30—Just to be sure that all the policemen at the street corners in Aurora will have warm feet next winter the city has run branch steam pipes from its main to small manhole covers, which are in the nature of steam radiators, at the street corners.

All an Aurora copper has to do, if he feels his feet getting cold will be to stand on one of these covers until he feels the grateful warmth penetrating his pedal extremities and ascending his spinal column.

The metal plate set into the street on a level with the pavement, under the steam pressure against its underside, will be hot at all hours of the day or night, and there will be no excuse for an Aurora policeman getting cold feet.

Of course, in Chicago, it is different. Just think of the blizzard the Chicago policemen are out in at this minute. And it is apt to get several degrees colder. Chief Healey says, before he gets the blood of the force circulating with a speed sufficient to keep the men warm and on the move.

MAJOR DUVAL DEAD.

Canadian Officer Passed Away From His Wounds.

ST. JOHN, N.B., Aug. 28—A cable to relatives here announces the death of Major J. L. Duval, of St. John, at a London hospital. Dr. Duval was seriously wounded at Ypres, but was recovering when he suffered a relapse.

Major Duval was a native of St. Johns, P.Q., where his mother is still living, though seriously ill.

Two sisters also reside there. His wife was a Miss Maude B. Byrd of Montreal. He was a McGill graduate.

THE RELATIONSHIPS OF EUROPEAN ROYALTY

George V of England, William II of Germany and The Czarina of Russia are all Grandchildren of Victoria

"King George of England and Kaiser William of Germany are first cousins, and King George and the Czar Nicholas of Russia are also first cousins, the King's mother, Dowager Queen Alexandra, and the Czar's mother, Dowager Empress Dagmar, being sisters.

"George V. of England, William II. of Germany and the Czarina of Russia are all grandchildren of Victoria. So are the Kaiser's brother, Prince Henry of Prussia, the Duke of Saxe-Coburg, the Grand Duke of Hesse, Prince Albert of Schleswig-Holstein, and the three Princes of the House of Battenburg, all of whom are officers in the German army. On the English side is another of Victoria's grandchildren, Prince Arthur of Connaught. Kaiser William of Germany and the Czarina of Russia are also first cousins, the Kaiser's mother and the Czarina's mother being sisters. Thus the Kaiser and the Czar are first cousins by marriage.

King George V. is first cousin not only to Kaiser William, the Czar and the Czarina of Russia, King Haakon of Norway, but also to Victoria of Spain, brother of Maud of Norway and nephew of King Constantine of Greece.

"Frederick VIII. of Denmark is a brother of the Dowager Queen Alexandra and the Dowager Empress Dagmar, and is therefore uncle to both King George and Czar Nicholas.

"Kaiser William is not only first cousin to King George, but is a brother-in-law of Queen Sophia of Greece and a nephew of the Duke of Connaught.

"The Czar is related to King George, Kaiser William and King Haakon, but brother-in-law to the Grand Duke of Hesse and cousin by marriage to Franz Josef of Austria. King Nicholas of Montenegro, Queen Helene of Italy and first cousin to Crown Princess Cecilie of Germany. King Haakon of Norway and King Constantine of Greece are uncles of the Czar and nephews of the King of Sweden and are related to the German Kaiser in many and various ways by blood and marriage.

"King Albert of Belgium is related by blood to Emperor Franz Josef and King Alfonso of Spain and his Queen, a Bavarian Princess, is related by blood and marriage to all the ruling families of Europe.

"It would require more than the services of the provincial Philadelphia lawyer to trace out all the relationships of the noble families of the monarchies of Europe."

MARRIED YOUNG.

An amusing story was told some time ago in one of the Paris courts of justice. A vain, haughty woman was called as a witness, when the magistrate inquired her age. "In my five-and-August," promptly replied the lady. The next witness was a young man who at once acknowledged that that he was 23 years of age. "Are you related to the last witness?" queried the magistrate. "Yes, I am her son," he replied. "Ah!" mused the magistrate, "your mother must have married very young."

A Lady Bountiful Thought Home Boy Was Ill-Treated

But Police Court Evidence Brought Out Conditions of Guardian's Treatment That Failed to Substantiate The Charge.

APPEARANCES DECEIVING

Under the informal scope of to-day's police court a case against Frederick Curtis, a market gardener living in North Monaghan, of cruelty and failing to provide for his Barnardo Home ward, George Burson was stripped of practically every suggestion of abuse and illusage and actually became a vindication of Mr Curtis' kindly treatment of the lad.

George is a little fourteen-year-old Birmingham boy. His father, a Boer War veteran, is dead, and the mother was left with seven children; two of her sons are now at the front.

Mr Curtis apparently knew the family in the Old Country and obtained charge of him about five months ago. In telling his story to Magistrate Dumble the lad said he had asked Mr. Curtis to be allowed sell some vegetables, and for a time he went around with two baskets. Mr. Curtis bought him a waggon in order to lighten his burden.

The charge of ill-treatment was laid by Chief Thompson on the strength of the complaints of several ladies at whose homes the Burson boy had called with his green goods. One of them, called as a witness, said the boy was drawing a waggon that appeared to be too heavily loaded, his pants needed patching, his stockings were tied up with a piece of hemp, and he said he had to have the vegetables sold before returning home.

Mr. Jos. Wearing, appearing for the defendant, stated that he could recall the days when he himself suspended his stocking with hempen twine. To Mr. Wearing the boy stated that he liked to go to Mr. and Mrs. Curtis and would be glad to return to them. He always had plenty to eat, and took his meals with the family. He shared the family's fare, although he took lard instead of butter at times, because he preferred the lard.

Altogether the boy's recital of his treatment in the Curtis home revealed the fact that he was treated with kindness and consideration. In fact it was stated that Mr. Curtis wished to treat the boy practically as an equal with his children. The lad said he received two whippings, but they were little more than taps. On one occasion he was given the touch of a strap for coming home at 1 o'clock instead of at noon. George admitted that Mr. Curtis had repeatedly told him to come home promptly. The other "whipping" was a "cuff" on the head, in connection with a horse getting into a field of oats. On one occasion the boy kept 15 cents out of his money for a mouthorgan.

Magistrate Dumble stated that there had been no case of ill-treatment made out against Mr. Curtis. The boy was well fed, and had every appearance of being kindly treated. He was learning a trade in gardening and the salesmanship of his goods.

In short the case petered out and little George Burson left with Mr Curtis as confident and naturally as if he were a member of the family.

His Worship and Mr. Wearing commended the solicitude of the ladies who had interested themselves in the boy, but it was pointed out that he was receiving all that the Curtis home had to offer and would be sent to school.

New Attraction At Ottawa Fair

The Ottawa Exhibition will open to the public on September 13th, with the largest industrial display in its history. Sir Robert Borden has been invited to officiate at the formal opening ceremonies. It may be his first public function after his return from England.

A recent addition to the novelties to be seen at the Ottawa Fair is a representation of war trenches and artillery as employed at the European battle front. Bomb-shelters, gun pits, trenches and parapets are being made by soldiers of the 77th Regiment for the purpose of demonstrating to Exhibition visitors the conditions under which the Canadian soldiers are fighting in Flanders.

Coloured baseball players, the famous Red Sox of Cuba, are coming on the last three days of the Ottawa Exhibition to play against the Ottawa Canadian League team in the baseball series. The champions of New York State League will be the opponents of the Ottawas during the first half of the week. Additional interest will be created in W. S. Luckey's daily aeroplane performances by cross-country flights to Ottawa Valley towns.

Ten bands have been engaged for the musical programme of the Central Canadian Exhibition, being: 41st Regt. Band, Brockville; 53rd Regt. Band, Sherbrooke; 70th Regt. Band, Hull; Bands from Gananoque, Smith's Falls, Perth, Renfrew, North Gower; Highland Pipe and Drum Band and St. Andrew's Kiltie Band of Ottawa. A specially accomplished leader has been engaged in New York to conduct the music for "The Birth of a Nation," the half million dollar moving picture, to be presented at the Night Shows.

September 3rd is the last day to make entries for the Ottawa Exhibition. Persons intending to exhibit are urged to act as promptly as possible.

MANY SUPPLIES SENT BY LOCAL RED CROSS

A meeting of the special committee of the Red Cross Society re jam shower was held in the rooms on Simcoe Street on Friday with representatives from the different churches of town. A plan was drawn up for the week of the shower, which will begin on Monday, September 20th.

A large consignment of hospital supplies, etc., was packed and shipped to headquarters this week, comprising the following: 4 doz. towels, 10 doz. pillow cases, 16 doz. property bags, 19 ring pillows, 22 night shirts, 1,000 mouth wipes, 66 rape sponges, 12 fomentation cloths, 4 knitted scarves, 1 box assorted flannelette bandages, 1 roll old cotton, 3,276 surgical dressings, 1,100 rolled bandages, 1,200 sponges, 1,893 pads, 6 in. x 7 in., 433 pads, 9 in. x 12 in., 155 pads, 12 in. x 16 in., 460 compresses, 478 gauze bandages, 3 doz. first aid bandages, 8 flannelette night shirts, 3 flannel shirts, 6 cotton night shirts, 19 doz. hemstitch handkerchiefs, 1 doz. knitted wash cloths, 12 doz. wash cloths, 7½ doz. face sponges, 23 pair socks, 2 triangular bandages, 1 cake—11,182 articles in all.

This is the last packing which will be done from the room on Simcoe St., as the Red Cross Society will open on Wednesday, September 1st, their new work-room the Assembly Hall, at the Public Library, which will be open hereafter for work on hospital supplies on Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays, both morning and afternoon, when all who desire to help in this way will be welcomed.

The Red Cross Society desire to thank the Peterborough Floral Co. for their kindness in donating flowers and lending their premises for the sale of same. Also Mr. Mackenzie and others who sent flowers from their own premises.

The proceeds of the sale amounted to $160, which will be a great help to the funds.

GETS TWO YEARS And 30 Lashes

Magistrate Dumble Delivered Sentence on Arthur Emory This Morning For Incest

Two years in Kingston Penitentiary with thirty lashes was the judicial dose measured out by Magistrate Dumble this morning to Arthur Emory recently found guilty of incest. The prisoner gets fifteen lashes as an introduction to the pen and the remaining fifteen as a parting touch.

Asked if he had anything to say Emory approached the Magistrate's desk and declared that he was not guilty.

"We've gone over all that before," replied His Worship. "I am dealing leniently with you. It should have been ten years." Without any further ceremony Emory was conducted back to the cells to await his removal to Kingston.

NEW FORCES REACH THE DARDANELLES

ITALIANS MAKE CONTINUOUS PROGRESS

ITALIAN TROOPS ARE LANDED ON GALLIPOLI

Several Transports Have Reached the Turkish Coast--Desperate Fighting at the Straits in Which the Turks Claim to Have Repulsed the Allies.

Special Cable to The Examiner

ATHENS, Aug. 31.—Several transports carrying Italian troops have reached the Turkish coast. Several regiments were landed. It is believed the landing was made on the Gallipoli Peninsula or near Smyrna.

LONDON, Aug. 31.—War experts expect a German attack will be launched against Serbia within the next ten days to relieve the Turks at the Dardanelles.

LONDON, Aug. 31.—There has been desperate fighting at the Dardanelles. The Turks claim success, but there are no report from the Allies. The Italians have landed on Gallipoli. There have been riots among the famished Turk soldiers.

LONDON, Aug. 31.—Sir John French's report states that an enemy aeroplane has been brought down.

ROME, Aug. 31.—Italian troops are making continuous progress. The Austrian line has been broken at two points.

LONDON, Aug. 31.—The Austro-Germans continue to press the Russians hard from Courland to Southeastern Galicia, but it is expected the coming fall storms will stop the drive.

NEW YORK, Aug. 31.—On high authority the concessions Germany will make to the United States are reported ot be that no American will in future be endangered by submarines. Germany making a clean back down.

LONDON, Aug. 31.—A British naval officer and sixteen boys from the training ship Corwall were drowned near the mouth of the Thames in a collision during a squall.

AMSTERDAM, Aug. 31.—Reports here say six hundred persons were killed during the recent bombardment of ZeeBrugge by British warships.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 31.—Assurances that the hard rule of the British order-in-council would be relaxed was received from the Consul-General in London by the State Department yesterday afternoon.

Russians' Heavy Stroke Against Turk Forces in the Caucasus

Special Cable to The Examiner.

PETROGRAD, Aug. 31.—The Russian Caucasus troops have taken prisoners, 84 Turkish officers and 5,129 men, and killed 2,000 of the enemy's troops in recent operations, the War Office stated to-day.

In the loot taken by the Czar's troops were one hundred camels, twelve cannon, six maxims, ninety caissons, two convoys and supplies, number of mules, thousand cattle, much ammunition, and other equipment.

OFFICERS FIGHT; TROOPS OF LOSER SURRENDER

Examiner Special:

CAIRO, Aug. 30 Trawlers passing through Cairo from Uganda have informed Reuter's correspondent that British operations in German East Africa are now proceeding satisfactorily. They relate strange tales of the fighting.

One incident was the meeting of a company of blacks under the command of a Belgian officer with another company of blacks under a German officer at a spot between Lake Kivu and Lake Tanganyika, where in true ancient fashion the officers fought with their swords while the men looked on.

After parrying for some time the German felt that the Belgian was likely to get the better of him with his sword so he suddenly drew his revolver. The Belgian, however, had noticed the movement and quickly drew his weapon, and both aimed together. The Belgian received a wound in the shoulder, but the German fell dead, shot through the heart. The German troops then surrendered in a body.

Says War Appeals To Europe's Masses

Examiner Special:

OAKLAND, Cal., Aug. 30 That the traditions of war appeal to the masses of the population in Europe and are being strengthened rather than diminished by the scenes of suffering and loss which they are daily witnessing was the statement made here by Karl N. Llewellyn, Yale graduate, writer, and soldier of fortune, who has just returned to America after being wounded while serving in the German ranks, and receiving the Iron Cross for conspicuous bravery.

Llewellyn, who is visiting his brother, Berg Cerrito avenue, was in Paris when the war broke out. He had previously attended school in Munich and inspired by letters from former companions who were enlisting followed suit, joining the Seventy-eighth Prussian infantry corps. He was wounded in Flanders during the second unsuccessful drive at Ypres last November, and was awarded the emperor's mark of distinction.

"This talk about war not appealing to the masses of Europe is all nonsense," said Llewellyn. "The wounded soldiers are already glorifying war to their children and will do so when the war is over. The mothers of Europe will always resist war, but once it arrives, they will to a woman, be glad to give their sons for their country."

Straw Stack Caught Fire

Barns of South Monaghan Farmer Narrowly Escape Destruction

Fire threatened the barn of William Rutherford, South Monaghan, yesterday when a straw stack at the rear of the building caught fire. It is supposed that the straw was ignited by a spark from a threshing engine which was operating on the other side of the barn. The men fought the fire from 9 o'clock in the morning until noon before it was finally extinguished. Some of the men were inclined to believe that the fire was the result of spontaneous combustion, caused by damp grain heating, while the majority are inclined to the opinion that it was a spark from the threshing engine. The fire was a difficult one to handle. The result would have been disastrous had the fire gotten beyond the control of the men.

Doctors and Danger

Most men's life-work is attended by certain dangers and that of the doctors is no exception. There are dangers of contagion, and special dangers that the surgeon faces every time he performs an operation.

That is one reason why the doctor's life, more than that of most people, needs the protection of insurance and insurance of the highest order such as is provided by a Canada Life Guaranteed Monthly Income policy.

This form of policy is the best yet devised. It is particularly suited to the needs of the professional man and gives sure, continued protection to the beneficiary and profitable investment to the policyholder. It is issued by the

WARRANTS HAVE BEEN ISSUED FOR FORMER MEMBERS

Those Implicated by the Mathers Commission Report Are to Be Arrested—Mysterious Secrecy is Being Maintained

ARRESTS SOON EXPECTED

Special to The Examiner:

WINNIPEG, Man., August 30.—Warrants have been issued for certain members of the former Roblin Government implicated by the Mathers commission report in misdealings with Government moneys. Profound and mysterious secrecy has been maintained at all offices which are handling the affair. The warrants, however, were issued at a city police station on Saturday at the request of the Attorney General's Department and arrests are expected this afternoon. Chief Elliott, of the Provincial Police, will serve the warrants.

MAKES BARNS HIS BUSINESS

When Cyrus Dolph of Preston invented the Steel Truss barn he had no idea of the far-reaching effect it would have on the betterment of farm life. Now, after three years, he has more than demonstrated the value of his Steel Truss Barn, and has sold hundreds of them to farmers in every County of Ontario.

He has spared no expense in the erection and fitting of a complete Model Steel Truss Barn, size 36 ft. x 5 ft. for the Toronto Exhibition. The building is located just east of the Poultry Building and is equipped with milking machines, sanitary stable equipment, feed cutters, threshers, etc. A Model Ready Made Dairy in operation will also be shown.

Mr. Dolph will have able assistants to talk with all visitors and will demonstrate all the improvements. Be sure and ask for a copy of the Barn Booklet. If you can't get to the Exhibition just send your name to Mr. C. Dolph, Preston, Ont., and a copy will be mailed without delay.

SOCKS OF GREY

A speck of wool, with gentle click
The busy needles ply
Among the fleecy yarn the while
The soldier's socks I knit.
As headed roars answers cry
The saint with pious duty
So on each counted stitch I nod
A soft and silent prayer
That Heaven may ever guard and shield,
Amid the fearful fray,
The gallant lad, whoever he be,
That wears these socks of grey

What matter if I know not whence
Or clime or race he came,
What class or creed or birth or
Or height or humble name
For where grim dangers wars are rife
In lands beyond the sea,
He holds ventures life and life,
For country, king and me
And this I know where foe meets foe
In battle dread array
Will foremost in the fight the lad
That wears these socks of grey

May He who reigns supreme on high
In wisdom, love and might,
With wisdom crown our righteous cause
And armed oppressors smite
From shot and shell disease fell
And dark dishonour's stain
And heavens sweet mercy keep the boys
Till they return again
Thus woven with each stitch a prayer
That angels night and day
From every ill protect the lads
Who wear these socks of grey

WILL REPLACE UNITS NOW GOING TO FRONT

Twelve Battalions That Are to Leave Shortly Will Be Succeeded By a Similar Number---No Confirmation of the Report However That Additional 50,000 Men Are to Be Called For at Once.

Special Cable to The Examiner

OTTAWA, Ont., Aug. 30.—There is absolutely no confirmation of the report that immediately after the return to Canada of Sir Robert Borden and Sir Sam Hughes, there will be a call for an additional fifty thousand men. Officials of the Department of Militia say that they do not know anything about such a decision having been arrived at. Undoubtedly steps will be taken to recruit regiments to replace the 12 battalions which will shortly go to the front, but no definite plans are likely to be announced until the situation has been considered subsequent to the arrival of Premier Borden and the Minister of Militia in Canada. Undoubtedly the authorities will continue to raise battalions in Canada as long as they are required by the War Office to play their part in bringing the war to a successful termination.

WELSH COAL STRIKE CRISIS IS BELIEVED TO HAVE PASSED

Special Cable to The Examiner

LONDON, Aug. 31.—The danger point in the Wales coal strike situation is believed to have been passed. One thousand more miners in the Monmouthshire district quit work to-day, but the miners' officials expressed the opinion that a satisfactory agreement will be reached before night with all strikers resuming work on Wednesday.

CONFERENCE RESULT SECRET

What occurred in yesterday's conferences was kept secret but it was reported to-day that Lloyd George agreed that some of the pledges made them when they recently returned to work had not been fully kept in the Government's arbitration award, and that his insistence forced new concessions from operators. The miners' officials were to return to Cardiff to night to lay the agreement before delegates representing practically all the Welsh and Southwest England coal districts.

GUNPOWDER.

Some In Which the Perforated Grains Are Three Inches Long.

The bigger the gun the bigger the grain of powder. For the rifles the men carry the grains are half as big as a pinhead. For the largest guns they are three inches long and three quarters of an inch thick. Every grain is perforated lengthwise. Small grains have a single hole, while the largest sizes have seven.

These holes regulate in a wonderful way the rapidity with which the powder will burn. If you light a scrap of paper all round the edge it will burn toward the center and the burning surface will steadily decrease. If, however, you made a hole in the center of the paper and start the conflagration there the flame will steadily grow, and the most rapid burning will take place just before the fire has reached the outer edge. This is the exact principle which governs the arrangement of the perforations in big gunpowder. The burning starts along the surface exposed by the perforations and spreads always faster as the hole is enlarged, burning fastest at the instant it is consumed.

It is not intended that the charge in big guns shall exhaust its force instantly, says William Atherton Dupuy, writing on "Powder For the World's Guns." The beginning of the explosion starts the projectile on its way. The explosion continues, and as the projectile gains speed the force behind it continues to push. The powder is burning fastest and pushing hardest at the instant the projectile reaches the mouth of the gun. At that instant also it burns out and exhausts itself. Its work is done.—Pearson's Weekly.

AIR MEN GET SCARED.

They Never Know When a Panic of Fear May Grip Them.

Professional aeroplane pilots have long since ceased to be ashamed to confess that they get scared and that a panic of fear while in the air may seize them at any time. Why this is so is the subject of an article in the London Aeroplane.

It appears that a flier with an imagination is never quite happy, especially on a long flight in calm weather when he has nothing to occupy his attention. One pilot, who is one of the finest fliers in England, has a habit which is most disconcerting to his passengers, however consoling it may be to him personally. He will fly without a waver for perhaps half an hour, then suddenly the passenger will imagine that a storm has struck them, for the machine will stand first on one wing tip and then on the other, then it will dive terrifically, and then it will almost loop the loop. After that it will calm down and fly for another half hour, when the performance will be repeated. After they have landed and the passenger has remarked on the extraordinary squalls which struck them when over certain places, the pilot will casually explain that he was merely looking round at those intervals to see whether his tail was still there and was testing the controls to see whether anything was trying to jam.

"'Cold feet' may lead merely to proper caution, or it may lead to complete loss of nerve. A pilot may have cold feet of a certain machine and so fly it with due respect for its peculiarities, or he may have cold feet of flying altogether, in which case he had better give it up, for if he does not he must take to 'doping,' which is fatal.

"A particularly malignant disease is 'constructor's cold feet,' in which the victim, always on the ground himself, watches every machine in the air in a constant state of terror, expecting it to fall in pieces whenever it is moved by a gust, and when a machine of his own or any other make is on the ground, he is always pawing round it, finding some spot at which it may break."

WALL STREET WISE ONES.

You Can't Fool Them by Losing Things on That Thoroughfare.

While carrying a bar of gold weighing about two pounds from the United States assay office in Wall street recently a messenger dropped the little package from among other bundles he had in his care. Upon discovering his loss he retraced his steps quickly, but no sign of the gold could be found. He was notified he would have to make good. The policeman on duty near the assay office had this to say:

"It will be some half baked idiot who will pick that bar up. The wise ones of this street will never do it. If they saw it on the street they would think it a hoax of some kind and leave it severely alone. These very shrewd Wall streeters can't see their way a quarter of a block without matches in broad daylight.

"Two years ago a bank messenger dropped a leather bag with no more or less than $73,245 in it right in front of J. P. Morgan's office, corner of Wall and Broad. Was it picked up right away? Not for two hours. And who picked it up? Why a bunch of immigrants with packs on their backs came up Broad street, saw the bag, kicked it and then one of them, after a furtive look around, dared to pick it up.

"He laid down his pack, and so did his companions, while they examined it. I happened to be watching, and I saw the bills. They apologized abjectly in their jargon when I took it from them and saw by the lettering on the bag where it belonged.

"I didn't let on how cheap I felt myself. I had seen the bag an hour before, but refused to believe it worth while picking up. Some swift for a cop, eh?"

But he was no exception in Wall street.—New York Sun.

GOT DIARRHOEA.

Change of water, change of diet, catching cold, eating unripe fruit, etc., are all causes of diarrhoea.

The safest and quickest cure for diarrhoea, dysentery, colic, cholera, cholera morbus, cholera infantum and all looseness of the bowels is Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry.

Mr. W. J. Quinn, Shelburne, Ont., writes: "About two years ago I was out in the West for harvest. The water out there was so bad that I took diarrhoea, and became so bad I was not able to work. I procured a bottle of Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry, and when I had taken half of the bottle the diarrhoea stopped, and by the time I had taken the entire bottle I was able to resume work. I sincerely recommend it to all those troubled as I was."

There are a great many imitations of "Dr. Fowler's" on the market, so see you get "Dr. Fowler's" when you ask for it.

The diarrhoea remedy that has been on the market for the past 70 years.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

GOOD INTENTIONS

Fate Turned Them Away.

By DWIGHT NORWOOD

What a difference between that which is behind and that before us! We move on from day to day in grooves that it would seem will be everlasting. Then suddenly we make a sharp turn. There is a saying, "It is the unexpected that happens." The reason for the adage is that now and again the unexpected does happen and is noticeable.

The unexpected happened with me one summer, and it was the most important event for me between birth and death. It was not only unexpected, but unintentional. It was not only unintentional, but contrary to my determination. Fate, ignoring my resolutions, led me into a trap, and before I was aware of it, presto, change! I was not the same man I had been before.

In the first place, I did not wish to go for a summer outing. I was much interested in a business scheme, and it required not only a doctor, but my mother, to drive me away from it. In the second place, I had repeatedly told my mother that my home would be with her and her alone so long as she lived. No third person, especially a woman, should come into the house to usurp her place as its manager. In the third place, if I must go away for a rest I proposed to get a rest and would go where no one would interfere with my quiet. Now, mark you how these intentions went awry!

I chose a summer hotel in the mountains in which I understood there were to be a medium number of guests. I did not wish too small a number, for a few persons under one roof are liable to wrangle. I did not wish too large a number because in that case one cannot be quiet. I was driven from the station to the Chuchihoochee Inn, alighted from the cab on to the steps leading up to the porch, handed a small satchel to a hotel attendant, paid the cabman and turned to go up on to the porch.

A pair of feminine arms was thrown around my neck, and a pair of lips pressed to mine.

Taken by surprise, I acted as nature prompted. My embracer was too close to me for me to determine whether she was beautiful, but the impulse of her act indicated that she was young. The lips, too, were not within my vision, and their sweetness might have been due to imagination. But what mattered the cause since they were sweet? Nor did I meditate upon what person the lady might be, whether cousin or intimate friend. I returned the embrace with something of the fervor with which it was given. That is, I began the return thus, but before it was concluded my own zeal was superior to that of the lady.

"Oh, Tom," she exclaimed, "what a joyful meeting after so many years' separation!"

"Delightful!" I stammered, unwilling to seem irresponsive till I could come to a better understanding of the matter.

"If it hadn't been something about your figure and the way you carry yourself I doubt if I should have known you."

"You, too, have changed; much improved."

"I'm so glad you think so! I feared you would be disappointed in me."

This brief dialogue occurred while we were pausing up on the porch. Had it not been for a disinclination to dash cold water upon the girl's happiness, to turn it into mortification, I might have told her that she must surely have mistaken me for some one else. This is the reason I give for not having done so, but there was another more powerful reason that I will not put in words. Nevertheless, I will say this: I defy any man who has tasted a pair of sweet lips of a girl who has made a mistake in his identity to turn upon her immediately and announce the fact.

I took a seat beside the young lady on the porch, but when she began to ask questions which would undoubtedly betray me I beat a retreat, telling her that as soon as I had got some of the dust of travel off me I would return to her. Entering the house, I was shown to a room on the second floor overlooking the porch.

I was performing my ablutions near a window when I saw a cab enter the grounds and stop at the steps below. A young man alighted as I had alighted a few minutes before, and I witnessed a scene that chilled the very marrow in my bones. Leaning out of the window that I might extend the range of my vision, I saw him approach the young lady I had recently left.

"Aren't you Belle Lawrence?" he asked.

"Why, yes," doubtfully.

"I'm Tom. Tom Underwood. Don't you know me?"

"You Tom Underwood?"

"Certainly. You received my telegram, didn't you?"

"Your telegram? Yes, I received your telegram, but"—

"But what"

The girl stood as if bewildered, then led the way into the house, and I saw and heard no more.

To tell the truth, I was relieved that I would not have to explain to the girl that she had made a mistake and that—well, that I had not at once disabused her of it. Nature is very strong, and I confess that the ascendant feeling in me was antagonism to the fellow who was doubtless receiving a duplicate of the kiss given me. At the same time I felt that I occupied an equivocal position. I did not like the idea of meeting the girl again. How would she regard me? Doubtless as an impostor. If I passed her on the porch or elsewhere about the house or grounds she would cut me with one contemptuous glance.

And now I must make a confession, a confession of cowardice. There is something of the coward about one who has wronged another, and I felt that I should cringe before this girl I had permitted to think I was her lover. True, I did not kiss her. She kissed me, and so quickly that I could not prevent her doing so. But I acknowledged to myself that I would not have prevented her if I had had no end of time.

I did not dare go downstairs to supper, but ordered a meal served in my room. Contemptible creature that I was, I did not dare go out of it, intending to get away by an early train the next morning.

About 9 o'clock there came a knock at my door, and in walked the man I had personated. He resembled me, but it seemed to me there was considerable difference in our appearance. There was a thundercloud on his brow. "I'm in for it," I said to myself; "but, thank heaven, it's not the girl I have to face!"

For a few minutes I listened to a tongue lashing such as I have never heard before or since. At first I bowed before the storm, but presently my anger began to rise. Not one word did I speak during that tempestuous interview, the hurricane blowing all one way, till, like a thunderbolt, I fell upon my visitor and sent him sprawling on the floor.

He rose with blood in his eye and was coming for me when he suddenly restrained himself. "This is no place and no way to settle so important a matter. You will hear from me presently."

With that he went out, slamming the door, and I heard him stamping down the corridor. It was 11 o'clock when a young man who gave his name as McCabe came to my room with a challenge. I was expected to meet Mr. Thomas Underwood the next morning at sunrise at such place as I might designate. Not stating how I could refuse, I consented to do so, provided Mr. McCabe would act as my second as well as that of my opponent. I also wrote a note to be given the young lady at such time as McCabe thought proper, apologizing for not having made her instantly aware of her mistake. Having settled these matters with my visitor, he departed. I sent word to the office that I should be called at an early hour in the morning, then turned in, and, my mind having been relieved by my apology to the lady and punching her lover, I fell into a comfortable slumber.

The next morning as I went out on to the porch who should be waiting for me but the young lady whose blunder had made all the trouble. She advanced toward me.

"Where are you going?" she asked.

"To leave by train," I replied, bravely lying.

"No, you're not. You are going out to fight Mr. Underwood."

"Did he tell you that?"

"No, but I suspected it. I have lain in wait for you to stop this nonsense. I couldn't do anything with him. I'm going to see if you have better sense."

I wondered for a moment, then told her I owed Mr. Underwood satisfaction for knocking him down and felt obliged to give it to him.

"Very well," she replied. "I'll go with you."

At that moment Mr. McCabe appeared. He seemed much surprised to see Miss Lawrence and was not averse to her going with us to the grounds with a view to stopping what he considered an unfortunate affair. We walked half a mile, then turned off the road and, passing into an open space behind some trees, found my enemy waiting for me. Underwood, on seeing Miss Lawrence, looked thunderstruck.

"Tom," she said, "you are about to act very unjustly on account of what was not this gentleman's fault, but mine. You are going to punish me through him. I wish you to apologize to him for having said anything to him about a matter which was mine, not yours."

"I'll do no such thing," said Underwood savagely. "If you prefer him to me say so and have done with it."

"I certainly prefer the way he is acting to the stand you take."

"Then you choose between us and choose him."

"I certainly don't choose you unless you come to your senses."

"If I can't fight him here I'll fight him elsewhere."

"If you fight him at all you may consider all off between us."

"So let it be." And, turning his back on us, he strode away bristling with anger.

I never saw Mr. Underwood again, but I saw a great deal of Miss Lawrence. Indeed, instead of spending my outing alone I spent it with her constant companionship. When I returned to the city I informed my mother that I had gone back on my volunteered promise to live with her alone so long as she lived. Fortunately she had the good sense to resign her position as head of my house and cheerfully turned it over to my wife.

Napoleon Bonaparte said, "I will control circumstances." Since he failed in doing so I feel excusable for going back on my resolutions.

A YEAR INDOORS.

"For thirteen months I was so bad with chronic indigestion that I could not go out of doors. Nerves were unstrung, the heart had and smothering feelings came on till I thought I would choke. Doctors' treatment failed me, so I began the use of Dr. Chases Kidney-Liver Pills, which I thank for my present good health. I am now doing my housework and have a family of ten."

Eskimo Courtship.

If European death customs astonish, the consenting "Yes" of a bride at marriage shocks an Eskimo woman. Not only must a bride show herself unconsenting; she must, if she respects herself and tribal traditions, scream and struggle with all her might when her wooer or his envoy enters her family residence and lays hold upon her, drags her screaming to the igloo, not, to her [illegible] presented with a [illegible] by her bridegroom, and [illegible] as a general thing mightily pleased at her change of estate. But she is far too circumspect to show her pleasure or affection and keeps up a noisy demonstration until she feels that she has done all that a well bred maiden should.

LAND FIGHTING NOT CLEAR

The Naval Captain Preferred His Battles on the Open Sea.

When Vera Cruz was besieged in the Mexican war Captain Robert E. Lee, afterward the commander in chief of the Confederate army, was ordered to throw up breastworks to defend a battery manned by the jackies of a man-of-war. Lee put the tars into the trenches and soon had the dirt flying, but the sailors did not labor cheerfully. They resented having to shovel dirt, and their captain remonstrated openly with Lee.

"My men," he said, "do not want mud banks to hide behind; just let them get out and at the enemy."

But Lee would not listen, and the tars sweated away at the shoveling. Presently the Mexicans opened fire at the very point thus protected, and the sailors were glad to seek the shelter of the despised dirt. The ship's captain felt that he owed Lee an apology and made a handsome one.

"Well, Captain Lee," he stammered, "I reckon you were right. I suppose the dirt did save some of my boys from being killed or wounded, but you know we sailors have no use for dirt banks on shipboard. All we want is a clear deck and an open sea. The fact is, captain, I don't like this land fighting, anyway. It isn't clean."—Youth's Companion.

Greatest Cavalry Fight.

The most tremendous cavalry fight, perhaps, that the world has ever seen took place at Doryleum, Syria, during the first of the crusades between the mailed chivalry of Christian Europe and the Saracens. The cavalry of the crusaders numbered 110,000, while that of the Saracens reached the prodigious figure of 300,000. Completely surprised by the enemy, the Christians recovered themselves and won the day. It is said that 50,000 of the Turkish horse were left dead upon the field.

Not Desirable.

John was grieving because he had no gift for his mother's birthday.

"Do not quarrel with little sister all day," suggested grandmother.

"That would be the best gift she could have," John agreed.

"Can't you see how much mother enjoyed your gift, John?" asked grandmother at night. "Why don't you do this every day?"

John drew a breath that came from his very boots. "I'd rather die, gram, than live like this every day," he said fervently.—Baltimore Sun.

Hard Lines.

She (soliloquizing)—"Of all sad words of tongue or pen, the saddest are, it might have been."

PACKING FOR A JOURNEY.

Here Is a Scheme That May or May Not Be of Help.

Jerome K. Jerome recalled with reference a habit of his methodical uncle who was a great traveler and who, before packing for a journey, always "made a list." This was the system which he followed, gathered from his uncle's own lips:

Take a piece of paper and put down on it everything you can possibly require. Then go over it and see that it contains nothing you can possibly do without.

Imagine yourself in bed. What have you got on? Very well; put it down together with a change. You get up. What do you do? Wash yourself. What do you wash yourself with? Soap. Put down soap. Go on till you have finished. Then take your clothes. Begin at your feet. What do you wear on your feet? Boots, shoes, socks. Put them down. Work up till you get to your head. What do you want besides clothes? Put down everything.

This is the plan the old gentleman always pursued. The list made, he would go over it carefully to see that he had forgotten nothing. Then he would go over it again and strike out everything it was possible to dispense with. Then he would lose the list.

Turner's Little Afterthought.

An English critic's reference to Turner's fine picture "The Wreck Buoy" reminds a faithful newspaper reader of a curious anecdote in connection with it. When Turner first sent this picture to the Royal academy it was hung among several brilliantly colored pictures. On varnishing day Turner found the effect of his dull gray rendering of a stormy sea altogether spoiled by its bright surroundings. Without a moment's hesitation he painted in the lighted buoy in the foreground, and its dab of crimson light showed so brilliantly in its gloomy setting that Turner's picture became the prominent one, and its rivals on each side were cast into the shade. It is curious, if true, that the most noticeable feature of the picture should have been an afterthought.

Agnail and Hangnail.

Hangnail was anciently spelled agnail, but did not really mean the bit of cuticle hanging from a nail, but a corn on the toe or any hard swelling. Palsgrave writes (1530) "agnayle upon one's toe," showing that they were not very particular how they spelled any of the words.

Cleverly Named.

The other day Tommy's uncle asked him the name of May's young man.

"I call him 'April Showers,'" replied Tommy.

"'April Showers?'" cried his uncle in amazement. "What makes you call him such a foolish name as that?"

"Because he brings May flowers."—London Telegraph.

How She Thanked the Conductor.

Mrs. K. got on the street car with her little daughter Sallie, and when it came time to get off the car the conductor obligingly helped little Sallie to the street.

"Say thank you, darling, to the man for helping you off," said the mother.

"Thank you, darling," said little Sallie, at which mother blushed and the passengers roared.—Indianapolis News.

THE TURKISH BABY.

Odd Customs Attend Upon His Birth and His First Bath.

A Turkish baby looks very queer in his odd dress. He wears over his shirt a kind of padded gown, something like a bathrobe, and on his little head he wears a bright red silk cap with a tassel of seed pearls. To keep all evil away from the baby one or more charms are fastened to the tassel.

His arms and legs are bound tightly after they are straightened out by his nurse, and when he is all fixed he is put in a little bed and covered with several warm pads. In addition to this a thin red veil is put over all.

When he is all ready his father comes in to see him for the first time. If the child is a boy, the father is doubly pleased. He takes the child up very tenderly in his arms and carries him out of the room. Just outside the door he rests a minute and prays. After he prays three times he repeats the name chosen for the baby and this is the way the baby is christened.

When the child is three days old a celebration is held and old women who make a regular business of this go to the different houses inviting the ladies to the party. At each house they tell the day of his birth and the name of the baby and urge the people to come.

On the day of the celebration the people arrive from early in the morning until late in the afternoon. Nearly all bring presents for the baby's mother, and each person as she gives her present to the mother expresses a pleasant wish for the child.

They hardly notice the baby, for the mother is afraid of bad luck if too much attention is paid to it. The few who do look at him say how ugly he is or something like that and this delights the mother, who knows they do not mean what they say.

If the parents are rich sweet sherbet or coffee and candies, cakes and ices are served as refreshments. If they are poor coffee and fruits are offered, but the entertainment is much the same. The ladies talk and laugh and eat until they are ready to leave.

Another great event is the baby's first bath. This happens when he is eight days old, and his mother and her friends may have a bath, too, if they wish. The baby bathes first, then his mother and then the visitors. This bath takes a long time and all the time slaves play sweet music and food is served three or four times.—Portland Oregonian.

British Soldiers' Pay.

The English war office gives some interesting information concerning how the soldier is paid, whatever the circumstances of his service.

In the trenches of course there is not much use for money, but while he remains on the firing line the soldier's accounts are kept by his company officers, and he can make withdrawals when convenient.

A statement of his financial position follows him into the hospital, and his banker is then the medical officer in charge. On furlough during convalescence there is a special paymaster. Pay due to a soldier killed in action is dealt with as part of the estate and sent to the next of kin.—Philadelphia North American.

A Curious Error.

The Rev. Dr. Edward Everett Hale told how a curious error crept into the translation of the Lord's Prayer into the Delaware Indian tongue. The English translator had as an assistant an Indian who knew English. "What is 'hallow' in Delaware?" asked the translator. The Indian thought he said "halloo" and gave him the equivalent. Therefore the Delaware version of the Lord's Prayer reads, "Our Father, who art in heaven, hallooed be thy name."

Eczema Was Cured
Twelve Years Ago

Dr. Chase's Ointment Proved to be a Permanent Cure

The old idea of eczema being a disease of the blood has been pretty well exploded by the record of cures made by Dr. Chase's Ointment.

Some doctors still advise internal treatment, but the results are slow and uncertain and too often a humiliating failure. With Dr. Chase's Ointment it is different. You apply the ointment to the sore parts. It cleanses the skin and soon sets up the healing process. In a few days you can see with your own eyes the wonderful change that is taking place and are encouraged to keep up the treatment until the cure is complete and the eczema replaced by smooth, natural skin.

It is wise to look after your general health, keep the bowels regular and the blood pure, but you can depend on Dr. Chase's Ointment to cure the eczema at any rate, if you will do your part and apply it regularly.

Mr. W. H. Roberts, Carlton Ave., P.E.I., writes: "I can recommend Dr. Chase's Ointment to anyone suffering from itching skin disease. I had eczema on my leg and suffered terribly. A friend advised me to get Dr. Chase's Ointment. I got a box at dealers, at Lahmanson, Bates & Co., Toronto. I had not used it more than a week when I found relief coming. I used it regularly for about two months and was entirely cured. I have had no return of the trouble since.

"Since then we have always kept Dr. Chase's Ointment in the house, and find it invaluable for chafing, chilblains, insect stings and burns. I would not be without it if it cost $5 a box.

"This is to certify that I am personally acquainted with Mr. W. H. Roberts and believe his statement regarding the use of Dr. Chase's Ointment to be true and correct." (Signed) Alex Heine, Justice of the Peace.

Dr. Chase's Ointment 60 cents a box, at dealers or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Toronto.

EXAMINER PATTERN SERVICE

A SUGGESTION FOR SWISS OR ORGANDIE

By Anabel Worthington.

It is always a delight to dress little girls, their clothes can be made so pretty and fluffy, especially in warm weather, when materials are soft and sheer and lace and ribbon are trimming features.

The frock illustrated herewith shows a very simple model rendered dressy by the addition of a pretty fichu in lieu of the ordinary collar. Of course, the use of this trimming is entirely optional, and it may be omitted on certain frocks and used on others as desired.

The waist is altogether plain, with a round neck and long sleeves. These, however, may be shortened to the elbow, as this is the length which is most comfortable for summer wear. The skirt is slightly circular in cut, gathered at the top, where it is joined to the bodice and with a group of ruffles above the hem. These are also optional, and wash goods may be made of the dress materials with lace edging, or entirely of lace. The latter trimming of the waist is usually of white lawn, but it will often be found prettier when made of the dress material with lace edging.

This is one of the styles which seem to invite the use of the beautiful organdies which are so popular this season, or of cotton and silk voiles, as well as of linen material.

The pattern of dress No. 7206 is cut in sizes 6, 8, 10, 12 and 14 years. Medium size requires with ruffles 3¼ yards of 36 inch material.

When ordering remember to give your name and address as well as the number and size of pattern required and state if a child.

BEGGARS OF CHINA

They Are an Impudent and Aggressive Set of Rogues.

BRAZEN PRANKS THEY PLAY.

Some of the High Handed Schemes They Use For the Purpose of Extorting Money From Their Victims—One Clever Method of Robbery.

Begging is in the nature of an art in China, and the various sorts of supplicants have been classified until now it is known that there are at least thirty classes of traveling mendicants who regularly go from place to place, plying their profitable vocation. The passenger boats know them only too well and do not attempt to collect passage money, for they sleep on the open deck and, curiously enough, pay for what ever rice they require. This being the case, rather than have any trouble with them and gain their enmity the boatmen allow them free passage.

When the mendicants reach the city they put up at the beggar hotel near the big pagoda and let the beggar headman know of their arrival. Soon the regular allowance is forthcoming from their victims, and the beggars spend a few days in pursuit of pleasure and then move on to another place to repeat the same proceeding.

There is one particularly obtrusive and disagreeable class trained to balance various objects on the nose, which usually selects a victim of means. These fellows may walk into a house and pick up chairs and balance them on their noses as they prance around the room. They then take these and place them just outside of the door, possibly on the street, much to the satisfaction of the large crowd which has followed them, as they have possibly just done the same thing down the street a bit. If the money is immediately forthcoming, the show may soon stop and the things will be returned to their proper places.

If, on the other hand, the residents refuse to comply with their demands, they pick up one article of furniture after another, skillfully balance each upon their noses, and, amid the roar of satisfaction from the street rabble, they carry them outside to the street. This may continue till the whole of the room's contents have been piled upon the street, and then the beggars walk off amid the bursts of applause that follow their action and leave the victim to move his belongings back into the house.

Again, there are others who are beggars pure and simple, who walk in the middle of the street, beating the pavement with a small bamboo stick. They turn neither to the right nor to the left to beg, but keep their eyes fixed ahead of them and take only what is thrown to them.

In quite another class is the wretch who shams ailment or physical defect, and who is a clever actor, willing to go to considerable physical discomfort in his efforts to arouse sympathy. He makes a practice of cutting himself when his demands are refused. He will appear before a family and demand a fee. If this is refused he draws a knife and cuts his forehead, and the blood begins to flow, much to the horror and confusion of those in the house, especially if they are only women.

The sight of blood quickly changes the matter, and the beggar begins to yell in a most distressing way at the same time, attracting a crowd. It is now easy with so many witnesses to open negotiations for a much larger fee, and he is usually paid considerably more than was at first demanded.

Having carried his point, the beggar now tours the entire street, where the news of his actions has preceded him, and he finds no trouble in collecting a handsome little sum from his one cut, for the blood, still fresh on his face, strikes terror to the chicken hearted.

There is also a class of criminals who are sent into exile and sentenced to beg for a certain period of time in a province a long distance from their native places. This does away with the necessity of the government's feeding the criminal and puts him out upon public charity.

Of a very different class are the men who have a pitiful tale of starvation to tell, which, they bewail, compels them to sell their wives or sons. Few indeed would think of making a purchase of this nature, and the story almost invariably results in the bestowal of money on the "unfortunate" man. However, if he finds some one who is willing to make the bargain and take the child he is inwardly delighted, for this means a full bag for him when he finally hauls in his net.

The son goes with the new master and proves himself an unusually satisfactory lad, doing his work with his whole heart in it and thereby gaining his master's approval and entire confidence as he had planned. In due time the dutiful son slips the latch and allows his fond father to enter and secure all the goods possible, and together father and son leave with all the plunder they can possibly carry.—Argonaut.

HIS WIFE'S TRIUMPH.

A Record That Used to Inspire Green, the Famous Historian.

It has been the case of many men of letters to have ill health beating them down as they struggle on toward literary achievement. Thus "lost in recent times were Stevenson, Richard Jeffries and J. R. Green. Each of these it happened, had a high hearted wife to keep him up, even to helping him with the actual labor of writing. "The Life and Letters of J. R. Green" show forth a great and sweet man. They show too, a wife whose sympathy and fortitude helped to make his accomplishment possible.

In copying the vast amount of manuscript of her husband's books Mrs. Green contracted writer's cramp and was forced to stop using her right hand. This looked like a fatal obstacle in the way of the invalid, who did much of his thinking in bed and could not write himself. But Mrs. Green set to work at once learning to write with her left hand.

One of her first practice pages, which she was about to destroy with the rest, her husband took quietly and put in his pocket. Years afterward when ill health seemed unbearable and in discouragement he felt that he could not work he used to take out that piece of paper, a living record of his wife's triumph over difficulty. When he saw the painful, patient strokes by which Mrs. Green had learned to write with her left hand he could work on with something near to inspiration.

In Accord.

As Smithers, Havana cigar in mouth, came out of an expensive restaurant and started to get into his automobile a creditor held him up.

"I tell you what it is, Mr. Smithers," said the creditor, "you wouldn't go riding round in a fine automobile like that if you paid your debts."

"Ha," said Smithers, "quite right. My point of view exactly! Glad to know you're in agreement with me. The golf club, Alphonse."—Exchange.

"Professors."

A "professor" may mean many things including a conjurer or a dentist. Originally, I believe, a "professor" meant a man who professed to be a converted man or a Christian and so could be called upon to have an unpleasant time for the edification of his neighbors.—G. K. Chesterton in Life.

Eternal Curiosity.

"So you think all public entertainments should be censored?"

"Yes, and I'd like to be one of the censors."

"What for?"

"So as to be sure of not missing anything."—Washington Star.

Antiquity of Smyrna.

Smyrna can lay claim to a loftier lineage than perhaps any other city on the earth. It is her proud boast that from the earliest dawn of history her continuity of name and fame is unbroken. It is in this spirit that she claims Homer for a citizen. His river, the Meles, which gave him a name, runs near the city, and the cave is still shown where he wrote his poems. Smyrna has not been slack in appropriating Homer, endowing him even with a local temple. The saddest chapters in the history of the city are those which record earthquakes and massacres of Greeks by Turks.

Leather Goods.

Furniture upholstered in leather should be cleaned with white of egg slightly beaten and polished off with a soft cotton duster. For shabby leather chairs boil half a pound of linseed oil and when quite cold stir in half a pint of vinegar. Mix this thoroughly and bottle for use. When required shake the bottle well, pour a little on a soft flannel and rub thoroughly into the leather. Turn the flannel when it gets soiled, and polish the leather with soft dusters.

ROUMANIA'S CAPITAL.

Bukharest Is a Great Artistic and Educational Center.

Describing Bukharest, the capital of Roumania, a statement issued by the National Geographic society says:

"The Roumanians have spared no effort or thought toward making Bukharest, their capital city, a real capital and not just one of the larger Balkan towns, cut to the severe design of the modern commercial city that is found throughout the west. The whole history of the Roumanians since the casting off of the Turkish yoke has been one of conservative progress leavened with enterprise, of thrift lightened by keen appreciation of the embellishments and pleasures of life. And in Bukharest one finds more artistic literary and scientific life than in any other part of the peninsula.

"Bukharest is a modern city of culture. It is laid out with many broad boulevards and avenues as becomes a capital and has, as Paris, Berlin and Washington, famous drives and parks within its area, an avenue of parades and zoological and botanical gardens. The city is built in a hollow between the hills upon both sides of the Dambovitza river, which is crossed by twelve ornate bridges. There are some fifty magnificent buildings upon its broad thoroughfares, among the most prominent of which are the royal palace, the university, the national theater and the palace of justice. Bukharest has some squalid sections, with narrow, crooked streets, but these are reminiscences of the Turkish regime and are fast disappearing. While Bukharest does a considerable commercial business it is of no importance industrially.

"Bukharest, like our own capital, has been developed primarily as a capital. The Roumanians have chosen Paris and Vienna as their models and have produced a judicious blending of the two upon the much smaller Balkan scale. Bukharest has plenty of good music, and its people, who gather in the concert halls or enjoy the free military concerts in the evening along some promenade, are appreciative and critical listeners. The national theater brings varied offerings, and that the best. Then the entertainments of the little capital are discreet imitations of social Paris, with a touch of mild Viennese friendliness. Furthermore, Bukharest, as also becomes a European capital, is a great educational center. Its schools, academies, colleges and university are models for Balkan countries."

An Example.

"People of this quiet cold blooded disposition don't get into rows."

"I don't know about that. Nothing could be more pugnacious than the oyster, and he's continually getting into broils and stews."—Baltimore American.

Imitation.

"Why Gladys, you are spoiling your dolly!"

"No, mamma, I am painting its eyes with the same color that you use."—Exchange.

MORE RUSSIAN POSITIONS EVACUATED

BRITISH LEADERS IN IMPORTANT CONFERENCE

VILNA IS BEING EVACUATED CLAIMS REPORT FROM BERLIN

Germans Claim Also That Russian Government is Making Feverish Preparations to Defend Petrograd From Attack --Military Supplies Are Being Withdrawn From the Fortress of Grodno.

GERMAN HANGAR IS DESTROYED

Special Cable to The Examiner:

BERLIN, Aug. 31.—Vilna is being evacuated and the Russian Government is making feverish preparations to defend Petrograd from attack. Military supplies are being withdrawn from the fortress of Grodno, German aviators have reported, and the actual evacuation may be begun at any moment. The Russians are preparing to fall back to the Lida Railway.

PARIS, Aug. 31.—War Minister Millerand returned to Paris to-day, after a tour of the Vosges and Alsace battle front. It was officially stated that the War Minister consulted with the General Staff "relative to measures necessary for the coming winter campaign." The official communique reported continued and effective bombardment of the German positions all along the line during last night, but said there had been no incident of special importance.

PETROGRAD, Aug. 31.—Russia has taken the first important step toward the reorganization of the Government departments to meet the menace of the Austro-German armies. The Council of the Empire appointed by the Czar, to-day approved the bill passed by the Duma providing for an advisory committee with broad powers in the administration of army affairs. Meanwhile rumours that a coalition cabinet is to be formed continue to circulate in political circles.

STRIKE IS OVER.

LONDON, Aug. 31.—The Welsh coal strike is considered practically settled. Following to-day's conference with the Government officials, the miners' committee announced that they will recommend to the men the acceptance of a new agreement offered by the Government. This agreement

AMSTERDAM, Aug. 31.—Allied aviators destroyed last Saturday a large building at Ghent, Belgium, used by the Germans for housing aircraft.

BERLIN, Aug. 31.—The War Office admits that Russian counter-attacks have temporarily halted the Austro-Germans in Galicia. The Slavs have taken up strong positions along the Strypa River, east of the Zlota Lipa, and have delivered several strong counter-attacks.

OTTAWA, Ont., Aug. 31.—There is little likelihood of the Government purchasing the entire Canadian wheat crop as suggested by representatives of the Western Farmers and Grain Trade at Calgary yesterday. The purchase of the crop would require an outlay of from two to three hundred millions, and the Government could not secure this amount of money. In April last an order-in-council was passed prohibiting the export of wheat to all countries but Great Britain, United States and Great Britain's allies. It is altogether likely that there will be some relaxation of this order allowing the export of wheat to certain neutral countries providing a guarantee is given that the grain will not reach Germany or her Allies. Such action cannot he taken, however, without the consent of the British Government.

BOMBARDIER McBRIDE TELLS OF LIFE WITH 4th BATTERY C. F. A.

Although a mis-quoted letter in the Examiner last week made it look as if Bombardier Archie McBride of the 4th Battery, had been killed at the front, on the contrary he came through the engagement referred to safely, as the following letter, received by his wife, 286 Smith street, and his sister, show.

Belgium, Aug. 15

Dear Wife,—I received your parcel and papers all O.K. This is Sunday and a very quiet day for me. The Germans are sending their shells right over our battery, but they are not bursting anywhere near us.

Did you read in the Examiner paper you sent me about Col. Morrison's letter in regard to the two guns. Well I was with one of the guns at that time, and Ambrose Dorris was with the other, when the two men were killed and two officers. Lieut. Craig and Lieut. Kelly were wounded as well as a man by the name of King, who died a few days after. It was an awful day and I will never forget it. I cannot say too much about it or they won't pass this letter. I have not been on my holidays yet. I would just like to get out of the firing line for a few days and away from the hearing of the big shells bursting all around. Did you see in one of the papers you sent me about Sergeant Hamilton being on pass and in London. He wrote to the paper about how the Peterborough boys were. Well he is in our battery. Watch out in the papers and if you see the 4th Battery, 1st Brigade, mentioned, you will know that it is the battery of Peterborough boys are in. Aunt Kate will know Ambrose Dorris. He is fine and the rest of the boys are all right. As for myself I am as big as a house.

Writing to his sister on the same date, Bombardier McBride writes: "I am writing this letter to you while the Germans are sending big shells over our heads. They are not coming near us. They put two right close to us last night between 12 and 1 o'clock, and some of the splinters hit the dugout we were sleeping in, but hurt no one. They awakened me up, but did not bother me any for I am used to them.

BRITISH LEADERS IN A HURRIEDLY CALLED CONFERENCE

Meeting Was Both Unexpected and Mysterious — Kitchener, Gray Balfour and Other Cabinet Members Gather

OF GREAT IMPORTANCE

Special to The Examiner:

LONDON, Aug. 31.—The greatest importance was attached to a hurriedly called conference at Premier Asquith's office this afternoon. The meeting was both unexpected and mysterious. Lloyd George was in conference with the representatives of the Welsh coal miners when he was summoned to Downing Street. A few minutes after Premier Asquith had arrived by automobile from the country. At intervals Lord Kitchener, Sir Edward Grey, First Lord of the Admiralty Balfour, Lord Lansdowne, Sir Edward Carson and other Cabinet members arrived.

GOVERNMENT WILL FULLY EQUIP ALL BATTALIONS

Militia Council Has Forbidden Any Further Appeals by Overseas Battalions for Subscriptions Towards Purchase of Articles of Equipment

WILL SUPPLY EVERYTHING

OTTAWA, Aug. 31.—The Militia Council has forbidden any further public appeals by overseas battalions for subscriptions toward the purchase of articles of equipment and band instruments, and for the creation of regimental funds. Such appeals must cease unless the permission of the headquarters authorities is obtained. The department is ready to supply everything necessary for proper equipment.

The foregoing will be welcome news for the officers selected for overseas battalions. Hitherto the commanding officer of a battalion had found that one of the first things he had to do was to raise several thousand dollars, to supply necessities for his men. At one stage the inadequate supply of machine guns meant that local methods of raising this necessary equipment had to be resorted to, but this was rectified recently. Then there have been certain camp tents and kitchen equipment, rain capes, and other articles for which no provision was made by the Government, but which seemed to be essential to the comfort and even health of the men.

GARDEN PARTY A GREAT SUCCESS

The garden party under the auspices of the Pocahontas Club at the home of Mr and Mrs Cutler 32 Benson Street last night, was a great success in spite of the unfavorable weather. The attendance was good and $21 was realized for the Red Cross work. Addresses were given by Mr R. J. Soden and Mr. G. A. Gillespie M.P., dealing largely with the Examiner and Overseas Club Tobacco Fund. Messrs. J. J. Turner, Sr., and Jr. also addressed the gathering. The girls of the Pocahontas Club opened the programme with a patriotic selection. Miss Quarrington and Miss Sharman, and little Norman Seymour took part in the musical programme. A fish pond and other attractions were well patronized. Refreshments were served during the evening. The grounds were beautifully decorated.

BIG DRAFT FOR BATTERY

Twenty-three Recruits Leave To morrow to Join the 33rd Battalion at Barriefield—Eighteen Are Canadian Born

SOME WELL KNOWN BOYS

The draft from the 24th Field Battery for the 33rd Battery, C.E.F., which leaves for Barriefield to-morrow morning, has the distinction not only of being the biggest draft sent to that battery, but also of having perhaps the highest percentage of native born Canadians of any unit leaving Peterborough. At noon to-day there were twenty-three recruits ready to go of which no less than eighteen were Canadian born. The United States claimed another and the remaining four were born in England. Eleven of the squad were born in Peterborough and two others in Peterborough county.

There are two other recruits who will be sent down later, and it is probable that several more will be added this afternoon. So far Peterborough has supplied two officers and sixty-seven men to the 33rd battery, of which forty-two were born in Canada, a bigger percentage than in most other quotas from here.

Lieut. Huycke will be in charge of the detachment leaving to-morrow. They will fall in at the armouries at 7.40 o'clock and leave for Barriefield on the 8.40 train.

The following had been accepted up to noon to-day and will leave in the morning:

Alex Butcher, 301 Burnham street. Born in Canada.
Stanley Taylor, 47½ Mark street. Born in Canada.
Godfrey Laplante, 257 Westmoor street. Born in Canada.
H. V. Crowe, 376 Brock street. Born in Canada.
W. O. Doupe, 120 George street. Born in Canada.
M. G. Hardill, 341 McDonnel street. Born in Canada.
G. E. Jackson, Peterborough. Born in Canada.
H. B. Hill, 621 Union street. Born in Canada.
Fred Lebar, 311 Dublin street. Born in Canada.
Ed. O'Toole, 97 Hunter street west. Born in Canada.
C. C. Mowry, 573 Sherbrooke street. Born in Canada.
Harry Castle, 118 George street. Born in Canada.
Everett Castle, Romaine street. Born in Canada.
Gerald Graham, 675 Stewart street. Born in Canada.
John Dougherty, 574 Aylmer street. Born in Canada.
Jas. Donaldson, Preston, Ont. Born in Canada.
Alex Whitney, Peterborough. Born in Canada.
Alfred Taylor, 54 Ware street. Born in Canada.
Geo. Payne, 197 Dalhousie street. Born in England.
E. V. Bird, 48 Albert street. Born in England.

Blind Man Bought Picture of King

An Old Countryman travelling through Canada selling an etching in aid of King George, casually remarked that while in Port Hope recently he sold only one picture, and that to a blind man. The purchaser, by the way, was one of the two newspaper editors. He had lost his sight but took the picture on the recommendation of a young lady in the office. The salesman mentioned the circumstance not as a complaint but merely as an indication of the difference of a vast majority of the people he had called upon toward securing a desirable print of the King. He remarked that it was the occasional man that bought the picture of His Majesty with lawyers probably the most numerous buyers. There was an occasional bank manager. Perhaps all the other people had already secured pictures for their homes.

ROUSING PATRIOTIC ADDRESSES DELIVERED AT LAKEFIELD MEETING

ECHOES OF LAST NIGHT'S MEETING AT LAKEFIELD

"The people of Lakefield are as much at war as if they were living within the shadow of the Tower of London."—Lt.-Col. Miller.

"The ladies are better occupied in knitting socks for the men with cold feet in the trenches than they are for men with cold feet at home."—Judge Huycke.

"Is liberty worth fighting for?"—Rev. Alex. Ketterson.

"I have little respect for the man who plays soldier all his life and then quits when there is a chance to be a soldier."—Judge Huycke.

"We have to take off our hats to the boys in khaki, and to the boys with the red band on their arm which shows they have enlisted before the khaki is ready for them."—Judge Huycke.

"Are you going to stay at home when your comrades across the sea are calling to you to come and help them?"—Lt.-Col. Miller.

"This is a war of liberty, democracy and freedom, against autocracy and military despotism."—Rev. Alex. Ketterson.

"The Union Jack has never been unfurled save for honour's sake."—Lt.-Col. Miller.

"There are many excuses for staying at home, most of them mighty poor."—Judge Huycke.

"The taxpayers of England, Ireland and Scotland have paid for our protection. How can we say that we have no obligation to help the Motherland now?"—Mr. J. A. Sexsmith, M.P.

The Need of the Hour Emphasized in Splendid Speeches by Lt.-Col. Miller, Rev. Alex. Ketterson, Judge Huycke and J. A. Sexsmith, M.P.

80TH MEN WERE THERE

The last meeting in the county campaign under the auspices of the Speakers' Patriotic League was held last night when a largely attended meeting was held in the town hall at Lakefield. What the practical results will be remain to be seen, but the meeting was a most enthusiastic one and the issue was placed squarely and emphatically before the people of Lakefield. In eloquent, unmistakably earnest utterances the different speakers showed that men were needed and that it was the duty of every able-bodied Canadian to rally to the colors. It was shown that it was Canada's war as much as it was England's, that Canada was in danger and that every man, woman and child at the front, the attention of the country at Lakefield and the sympathy centred was directed towards the Peterborough City and County Battalion.

The meeting started off back a khaki note as the 80th Battalion was represented by a detachment of fifteen men in charge of Sergt. Callaghan who occupied seats on the platform. The Lakefield band was in attendance and played Tipperary, The Red White and Blue, The Marseillaise and other patriotic airs.

Mr. O. A. Lakey, county organizer, opened the chairs and opened the meeting with an address of welcome to the audience.

Lt.-Col. Miller

Lt.-Col. Miller was the first speaker. He said he was glad to be back in Lakefield to-night and to know the people of Lakefield realized a great deal of the soldiers at the front. But he reminded them that the war was not to be decided there. More depended on the people at home than on the little army at the front. Everything depended on the people at home. He said, upon the attitude of the audience depended whether they had been fair to the boys at the front or not. He said:

"In the next war we are going to have to fight. Miller emphasized that Canada is at war. We are as much at war in Lakefield as if we were living in the shadow of the Tower of London and we are as much interested as are the people who live on the white cliffs of Dover.

Col. Miller pointed out to his audience the rich heritage they had received from those who had been part of the blood of many a brave Briton. They were privileged to be citizens of no mean empire to-day, to be free as that had not been possible ever in the past. He reminded his hearers that there were descendants of those Britons who had fought at Waterloo and Inkerman, who had carried the flag to Pretoria, Canada had spared the call before and had responded at the time of the Fenian Raid and later had fought alongside the British soldiers at Paardeberg. Then had come the call to arms in the great struggle and the response had been instant. The speaker recalled the glorious stand of the Canadians at Langemarck.

"From across the sea these men are calling to you. Your old comrades and friends, calling to you to come and help them. What is your answer? I see Are you going to go or are you going to tell your stretcher-bearers that you were too busy or that you were not feeling very well the year of the great war 2365 they ask you about it in the years to come?"

Rev. Mr Ketterson

After a selection by the band, Rev. Alex. Ketterson of Lakefield was called upon. In a forceful speech address the speaker compared the war to that of Gideon's time he said that the present war is one of liberty, democracy, and freedom against autocracy and military despotism. Throughout the British Empire men were flocking to the colors and of the true Britons for honour and freedom. He reminded his hearers that Great Britain was not [illegible] struggle. Kaiser [illegible] to men. Was a man [illegible] the plea. You are not [illegible] The struggle [illegible] Canada was [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] were behind [illegible] the [illegible]

FORMATION OF NEW BAND TO GO AHEAD AT ONCE

Lieut. Gliddon, Conductor of the 57th Band Will Likely Be the Leader of the 80th Organization—Musicians Offer Themselves

TO-DAY'S MILITARY NEWS

The formation of a band for the 80th Battalion will be proceeded with at once. Mr R. E. Layfield, secretary of the Speakers' Patriotic League who has been in Kingston in consultation with Col. Hemming, states that authority has been given for the enlistment of a band, and this will be proceeded with immediately. Lieut. Gliddon, conductor of the 57th Regimental Band, and Sergt. Walter Hughes, the cornet soloist of the same organization, have both offered their services, and it is likely that Lieut. Gliddon will be the leader of the new band, with Sergt. Hughes as band sergeant. Twenty bandsmen have already volunteered and it is expected that the number will be augmented to a total of two.

Nearly all the tickets for the big concert in Victoria Hall under the auspices of the 80th Battalion next have been disposed of and there will a splendid attendance. A fine programme has been prepared and the soldier boys promise to provide a big night's fun.

Every morning sees new faces to the ranks of the 80th Battalion. There were five new men out this morning and during the morning several more recruits were added.

The 33rd Battery added another city leaguer to its ranks yesterday when Alf. Taylor, the Empress catcher, enlisted. This makes seven of the city league players in the 33rd.

Chester Mowry, 573 Sherbrooke street has enlisted in the 33rd Battery and is away for Kingston on Wednesday morning. Brother Mortimer Mowry is now at Shorncliffe, England, with the second Canadian Contingent. Chester Mowry is a member of the Independent Order of Oddfellows and also a prominent member of the Nassau Lodge I.O.O.F.

Mr Mowry is a son of the late Mr Mortimer Mowry and grandson of the late John Mowry. During the past six years he has been employed in the meter department of the C.G.E. works up to the time he heard the call to enlist. He is widely known in the city and has taken an active interest in many of the city's [illegible]

CHARLOTTE ST. RAILWAY LINE NEARLY FINISHED

New Extension to Patterson Street via Boundary Road Necessitates Several Changes in the System's Schedule

TWO CARS ON THIS ROUTE

The Street Railway Company's [illegible] west on Charlotte Street and south on the Boundary Road to Patterson street is nearing completion. Only a few more lengths of rail from the Park Street junction remained to be laid this afternoon. However the actual commencement of traffic will be held up until the new street pavement is finished on Charlotte Street between Park Street and the Boundary. It was expected that the Company would be able to utilize their new line during last week but with the paving work in progress at the time it is unlikely that a passenger service will be inaugurated on that account.

Coincident with the opening of the Boundary extension will be a readjustment of the services that radiate from the Park-Charlotte corner. D. Byersville route will remain unchanged with two cars operating, but the Jackson Park line will likely have one car working between the Park loop and Charlotte Street. The new extension will have two cars, one of which will simply be removed from the present "Green" route. The other is a former George street car which was used before the "P.A.Y.E." cars were purchased. The Charlotte Street line, it is understood, will cover from Patterson street to Hunter Street in its eastern section and it replaces the service now provided by the second "green" car. The system, with its most recent addition, would be most compact and complete. Passengers from Jackson Park desiring to take a George street car south for instance, will have two transfers to make, but this was necessitated by the new line. Two cars running east on Charlotte street would not only be unnecessary but would be a loss and inefficient method. The transfer coupons will be supplied for these passengers and there will be no difficulty or annoyance created. In the latter cities the number of transfer privileges generally as the distance to be travelled extends and they regarded as a matter of course.

The new line to Patterson Street almost forms a loop with the C.G.E. line only a few blocks remaining on the Boundary Road [illegible] from Patterson Street to Charlotte street. There is no doubt but that the C.G.E. [illegible] extension [illegible] than [illegible] expectations of the Company. [illegible] very popular [illegible] to it.

Peterborough Presents Possibilities Unsurpassed."

TUESDAY, AUG. 31, 1915

TURN OVER YOUR CAR.

The pun is a weak one, but if it only catches attention and brings results it will pass. Auto owners, you auto place your machines at the service of the committee of the Patriotic League and help them get speakers to the several meetings, and thus help recruiting. The members of the committee have no personal, but only a purely patriotic, interest in organizing a Peterborough battalion. Patriotism for the moment aside — if that be not treason—the merchants and business men of Peterborough will be the material gainers, from the presence and the maintaining, for purposes of training, of a battalion in Peterborough. They should seize this opportunity to do their bit. It is felt that this cooperation of citizens has only to be suggested to meet with willing response, and that many public spirited and patriotic owners will turn over their cars to the committee.

We need not allow a constitutional technicality to stand in the way of our doing the better thing of discharging our national responsibility towards the war situation. All this comparatively insignificant and harmful twaddle about elections; all this political hair-splitting should give way to an honest desire to do our best, to keep our people pulling together in harness. Away with politics, we have got sterner work to do than squabbling for party precedence and party interests. We are united now and should stay so. The only importantly dividing influence is the uncertainty of the political situation. Only let Sir Robert Borden declare as authoritatively and as unequivocally as Sir Wilfrid Laurier declares his support of the Government's war policy, that there will be no election while the war lasts, and everything will go better. We shall be a united and heartily cooperating people. When the necessity of adjusting the existence of parliament to constitutional requirements comes, will be time enough to give our attention to something besides throwing in all our strength, all our unity of purpose and effort, to contributing Canada's share to the triumph of the cause of justice, liberty and humanity.

OIL ON THE STREETS.

There is no doubt that the public have never had the comfort in relation to our streets and the dust nuisance, that they have had this year under their treatment with oil. There has been a delightful absence of dust, and at the same time the streets have been in better condition, more comfortable for traffic. In fact some autoists and users of vehicles say they prefer the oiled streets to the paved streets, espeically the streets that were properly prepared and smoothed before the oil was applied. But oil won't last always, and the street surfaces begin to show signs of dust. It is, therefore, time to consider a second application of oil. It is probable that the clouds have exhausted their store of rain, and that we shall have a period of dry weather. If we regard the comfort of the public who pay the taxes, we should regard their wishes, especially as they are quite willing to pay the cost of being protected by the application of oil. It has proved so successful that it should not be abandoned, nor its application neglected. It is true that the streets need special preparation for receiving oil to the best advantage. This is in itself a benefit, that the public appreciate; and in considering another application of oil it should be remembered that traffic has developed depressions in some streets that hold water, that interfere with the best effects of the oil. With reasonable attention to the surfacing of the streets, it is conceded that the use of the oil we have applied this summer has opened new possibilities for good streets — comfortable and easy for traffic, and a comfort for the citizens who live alongside our formerly dusty and disagreeable highways.

"INVITATION TO AN ELECTION."

If Mr. J. H. Burnham, M.P., is allowed to formulate charges and assume them proven, he can convict the "wicked Grits" of almost anything. His letter, printed in our evening contemporary, under the heading "Invitation to an Election," is a fine example of petitio principii, a sophistical begging of the question, that would seem impossible to a logical lay, let alone, legal, mind. In his letter Mr. Burnham converts a comparatively, irresponsible newspaper correspondent's "prediction" of an early election into a declaration of policy of responsible Liberal leaders, of an early election—an "invitation to an early, a war-time election." There is an evident desire on the part of the writer of the letter to shirk the onus of advocating a war-time election, that properly falls upon the shoulders of his own party. In the House of Commons on April 10th, 1915, Hon. Robert Rogers, a member of the Government, demanded "in thunder tones," an early election. He said:

> The cry from every individual one meets, and that understands the conditions, in tones louder than thunder, demands that this Parliament be dissolved and that the rights and liberties of the people of the Dominion be granted to them under our form of democracy.

Here we have a member of the Government, from his place on the floor of the House demanding the political iniquity of a war-time election. Hon. Mr. Rogers made this demand, in the presence of the leader of the Government and the Conservative party. His demand must have been in line with the policy of the Government and party, for he uttered his demand without reproof, and up to this moment Sir Robert Borden has not repudiated Mr. Rogers' statement and demand, and logically it still stands as the policy of his party. To bring harmony to the people, and the cooperation to the people of Canada of both parties, in waging this war, Sir Robert has been entreated to declare definitely that there would be no election during the war, but he has not spoken, and in effect Mr. Rogers' demand still stands as the unrepudiated utterance of a member of the Government, an utterance that, under the conditions, binds the whole Government.

It is true that some journals advocate a coalition government as a way out of a political impasse. Some Conservative journals advocate an indefinite extension of the parliamentary term. A coalition government would be following British precedent, but the wisdom of this can be easily questioned. It might serve some purpose during war time; but to get back to usual conditions, to disentangle the constitutional complications, that would come when peace and otherwise normal conditions came—to eliminate the conditions of constitutional confusion—the Virgilian phrase would apply, hoc labor, hoc opus est. It would be easy to form a coalition, but it would be hard to get out of it and get back, in party standing and relations, and party obligations, to the "as you were" position.

In the circumstances we have no need of a general election; and may have no need of a coalition. The life of the present Parliament and the mandate of the Government, hold good for more than a year yet—till October 10th, 1916. In that time the war may be over, and then a general election will be in order both constitutionally and tactically. Before that time we do not need either a general election nor a coalition. A coalition can only be justified on the ground of securing the unity and cooperation of all parties in promoting our share of war service. We don't need that now. We are all behind the Government in support of its energetic prosecution of war work. Though in respect to some of us, like Sir Wilfrid Laurier, our confidence in the Government does not ooze through the soles of our boots, yet we, like Sir Wilfrid, have turned down the party page and are loyally behind the Government in our support of its war policy. Speaking at St. Lin, Quebec, on Aug. 7th, Sir Wilfrid Laurier said:

> I support this (the war) policy of the Government, and speaking before you with all the authority that my long political career gives me, I say that while I exist I will not desist from this attitude.

Here Sir Wilfrid sets his shoulder to the shoulder of the Government. He represents the party he leads; it is solidly behind him—there are no anti-British factions in the Liberal party. What then is the need of a coalition? In their war policy honestly carried out, the Government has the united backing of both parties; of all the people. Why not then keep the Government to its work as long as the war lasts? Its mandate will last till October, 1916, nearly thirteen months. If the war is not over then, then we can consider the extension of the life of Parliament—not indefinitely, but from session to session. Surely the war won't last long enough to make more than one extension necessary.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier's Recruiting Speech At St. Lin, Quebec

When Sir Wilfrid rose to accept the address of welcome he first generously thanked the people of his native parish for the new testimony they had shown him of their confidence and sincere amity, and recalled many souvenirs of his infancy.

"The first word of Canada when war was declared, was that Canada would go to the assistance of Great Britain. I am the Chief of the Opposition, and I do not hesitate for one moment to declare that each time the Government engages itself in a cause so just as this one, I will support the Government. Certain people are asking what have we to do with what is happening in Europe. That is not the way for us to regard this question. You know, gentlemen, that I have not hesitated to support the Government when it took the part of England against Germany. "England is fighting for a cause so noble, that we should be ready to sacrifice ourselves for it." I have supported without criticism the war policy of Sir Robert Borden because the cause is a noble and a just one, in which every loyal subject of the British Empire should take a part."

Which Attitude Should the Province of Quebec take?

"We are all interested in this conflict, and I would not have my compatriots of the French language take an attitude different to the attitude of my fellow countrymen of the English language on this question. England is at war because she wishes to defend the independence of Belgium, and the integrity of the soil of France. Never has a nation drawn the sword for a cause so sacred."

"We of French origin have a double duty to perform. It is true that it is not our own land that is being ravaged, and they are not our farms that are being fired by the Germans, but it is the land and the farms of France. It is not our cathedrals, it is not our churches, that the German bullets demolish; but they are the monuments and treasures of France, and they are French women that are outraged and massacred. French-Canadians who listen to me now, is there one among you can remain unmoved before these acts? This is why 70,000 Canadians have already gone to defend justice and liberty. (Cheers).

The War Policy of the Government Must be Supported.

"I support this policy of the Government, and speaking before you with all the authority that my long political career gives me, I say that while I exist, I shall not desist in this attitude. We have an interest to take part in this war. We are fighting for liberty and we are combating absolutism. If you have in your heads a desire to see justice and liberty triumph, you cannot rest indifferent to this conflict. If Germany triumphs it will be the end of our ideal of civilization.

The Montreal Incident.

"In Montreal there are to be found men who would prevent recruiting. Recently Major Ranger wanted to address a meeting, and there were men there who actually wanted to close his mouth. I do not know Major Ranger, but I will say to his honour that he is a hero. It seems to me that it was a duty on the part of those who attended the recruiting meeting to permit a man who had sacrificed his life in the trenches to express his opinion. I claim for my country the supreme honour of of bearing arms in this holy cause, and it I support the Government it is because I have the heart to do my duty (Applause).

No Fear of Conscription.

"For my part I do not believe there will ever be conscription either here or in Great Britain. England has never forced conscription on any part of the Empire. The British people have always objected to forced service and the fear of conscription in Canada is as groundless now as it was in 1911, when some of the people of Quebec were told that the Laurier naval policy involved conscription and the hauling away of peaceful citizens to be disembowled in European conflicts."

On Naval Question.

In the Province of Quebec the last general election was not fought on the question of reciprocity alone, but was fought equally on the naval question. Recent events had justified the attitude taken by the Liberal party in regard to the naval policy. "Canada has not always been the country she is to-day." "There was a time when Gaspe and Lake Superior were, generally speaking, our extreme points. To-day the state of things existing then has changed. New Brunswick and Nova Scotia are washed by the Atlantic Ocean, and on the other side of the same waters in Europe, exist France, the home of our ancestors, England, our mother country, and Germany, our enemy. On the other side we find British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba — Manitoba, where no later than yesterday the people vindicated their honour, outraged by a certain government. (Loud cheers). On the western coast the oceans connect Canada with the thickly populated countries of Asia. On the Atlantic Ocean, on the Pacific Ocean, and on the St. Lawrence River there exist to-day rich and flourishing cities. All these cities are open. In time of war they are exposed to the enemy. That is why we need our navy."

War First, on Other Questions Economy Must be Practiced.

"I do not want to make party capital out of these questions, but simply to explain the position in which we find ourselves. The present policy is ruinous, and is increasing the cost of living, and although we support Sir Robert Borden in Canada's participation in the War we cannot support him on his internal and fiscal administration. We voted the money necessary for the sending of an expeditionary force to Europe, but we could not support the Government on the measures they had taken to assure our economic stability. In the crisis which we are passing through the Government should have adopted a policy of rigid economy. It had not done that.

Kitchener's Question

"Why Aren't You in Kakhi,"? Says Kitchener

The Examiner has received, with thanks for the favour, a copy of a brisk new recruiting song. This song is titled, "Kitchener's Question," and a natural sub-title would be, "Why Are You Not in Khaki," indicating a pretty robust trust that there are uniforms to get into. There is abundance of spirited appeal in the words, and the music has a militant and foot-hitting swing, the chorus being especially catchy in both its music and its likelihood to catch recruits. The words and music are composed by Miss Muriel E. Bruce, the composer of "Knitting." This splendid, inspiring song should have a wide vogue, and we should not be surprised to hear it sung at local recruiting meetings, where its appeal cannot but be inspiring and even stimulating. "Kitchener's Question" is published by the Empire Music and Travel Club Limited, 26 College street, Toronto.

The Boys of the Fourth Brigade

Pte Muir, one of the Peterborough boys with the 21st Battalion, C.E.F. at Sandling Camp, England, sends the following poems to his daughter, Florence Muir, 210 Dublin street.

The Boys of the Fourth Brigade.

(Under Command of Brigadier Lord Brooke, C.M.G., M.V.O.)
Made up of the 18th, 19th, 20th and 21st Canadian Battalions.

O Canada, your boys are ready
And will not bring you shame
We drill all day eager and steady
To uphold your dear old name
Our first contingent fought and bled
To uphold what men prize the best,
It's British pluck and the dear old flag.
And we will help finish the rest.
At sports and football, athletics and drill
We cheer our battalions for fun,
But war and athletics are different things
And we fight side by side, four in one
So here's to the boys who have gone before,
Willing and ready to take their chance,
We are thinking of them every day,
And our brigade is ready for France.

THE WORLD OF SPORT

LEADERS IN BIG-LEAGUES ARE RUNNING SMOOTHLY

For the first time in years the major baseball leagues slip over the line into the home stretch to-day with three clubs in each league still in the pennant hunt. And for the first time this season all the National clubs excepting the Phillies, Dodgers and Braves can be counted out, barring miracles.

Consistent baseball by the Red Sox and Philadelphia has come to the aid of a bewildered fandom and clarified the situations. The Bostonese have won eight of their last ten games, and the Quaker Town crew have won six of their last eight. Only the St. Louis Cardinals have equalled the Quakers, and they're so far back nothing less than a miracle can carry them into the first team.

The much predicted and long-looked for crack of the Phillies under the strain has failed to materialize, about the only crack has been that of "Gabby" Cravath's bludgeon pounding out homers. The Red Sox are floating along on an even keel, safe with a good lead and every indication point to both clubs easing into it with aces in the hole. Both course, accidents.

Both Managers Carrigan and Mor- an have fortified themselves for this September grind, and they're going into it with aces in the hole. Both have rested their star hurlers—Wood and Alexander—to the very limit, safety has allowed for the last two weeks. Carrigan has even sent Wood home to rest up, in expectation of a storm September like. That both have managed to increase their leads without their full force augurs well for their September chances.

Despite the Phils' apparent seize, however, there is a strong leaning toward the Braves throughout the east. Recent despatches from the coast saying that Bill James, who left California for the east yesterday, may work through the home stretch, has strengthened this leaning. And the fact that the Braves always fight better with their backs to the wall isn't overlooked. Boston, Brooklyn, and Philadelphia all have a heavy road schedule ahead and the Braves have proved the best road aggregation of the bunch this season. If the Braves see the pennant and its accompanying financial melon slipping away from them through the haze of these coming September days they may get up yet and kick dust in somebody's face.

STEVE VAIR THE LATEST HOCKEYIST FOR FRONT

Steve Vair of Barrie has joined the young army of hockeyists who have gone to the front or enlisted this summer. Vair, who is known from coast to coast as a hockey player, started his career on the ice with Barrie Colts 14 years ago. He was nipped in the act of playing hockey under an assumed name at Haileybury during the halcyon days up in the silver country, and then joined the Renfrew Millionaires. After that he played with Montreal Wanderers, Edmonton's Stanley Cup team managed by Fred Whitcroft, Toronto Tecumsehs, Cobalt, and finally retired a year ago. He coached Barrie's junior team last season. Vair has had several years' experience in the militia and enlists as a sergeant in the 75th.

OTTAWA SENATORS EQUAL WORLD'S BASEBALL RECORD

Examiner Special.

By winning every game on the road last week, the Ottawa Senators virtually cinched the Canadian League championship and equalled the world's record made by the Boston Nationals forty years ago when they won the National League pennant four consecutive years from 1872 to 1875. Boston's record was equalled on only two other occasions, both happening in the New England League when Fall River took four straight flags from 1893 to 1896 and Worcester four more from 1906 to 1909. Ottawa's record is all the more remarkable as the team has entered in organized baseball. The men of Louis Cook copped its first title with a percentage of 643. Brantford Canadian Capital was admitted to the league in 1912 and under the managership being the runner up with .551. In 1913 led by Frank Shaughnessy who had won the Central League pennant with Fort Wayne the previous year, Ottawa was again returned winner in a tip finish with London, the Senators having a percentage of .620 against London's .621. Last year Shaughnessy was again at the head of the club and the race was carried to the last day of the schedule, Ottawa again leading London 628 to 623. This season the Senators were always in the first three and early in August Shaughnessy again sent his team out in front and gamed on Guelph and other contending club every week. The Senators should win almost as far away as they did in 1912.—Free Press.

CHIEF BENDER RELEASED BY BALTIMORE FEDS

BALTIMORE, Md., Aug. 30.—"Chief" Bender, who attained fame and fortune with Connie Mack's famous Athletic machine, to-day was given his unconditional release by Manager Otto Knabe of the Baltimore Feds. Bender was believed to have a contract good for several years.

Bender has been practically useless to the Terrapins since joining the club in the spring. Last year he had one of the best years of his career with Mack's machine.

The famous Chippewa chieftain never quite recovered from what he thought was the disgrace of being beaten by the Braves in the last world's series. The defeat, his intimates say, broke his spirit, and Mack's releasing him only added to his sorrow.

Bender is 32 years old, and first attracted attention when he played with the Carlisle Indians in 1901. In 1902 he broke into the professional ranks with the Harrisburg Athletics, and the following year was signed by Mack.

The Indian has been one of the greatest pitchers the game has seen. He pitched through many world's series, and he, with Eddie Plank, brought several pennants to Philadelphia by almost their efforts alone.

CITY HALL PARAGRAPHS

Ald. A. V. McIntyre was welcomed back into the civic fold after an absence of several weeks during which time he has been engaged in the construction of a twelve-roomed school in Orono. Ald. McIntyre attended last night's meeting of the Board of Works.

Municipal Association Meeting.

City Clerk Armstrong will probably represent the city at the Seventeenth Annual Meeting of the Ontario Municipal Association, which opens in the City Hall, Toronto, on Wednesday of this week. An elaborate programme has been prepared for the occasion.

A Change for the Better.

Last night's meeting of the Board of Works terminated shortly after nine o'clock. The chairmen of some of the committees are manifesting a decided tendency to shorten up the meetings to a more reasonable length.

Nix on the Oratory.

By economizing in time and minimizing superfluity of speech, business can be transacted with greater facility and despatch. Much depends on the chairmen who can in a measure determine the oratorical terminals of the more verbose members of the respective committees.

HARRY LAUDER IS COMING

Mr. J. J. Turner told the Examiner this morning he had just received the contract for the appearance of Harry Lauder at the Grand.

Rousing Patriotic Addresses

er. The call comes to you. What answer will you give? From across the seas, fighting as only British soldiers can fight, your comrades stretch forth their arms to you to come and help them. What are you going to do?"

His Honour Judge Huycke.

In introducing His Honour Judge Huycke, Chairman Langley referred to the fact that it was from a deep sense of public duty that Judge Huycke was taking part in the present campaign, and informed the audience that three of His Honour's sons were enrolled in the ranks of the Canadian contingent.

Judge Huycke paid a tribute to the work of the ladies in his opening remarks. He sincerely believed that the ladies of Canada were more truly doing their share for the Empire than were the men. He remarked that the ladies were better occupied in knitting socks for the men with cold feet in the trenches instead of for the men with cold feet at home.

Judge Huycke clearly and logically reviewed the causes leading up to the war, showing convincingly that the gigantic struggle was not of Britain's seeking, but had been forced on the world by the ambition of Germany. It was a case of King or Kaiser, and the speaker asked his audience which they preferred. For the liberty which we in Canada as well as all the citizens of the British empire were enjoying the price had been paid, and the price was blood. Now, that liberty was in danger, and it was the duty of all able bodied men to rally in its defence.

"I have the greatest sympathy for the young man who is unable to go," remarked Judge Huycke, "but for every case like that there are dozens who are fit to go but won't. There are many excuses made for not going, but most of them are mighty poor."

The speaker reminded his hearers of the gallant Lakefield boys who had already gone forth. Lieut. Gordon Graham, who was to go back to the front as soon as he was fit, Lieut. Hilliard and others. He asked the young men who had played hockey and rugby and other games with these young heroes, if they were going to allow them to fight on unaided, ignoring the appeals for help.

It was a man's game that was being played now, and the young men should play up and play the game.

MR. J. A. SEXSMITH, M.P.

The member for East Peterborough was the last speaker. He referred to the departure at the first Canadian contingent from Quebec, where he was at the time, and informed his hearers that it was the hardest thing he had done in his life to leave the boat that was carrying the 2nd battalion. He told of walking down lines of troops at Ottawa and other points, and of the bright cheerful faces of the gallant lads who were going forth to fight the empire's battles. Mr. Sexsmith remarked that some people said this was not Canada's war. The speaker emphatically rehearsed what England had done for her colonies. The taxpayers of the motherland had been taxed heavily to pay for the fleets that protected the colonies. For this protection Canada and the rest of the colonies had not been asked to pay one cent. In the face of that how could any one say that there was no obligation on the part of Canadians? He was sure that the young men of Lakefield and the district would not be found wanting.

The meeting was brought to a close with the singing of the National Anthem.

Toronto Exhibition Notices

AS USUAL

The Independent Order of Foresters, spacious tent once again heads Society Row. This will be the headquarters of the I.O.F. during the Fair, and it is the one spot that every person should visit, for it is one of the most desirable places of rest that one can secure on the grounds. During your visit you will find much literature regarding the great Fraternal work that this gigantic body is doing, and other particulars pertaining to membership in this great Order. G. A. Mitchell, Assistant Supreme Chief Ranger and Superintendent of Field Work, is again in charge, and is ably assisted by Ed. Fellman, D.S.C.R., and J. C. Davidson, D.S.C.R. A hearty welcome is extended to all and each visitor will receive a souvenir of a button-hook and a ruler. Do not miss this spot when you are feeling tired.

How extremes meet. What Lincoln by an upright man," he said, "is a downright honest man."

"Hallo, Simpson, are you growing a beard again?" "Yes." "What for?" "Well, you see, my wife gave me a necktie for a Christmas present and I've got to wear it, and—" "Oh, I understand!"

CANADIAN NATIONAL EXHIBITION, TORONTO—GRAND TRUNK EXHIBIT.

The Grand Trunk System is making a powerful appeal to farmers and sportsmen in its exhibit at the Canadian National Exhibition at Toronto this year.

The great natural resources of the country served by the railways are vividly portrayed. The centre piece of the Company's building is a display of grain grown in the prairie territory between Winnipeg and Edmonton and in the rich valley of British Columbia, opened up by the Grand Trunk Pacific-Transcontinental Line now in full operation to the Pacific Coast.

The man who feeds the allies is the man of the hour and the visitor sees him surrounded by the splendid products of this labour and the patriotic side of his enterprise is fittingly emphasized.

The beauties of the Dominion are shown in a series of mural paintings running completely around the Pavilion and in a hundred bromides and illuminated transparencies.

For the sportsman the magnificent hunting and fishing districts of the Highlands of Ontario have supplied their finest specimens of game heads and mounted fish to invite the angler and the hunter out into the wilds.

The route of the Dominion's New Transcontinental train, "The National" is shown on the original historic map 25 feet long, which was prepared for the inspection of Canada's Parliament.

The Grand Trunk exhibit is indeed a presentation of all that the Dominion has to offer in lovely scenery, fertile lands and splendid sport.

Eat More ICE CREAM

IT'S GOOD FOR YOU

The way people are eating Hooper's Ice Cream is amazing.

The reason is simple. People are finding out how GOOD it is and they are using it as a DAILY FOOD instead of as occasional luxury.

The food value of Hooper's Ice Cream is startling. A quart of our Ice Cream has the same food value as a whole pound and a half of Round Steak.

RICHARD HALL & SON LIMITED

BOSTON RECTOR SAYS UNITED STATES SHOULD ASSIST THE ALLIES

Examiner Special:

BOSTON, Mass., Aug. 30.—Rev. G. C. Richmond, rector of St. John's Episcopal Church, Philadelphia, who refused to marry John Jacob Astor, today jumped to his feet at a meeting of the Boston Ministers' Union and followed up the peace prayers of his fellow ministers by shouting:

"We have prayed long enough. Let us stop the war with one good fight rather than continue to pray for peace while our manufacturers go on making munitions to keep the warring armies going. Rather than draft a lot of resolutions calling on eminent men of the belligerent nations of the world to pray, let us draft a resolution imploring President Wilson to call together Congress and set in motion the machinery which will send our army and navy to Mexico to stop that war and after that is done let us send the army and navy to Europe on the side of the allies to stop that war, with 'peace and justice.' Our neutrality cries are damnable nonsense."

BRICK FOR THE STREET CAR TRACKS

"Wire Cut" Brick Will Be Used on the Streets to Be Paved This Year

At last night's meeting of the Board of Works Ald. Dobbin ventured to ask if the quality of brick to be used between the street car tracks north of McDonnel street was inferior to that used on the downtown section of the street. They were rougher and lacked the smooth finish of the brick at present in use. City Engineer Parsons informed the Board that the brick referred to by Ald. Dobbin was much superior to the pressed brick at present in use. They were technically known as "wire cut" brick. They were better for being rough as they hold the grout to much better advantage. This explanation satisfied Ald. Dobbin, as well as the Board.

Plan Will Be Registered

Was Approved of at Last Night's Meeting of the Board of Works

A plan representing a piece of property owned by Mr. D. W. Dumble at the corner of Manning avenue and Aylmer street was approved of by the Board of Works at last night's meeting. The block in which the property is located, is bounded by Manning avenue, Benson street, O'Carrall avenue and Aylmer street. The reason for having this piece of property again presented for registration is due to Mr. Dumble's desire to provide for a lane at the rear of the lots. The Board will recommend that Mr. Dumble be given permission to have the plan as submitted, registered. The question of restricting the class of houses that shall be erected throughout the city was given passing consideration, but nothing definite decided upon, as the Board realize that to inaugurate a policy of that kind would involve sweeping changes and as matters stand would be beyond the scope of the Board.

Stoney Lake Breezes

Wow! how it rains
On the panes
Pitchforks, razers,
Coloured infants, and remains
Of cats, dogs and aeroplanes!
And it roars,
While it pours
As the farmer does his chores
In diving bells, and bote
Postholes in the atmosphere
To find his gates and doors.
O, it's grand to be a farmer
To poke 'round in an ark.

That's the way William Allan White puts it, and he seems to know. This certainly has been a wet season, or as one cottager put it "The weather has been simply rotten." However, we are not so bad as the poor farmer, with his many misfortunes.

The season of 1915 will soon be over. Nearly everybody is going down this week, except the few stay-a-whiles.

It is with pleasure we notice that Mr. Cleve Hooper, the popular young Postmaster at Juniper Island, has succeeded in capturing the Albert Matthews' scholarship, consisting of $100 cash and free tuition in the arts course for four years in McMaster University. Mr. Hooper has won scholarships for five years in succession during his course in the Harbord Collegiate.

Mr. William B. Choate and Mrs. Knight of Aurora, Ill., are the guest of Mr. A. Choate, McCracken's Landing.

ELLIOT'S

BROOKLYN YOUTH WINS RAPID PROMOTION IN BRITISH ARMY

Examiner Special:

NEW YORK, Aug. 31.—In a letter received from London, Harry McLean Carter, who, without military experience, enlisted in a Canadian regiment and went to England, James A. Carter of No. 79 Morton street, Williamstown, is informed that the young man has been commissioned a lieutenant in the Third Battery of the Worcestershire Regiment, and is doing duty as an instructing officer at Wergret Camp, Wareham, Dorsetshire.

Lieutenant Carter, who is twenty-two years old, was graduated with honors from Townsend Harris High School two years ago. Since then he made several trips through the Sierra Nevada Mountains as a member of a surveying party. Soon after the war began he decided to enter one of the training camps in Canada. He was accepted as a recruit at Valcartier, and later was sent to England.

In his letter Lieutenant Carter says he is "thoroughly fired of camp life, and anxious for duty in the trenches." He adds that he would prefer to obtain a commission in the flying corps, where he can have a little more excitement.

"Things are getting just a little but monotonous over here at present," he wrote. "My regiment has gone over to France and about twenty of the extra officers are left behind. It's a nice old place here very quiet and very dull. We send drafts about once a week to replace casualties, and we are each waiting our turn.

"I could get into the Royal Flying Corps here, but it is so crowded that it would be months before I would be admitted. The pay is so much better there, and I find it pretty hard to make both ends meet. A lot of chaps are in the same boat. I have been wanting to take a flying corps course for a long time, as it is the most exciting branch of the service.

"I am of curse, pretty fit and, on the whole, fairly happy. I have made a lot of friends over here. The country is lovely and I go off on an occasional motor trip with friends. England is filled with the wounded. Otherwise life is fairly normal, and, in places, seems absolutely untouched."

Miss Marguerite Carter, Lieutenant Carter's sister, who recently was graduated from high school, is trying to obtain her father's permission to go to the front as a Red Cross nurse.

Russian Peasants' Lot Is Better Since Vodka Ukase

Special to The Examiner:

Conditions in the interior of Russia are described in a late issue of the Svenska Dagbladet, Stockholm, by a Swedish civil engineer recently returned from an extensive business journey. He had travelled through Western Russia to Shitomir, near the Austrian border, and made a trip to Omsk, Perm and Petrograd.

"Generally speaking," he says, "Russia appears calm and peaceful, in spite of the war. Apart from the transport trains of troops, prisoners and wounded, one notices few traces of war in the interior of the country. Hotels and restaurants, of course, have raised their prices considerably, and railroad tickets cost seventy-five per cent. more than in times of peace, but on the whole, prices of food and other necessities are about normal. In one respect, it must be admitted, a wonderful change has taken place, which is directly attributable to the beneficial influence of the anti-vodka ukase. The peasant looks more tidy and respectable than before, and no one sees them under the influence of liquor nowadays. Their wives and children, who formerly used to be dressed in rags, are decently clothed and even have shoes on their feet, a thing in the days when vodka drinking was in vogue. These latter and not the peasantry are ill able to get leave, through illness, because only by the great masses of the people vodka is absolutely unobtainable.

"In the larger cities enormous numbers of recruits are being constantly drilled and sent off to the front as soon as they acquire the requisite proficiency in the handling of arms. It is ridiculous to say that Russia might have to quit the war on account of lack of soldiers. There is still an enormous supply of human material to draw on, and this material is all the time being moulded into the proper shape. On the other hand the scarcity of arms and ammunition, whereby to equip the multitudes awaiting the call to the battle line, is of grave concern. No secret is made of this shortcoming, nor is the people held in ignorance about the various phases of the war. Victories and defeats are freely announced to the public, but no casualty lists are ever given out. In order to get news about a person with the colours, one must apply to one of the official information bureaus.

"As to the prisoners of war, there is no reason for complaint, except perhaps on the part of those who have been sent to the remotest regions of Siberia. The Swedish engineer spoke to several captive German officers in various places and none of them seemed to have any serious grievance on account of the treatment received. Some difference is made, however, between German and Austrian prisoners. At first all were treated alike, but the Germans were often very unruly and caused the prison camp authorities much trouble. As a consequence German prisoners, in many localities, are kept strictly interned, while the Austrians are allowed considerable freedom. In some prison camps Austrian officers are permitted to roam around at will all day long, simply reporting their parole.

"In Omsk there are about 40,000 Austrian and a few thousand German prisoners. Among the former an excellent military band has been formed, which gives concerts every evening in a public park. Both German and Austrian marches and airs are played and evoke as much applause as the Russian pieces. Some German prisoners have been assigned to farm work and appear to be fairly well satisfied with their conditions.

Two sailors at a dock-side were gazing at a skeleton which had so much hair that it looked more like a woollen mat than a dog. "Which end is it?" Tom asked one. "Blowed if I know," was the reply. "But see, I'll stick a pin in 'im, and you look which end barks!"

A New Brand Of Road Oil Will Be Used

Board of Works Committee Recommend the Purchase of One Tank of Crown Oil—Result of the Analysis

COST OF ANALYSIS

Road oil and its composition formed the piece de resistance of last night's meeting of the Board of Works. City Engineer Parsons no sooner informed the Board that he was in possession of an analysis of four brands of the substance than two-thirds of the Board took out their pencils and proceeded to wrestle with the technical difficulties of a road oil analysis, which revolved around flash point, solubility, asphaltic content and innumerable other elements. One element that was lacking according to the analytical report of the Milton, Hersey and Company of Montreal was designated as asphaltic content. This was supposed to be present in each grade of oil in quantity, ranging from forty to sixty per cent., whereas the analysis failed to reveal a greater quantity than sixteen per cent. and as low as less than one per cent. City Engineer Parsons assumed that the companies offering the oil for sale, deducted certain elements and called the residue consisting of a black oily substance, asphaltic content.

Recommended Two Brands.

The four brands of oil which figured in the test represented the product of the British American, the Canadian, The Imperial, and the Crown Oil Companies, respectively. Milton Hersey and Company closed their report by recommending that the use of either the Canadian or the Crown brand with a preference for the cheapest oil of the two, claiming, there was little or no difference in quality. The other two oils were said to be of a lighter nature. So far the city has used the product of the Imperial and the British American Oil Companies. City Engineer Parsons said so far as he could determine there was no practical difference between the two and that if anything the Imperial was probably the best.

It was moved by Ald. Edgar, and seconded by Ald. Saunders that one tank of Crown Oil be purchased. Ald. Stratton and Ald. Dobbin moved in amendment that the matter be left in the hands of Ald. Green, chairman of the Board, and City Engineer Parsons. The original motion carried. The deciding vote was cast by the chairman, who remarked the Board that he had assumed similar responsibility earlier in the season, and had not received the censure that he thought he was entitled to.

Ald. Stratton wished to know if the bottom crust or part of the tank while Hunter Street East was being oiled. It was very thick and sticky when first applied. City Engineer Parsons said that the road was very hard and there was little sand or loose dirt on the thoroughfare, with the result that the oil was not absorbed to the same extent as it was on other streets.

The analysis will cost the city $40 which is at the rate of $10 for each sample tested.

LOCAL LABOUR IS SAID TO BE SCARCE

One of the Paving Companies Claim to Experience Difficulty in Securing Sufficient Men —Must Register at the City Hall

The question as to whether the paving companies are paying a fair wage was raised at last night's meeting of the Board of Works by Ald. Stratton. It was felt by some that the companies were taking advantage of the labour situation; if so the matter should be looked into. One of the objects of the city undertaking so much paving this year was to give the working man a chance to obtain employment. In reply City Engineer Parsons said he did not think the companies were paying as much as the city. Ald. Green said he interviewed the local manager of one of the companies when he found that the wages were inclined to be somewhat low and was advised that some difficulty had been experienced in securing good workmen. The wages have since been raised, with the exception of one of two men who are said to be getting less than twenty cents an hour. One of the companies claim it is difficult to secure a sufficient number of men, and that all men in possession of a proper certificate furnished by the City Engineer are employed on some public work or other. The company was in immediate need of fifteen additional men, but could not secure them, as the register at the City Hall does not contain the names of that many idle men. The object of compelling men to register at the City Engineer's office is to prevent an influx of outsiders, preference being given to local men with families.

Six Dollars Each From Six Gamblers

Police Court Toll This Morning —One of the Men Enlisted Yesterday Morning

The city gathered in a few sheckels this morning through the police court's exactions from transgressors. Each of the early Sunday morning gamblers whose watches were slow, were taxed $5.00 and costs, amounting to over $6.60, which would have been a decent first payment on a good watch.

Howard Innis was fined $10 for being drunk while on the Indian list. The offence was committed on May 24th, but the papers had not been served before.

"Give me a few days to pay it," asked Innis.

"Ten days" was the limit set by the Court.

Enos Mayette, remanded from a week ago, on a charge of vagrancy, was ready to go to work this morning.

"He has been sober the last two weeks," said the Magistrate.

"Yes, and I was sober when they got me," replied Mayette.

In order to give the man a chance to return to work, to enlist, or do something worth while, judgment was reserved for two weeks.

One of the gamblers (a five-cent ante scarcely merits the names) went up to the armouries yesterday morning and enlisted. He also paid his fine. Other of the sextette were also seen around the Armouries, but probably some of them failed to pass the doctors. Saturday night's game was small stuff compared with some of the games that might be mentioned, and is in the limelight simply because this bunch happened to be caught.

Oatmeal or wheatmeal porridge is quite sufficient for breakfast with milk and bread and butter to follow, and fresh lettuce or stewed rhubarb

Byersville Boasts Brand New Concrete Sidewalk

The Suburb Likewise Employed Township Labour to Exclusion of City Workmen.

Byersville's pretensions to civic estate recently produced a stretch of cement sidewalk on Chamberlen and Boundary streets converging at the front door of J. W. Byers' store. On the north side of Chamberlen street, in North Monaghan, of course, the new side walk extends out to the Salvation Army's Sunday School. The walk was constructed by day labour under the supervision of Mr. Dan Mahoney and from all appearances none but Monaghan ratepayers were employed. So there. That's a come back at the city's edict against labourers and teamsters from outside our boundaries.

This new sidewalk will be paid for entirely on a frontage basis and most of the expense will be met by Mr. Byers, who is apparently bearing his share of the improvements to the southwestern suburb.

Pte. Phipps Will Be Invalided Home

The Muscles of His Leg Were Shot Away—Wound Has Healed Up

Mrs. Phipps, 2 Fradette avenue, has received another letter from Miss Gladys Clark, a nursing sister, who frequently visits the hospital in which Private Arthur Phipps, of the Peterborough Detachment, 2nd Battalion, is located. The letter reads as follows:

"Thank you very much for the letter, also the postcard. I was very pleased to hear from you. I have been going to see your son every week since I last wrote to you, and he has got on splendidly and can walk without even a stick now. He is very well and seems quite happy and cheerful. I asked the medical officer at the hospital if he would be able to go on active service again and he said 'no!' When he leaves the hospital, he hopes to be able to do in a few weeks' time. I except he will get his discharge and go back to Canada. I think they can have some furlough in England first if they want to, but I am not sure about this. There is now a nice new club in London at which the Canadian soldiers can stay. It is called the "Maple Leaf Club," and I have given your boy all the particulars about it, should he want any place to stay. Premier Borden inspected it a few days ago.

Nature of the Wound.

You say you know how bad the wounds are. He had the muscles of his leg shot out. The wound has healed up but the foot drops. I do not know if time will cure this, but I should think it will get much strong. I showed your son the postcard and he said he knew the boat well. He would like to tell you that a great many troops — Mr. Wilson — was going to see him to-day.

I have just got a letter from Miss Yarrow as she told Phipps the other day when she went round the hospital that she was going to write to you. She is the daughter of Mr. Yarrow who provided the hospital for the soldiers when the war started. It used to be a convalescent home for children. I am enclosing you a postcard of the building.

You must have a terribly anxious time with so many relatives at the front. Your family have indeed done well. I am very glad to be able to send such a good report of your son.

Yours sincerely,
GLADYS CLARK.

PARIS "REDS" GO BRAVELY TO WAR

One Leader Becomes Corporal and Aspires to Be a Lieutenant in Army

PARIS, Aug 30. The militant anarchists, whose exploits furnished before the war, but who dropped out of sight immediately after the general mobilization, have been found by the police to be doing their patriotic duty. With only a few exceptions those who were exempt from military service in France volunteered and have distinguished themselves.

Pilet, secretary of the "soldier-' union, and a most aggressive anarchist, who took part in the fighting in the Ardennes in August, writes of German terrorism in the region and terminates:

"The monstrous butchery will cost all of us nameless sacrifice and sorrow, but we shall hold out to the end."

Old Anarchy Haunts Deserted.

The old haunts of anarchy in Paris are deserted. Only a few of the old guard are left and they are occupied with patriotic correspondence with their comrades at the front. They will show with pride a letter from a former fiery propagandist, Prof. M. F., the most militant of all the anti-militarists after Gustax Herve, who has won corporal's stripes and aspires to those of a lieutenant. He does not try even to himself, to explain the mental process that has made him such an excellent soldier.

"I try to earn pardon for my military honours," he says, "by rendering all the justice possible to the sixty men under me. I have in them sixty comrades sixty friends. They call themselves my soldiers; I am sure none of them ever heard or read my doctrines before the war. I think it is mostly the hope that this will be the last of those horrible things called war as a synonym for a thousand hells, the hope that our dear ones our children, shall not have to cut each other's throats again, gives one something like superhuman ardor."

Radicals Doing Duty.

Even the open advocates of the "reprise directe," the forcible seizing of other people's property, the apologists of the assassination of the innocent people are doing their duty.

Marrejeon, the divorced husband of one of the heroines of the Bonnet band, the former director of the paper Anarchie, himself involved in their exploits, but not convicted of murder, is recovering from a dangerous wound.

Alexander Lerebourg, the double of "Britannicus," the bandit of Orleans, whose real identity is still a mystery, was serving a sentence for desertion when the war broke out.

"It's only in peace," he declared, "that I am anti-militarist; in war my place is at the front." His petition for reforme and incorporation in the army was granted and he fought valiantly with his regiment of the African battalion. After they had cut up the German imperial guard in the battle of the Marne he was taken prisoner in a manner detailed above.

Capt. Cameron Is Adjutant of the 39th

Peterborough Boy Writing to the Examiner Gives Some Interesting Views of Lydd Camp

Lydd Camp, 39th Batt., C.E.F., D Company.

To the Editor of The Examiner,

Just a few lines to you as we are a little slack as regards the welfare of the old boys of the 57th Regiment, Peterborough Rangers. Although I was not a member before the third contingent was organized I took pride in it afterwards, being acquainted with the Sheehan boys, now living on on Queen street.

I was a member of the 46th Regt., D Co., unit, in Millbrook for upwards of three years. Lt.-Col. Preston, Major McLaughlin and Captain C. R. Spencer are my old officers. Captain C. R. Cameron of the 57th, has been appointed adjutant, and the boys are very proud of it and wish him greater success, although we regret to lose him from D Co.

The last two or three mornings have been interesting to us to get up at 3.30 and 4 o'clock, so as to be at the ranges early. It is about 1 1-2 or 2 miles to the ranges. The majority of the Peterboro boys are doing well at shooting. I think when the Galloping 39th, as we are sometimes called, get to the front, the Kaiser will say, here comes the 39th Canadians—"Good-bye!" and peace will be declared. We had a beautiful voyage over and have had a good reception wherever we go. I myself overheard a party say the other day that they liked the Canadian soldiers as they are such good and fine husky fellows. We generally get back from the ranges about 9.30 or ten o'clock; then we clean up our tents and afterwards have an inspection of rifles, and then there are other necessary duties to do around the camp.

A few old Examiners would be welcomed by the boys so as to know what is going on at home, letters, cards, papers, etc., will be welcome.

Walter Elliott has been promoted to Lance Corporal and is doing well at it, also many others too numerous to mention. Bruce Clark is in our tent, and he is our famous warrior.

We are having lovely weather now at Lydd, but it was very disagreeable for us at Cæsar's camp, Folkestone. We have no idea when we are leaving here as we are taking up musketry for two weeks. We have also been issued another blanket, ready for a winter campaign if necessary. We have our breakfast brought down to the ranges and have breakfast about 6.30 o'clock. We are close to the British Regulars and the Royal Garrison Artillery and they are a fine bunch of men. They have just come back from Bermuda looking fine after their strenuous work.

We miss the Canadian apple pies, and that good Senator tobacco and Old Chum. Bruce Clark has a watch which he calls the Peterboro market clock.

Our lieutenant, Mr. McPhon lately bought four mouth organs for his platoon when we go "route marching," and has made Lance Corporal Elliott bandmaster.

Pte. E. S. Smith received a good box of cake, etc., from Mrs. E. S. Smith, Canada, and it was much appreciated by the boys of this tent. Pte. Fred Leach took a course in transport, and all you can hear in the night is "Whoa, Maud; back up, you are in your wrong stall." I myself sleep so soundly that I never hear reveille sound in the morning.

We send our best wishes to all Peterborough friends, and good luck go with you all till we come back with the victory for "England and Canada."

From Arthur Moscrop,
D Co., 57th Detachment.

Wrist Watch To Mr. G. S. Taylor

Presented By His Friends In Connection With His Enlistment and Departure With the 33rd Battery at Kingston

Mr. G. Stanley Taylor, of 472 Mark street, who enlisted with the 33rd Battery and leaves to-morrow morning for Barriefield, was the recipient of a wrist watch from a number of his friends last night. He was surprised when a party of forty called at his home to bid him farewell. During the evening Mr. Henry Paterson made the presentation of a military wrist watch with an illuminated dial for night use. Mr. Charles Brown and Mr. H. B. Cowle read short speeches referring to Mr. Taylor and his departure for active service. The ladies of the party served refreshments.

Milk jugs and basins should always be rinsed in cold water before being washed in hot. Hot water used first sets the curd and the surface, so then not so easily cleaned.

THE PETES IN KHAKI

Peterborough, Aug. 31st, 1915.
To the Editor of The Examiner:

Sir,—The following lines were written by me this morning, and I am setting them to simple music, hoping they may be acceptable to the officers and men of the 80th Battalion.

Yours truly,
Richard J. Devey.

The call to arms is stern and strong,
Be ready for the fray.
The Brit, the Frank, the Russ, the Jap
Will spoil "Ger-huns" "The Day."
But not by tens or hundreds,
But by millions o'er the sea,
And Peterboroughs quota will
Well in the thousands be.

Chorus—

So give a cheer and then a cheer
For the Petes in khaki dress,
The boys already in the fight
Now need you, that's no guess
For Empire, home, and those we love
Shall be our battle song,
God Save the King, O, Canada,
We sing and march along
Chorus—

Brave Bennet, Stevens, Dean and more
Will never come from France
The noble courage they displayed
We may, we will enhance
Our 80th Battalion
Is one answer to the call,
Our country boys are in the line,
To fight, to win, or fall

Chorus—

Quit you like men, be strong, St. Paul
The men of Corinth told,
Our Empire's flag, for freedom's cause
Unfurls with crosses bold.
Enrol, enrol, now is the time,
Twice given is swiftest aid
In Men, Red Cross and knit supplies
To stem the Ger-huns raid.

EXPLANATION AND APOLOGY

The following appeared in last night's Review in connection with recent articles appearing in both local papers relating to Mr. Joseph Stewart

The Review stated on Friday that Mr Joseph Stewart license inspector, had ordered his Review to be stopped. That is true. The paragraph further intimated that Mr. Stewart was on the "free list" of subscribers. This information was not true, and was due probably to the assumption that Mr Stewart, by virtue of his office of license inspector, was on the free exchange list for checking over advertisements. Mr. Stewart was not on the free list, and the Review regrets very much that the paragraph contained this inaccuracy. However much provocation there was on either side was no excuse for stating what was untrue, but, since this did occur, the Review apologizes for any injustice occasioned by it, and trusts that this explanation will correct any misunderstanding that may have arisen. The Review has no desire to publish anything untrue, or to injure anyone, whether friend or foe, by doing so. It is only right that we should add that Mr. Stewart has not approached us regarding what is here written. It is undertaken on the responsibility of the undersigned, who trusts that the unfortunate mistake will be speedily forgotten and that no hard feelings will result. Had the item proceeded through the regular course, it would undoubtedly not have been published."

Treasurer—Geo. L. Trent, Bridge.

The sum of sixty dollars, proceeds of the recent regatta held by the association, was voted to the Red Cross Fund.

Stock Markets

New York Stocks

Shearson, Hammill & Co. Indications all point to a continuance of the advance, but until German policy in regard to submarine warfare is settled believe stocks should only be bought on weak spots.

Jenks, Gwynne & Co. General situation and outlook unchanged. Believe stocks are a purchase on setbacks, but for the present would take profits on all strong points.

E. and C. Randolph. No decline of importance need therefore be expected unless some adverse developments occur. On the other hand all of the news recently has been of a favorable character and it would seem to require something new to again start the market upward

Laidlaw & Co. Germany may be anxious to secure the good offices of the United States in the matter of arranging the terms of peace, but this may not be of much immediate importance from the stock market point of view, although there may be such an ultimate purpose at Berlin

Post & Flagg. One good feature in the market is that interest is spreading from one group of industrials to another, and is not confined to the war specialties. If so far has not included the railways, although we believe that with the excellent July statements now being made this group will gradually come into better favor

Sun. A powerful and resourceful party is firmly committed to the speculative bull account.

Wall Street Journal. Large interests are quietly taking stocks as they are offered.

Dividends to be Declared.
Dividends to be declared in the next fortnight follow:

To-morrow, Southern Pacific, 1 1-2 per cent. September 1—American Sugar Refining, common, 1 3-4 per cent; American Sugar Refinery, preferred, 1 3-4 per cent. New York Air Brake, 1 1-2 per cent. United Cigar Stores, preferred, 1 3-4 per cent; Union Pacific, common, 2 per cent. Union Pacific preferred 2 per cent. September 3—General Electric 2 per cent. Utah Consolidated Copper 50c. September 2—Brooklyn Rapid Transit, 1 1-2 per cent. September 10—National Enameling and Stamping, preferred, 1 3-4 per cent.

$44,000,000 From England.
Forty-four million dollars in gold and securities, Europe's second shipment to the United States within the past fortnight, arrived here yesterday morning. While New York was going to early up-town it was carted through the streets to the Sub-Treasury and deposited, making, with the $52,000,000 that arrived two weeks ago, a total of $96,000,000.

The treasure was placed to the credit of J. P. Morgan & Co., and will be used to pay for the war munitions and food for the allies' armies, and incidentally to prevent a further decline in the price of sterling and francs.

THE RUSSIANS COUNTER ATTACK ON A WIDE FRONT IN GALICIA

Slavs Make a Successful Stand Capturing 3000 Germans and Taking Thirty Cannon---Pegoud, Famous French Aviator Has Been Killed.

ITALIAN TROOPS ARE PROGRESSING

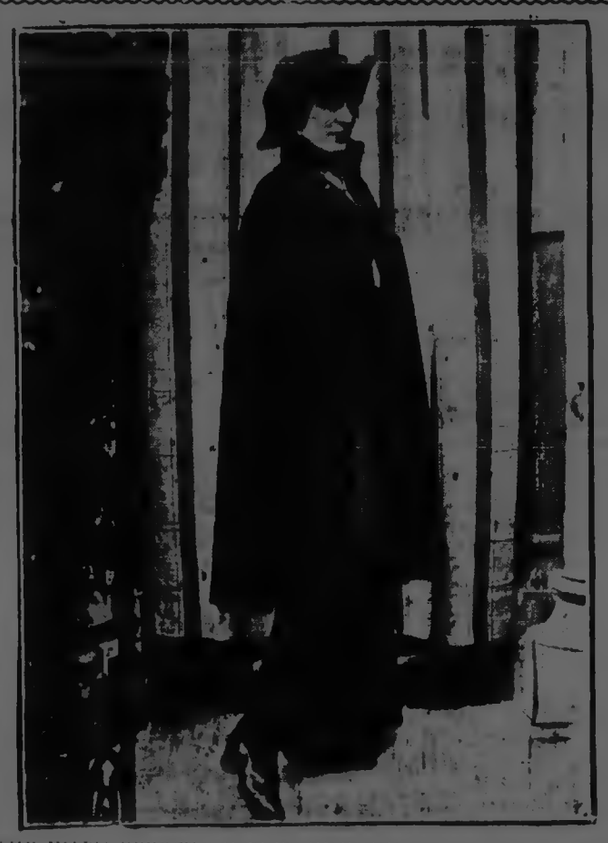
Special Cable to The Examiner:

PETROGRAD, Sept. 1.—Successful counter-attacks on a wide front in Galicia are officially reported. Three thousand Germans were taken, and thirty cannon.

LONDON, Sept. 1.—The latest moves indicate the Balkans are again swinging to the side of the Allies. It is believed the Teutonic advance against Rumania may be begun any time, Rumanit having refused the German offers.

PARIS, Sept. 1.—Adolphe Pegoud, the noted French aviator, termed "terror of Huns," was killed on Tuesday.

MILAN, Sept. 1.—Italian troops are making further progress toward Trent. The summit of Monte Lista has been captured.



THE WAR'S EFFECT ON BRITISH FASHIONS.—The photograph shows a woman with a hat modelled after naval design and known as the Jellicoe hat in honour of the famous admiral, worn in combination with a military cape.

ONWARD TO BERLIN

"Kaiser gives in to Wilson." Extract from Mail and Empire.

Kaiser makes a promise
To pay Uncle Sam.
For the blood that was shed
It seems like a sham
The Lusitania
Horrid massacre
Was finally settled
By mutual agree

Chorus

Neutrals, join the allies.
They are sure to win.
Quit you like men, be strong.
Onward to Berlin

Arabic passengers
Met a watery grave.
It may have been ordained
All sank in the wave.
Their friends are left to mourn
At an awful cost.
For nothing can repay
The lives that were lost

Chorus

Neutrals join the allies
They are sure to win
Quit you like men, be strong
Onward to Berlin

The Lusitania.
Deplorable plot.
Horrid willful murder
Cannot be forgot.
To President Wilson
The Kaiser gave in
But the ghosts of the dead
Will still haunt Berlin

Chorus

No more join the allies
They are sure to win
Quit you like men, be strong
Onward to Berlin

The outcome of the war
I hope will be good
To bind every nation
In one brotherhood
For everlasting peace
And good will to men
That war may ever cease
For evermore. Amen!

Chorus

Neutrals join the allies
They are sure to win
Quit you like men, be strong
Onward to Berlin

GERMANY HAS NOW RAISED THE AGE LIMIT TO 54 YEARS

Men Up to That Age and Those Not Considered Before as Physically Fit Are Being Called to the Colours

Special Cable to The Examiner:

COPENHAGEN, Denmark, Aug. 31.—The Folkeblad, of Holding, a frontier journal with excellent sources of information in Germany, states that there was recently an altercation in the Reichstag concerning a national service law, which the German papers are forbidden to discuss. "The law will increase the age limit to 54," the newspaper says. "It authorizes the calling out of all men who hitherto have been rejected on account of their physical condition, including even those who previously have not been considered fit for the untrained landsturm."

GEN. F. C. LLOYD AMONG WOUNDED.

LONDON, Aug. 31.—Brig-Gen. F. C. Lloyd has been wounded at the Dardanelles. His name was included among those of 69 officers killed or wounded made public here to-day.

BERLIN ON BULGARIA'S ATTITUDE.

BERLIN, Aug. 31 (via London).—The correspondent at Sofia of the Vossische Zeitung telegraphed to-day an outline of the proposal made to Bulgaria on both sides of the diplomatic contest. His despatch says: "The conditions which the quadruple entente imposed on Bulgaria in return for territorial concession in Macedonia stipulated that Bulgaria obligated itself to declare war on Turkey. The central powers and Turkey, for their part, demanded from Bulgaria in return for cession of a portion of Turkish Thrace, an extension of the hitherto existing benevolent neutrality. What this consists of had best be kept silent for the moment. It will make itself apparent later, as soon as events on the Danube front have advanced far enough."

HYPHENS AT WORK IN UNITED STATES.

ST. LOUIS, Mo., Aug. 31.—Fifty handbills, calling on German and Irish patriots in America to help end the European war by dynamiting factories and railroads engaged in the manufacture and transportation of war supplies for the Allies, were turned over to the postmaster here to-day by G. A. Hoehn, editor of a labour paper. The handbills were wrapped in copies of the Hanover Anzeiger, and postmarked Blomberg, a small town near Hanover. Certain factories and railroads are designated in the handbills for destruction.

Lt.-Col. Brennan Tells of End of Campaign In German S. W. Africa

LONDON, Aug. 31.—The most bloodless battle of the war preceded the capture by French and British troops of the German fortress of Garua, in Kamerun, Western Africa.

For three hours the allies sent shells crashing against the German positions, according to official reports just received here. The Germans replied with an equally violent cannonade.

The German garrison of 37 officers and 270 men finally surrendered. Not a man had been killed or wounded and the most serious damage was done by a French shell which struck a dentist's chair. The allies had not a single casualty to report.

ATHENS, Aug. 31.—A British submarine has shelled and partly destroyed the bridge at Galata, suburb of Constantinople. Advices received here to-day said the submarine's appearance caused a panic near the water front.

The foregoing is important, if true, but attempts on the Galata bridge have been reported before without official confirmation following.

Swedish Socialist Editor Says War Will Last Another Year

Examiner Special

Mr. Hjalmar Branting, an editor and a leader of the Socialist party in Sweden, who returned recently to Stockholm after a trip of five weeks in the warring countries, said in an interview that the war would last at least another year.

"The burden of the war," he said, "is being borne with great patience by the people everywhere. The English probably look for the longest duration of the conflict. We will stick it out for years if need be. What one hears on every side in England, in Germany and France there is no talk about peace at all. The Germans contend that they are fighting for their national existence and in such case there is no use thinking of a possible time limit. The French on the other hand, avert that they will not give the slightest thought to peace until their country has been cleared of the Chinese invaders.

"Everywhere more account is being taken of the Scandinavian countries than formerly. Only a couple of years ago Sir Edward Grey himself was not quite certain whether Sweden used the Russian calendar or the Gregorian. Now both he and the rest of his countrymen have found it to their interest to get better acquainted with the little Northern kingdom."

Public Charges Are Not Beneficiaries of Life Assurance

A census was taken about a year ago of the inmates of alms houses, of prisons, of asylums for the care of the helpless, in an eastern state. It was found but three of the occupants of these institutions, who numbered altogether over fifteen hundred, had been beneficiaries of life insurance.

It was somebody's neglect that forced the public to pay higher taxes in order to take care of nearly all these people.

Life insurance limits the needs of poorhouses, prisons, old folks' homes. Life insurance, therefore, reduces the needs of the State in maintaining institutions for the care of the needy.

The man who has sufficient insurance to take care of his own future if he reaches old age, and of his dependents, should anything happen to him, is doing his duty, not only to his family, but to his State.

WOULD YOU CONSIDER

a proposition making provision for your family in the event of death, or, if living, provision for old age?

AN EXCURSION TO GROWE'S LANDING

Should the weather be fine the excursion to Growe's Landing to-morrow under the auspices of St. Paul's Congregation, Lakefield, and St. Mary's Congregation, Young's Point, promises to be a great success. The event has been eagerly looked for and by a great many people for a considerable time and it is expected that a very large company will take advantage of the pleasant trip to one of the beauty spots in Kawartha Lakes. The steamer "Stoney Lake" is timed to leave Lakefield at 9.45 a.m. on the arrival of the morning train from Peterborough, and to return in time to make connections with the 6.30 p.m. train for Peterborough.

The following gentlemen have charge of the arrangements: Fred Young, Jas. F. Garvey, Francis Walsh, M.P., Kennedy, V.S., Roland Johnson, Ambrose Coughlin, Victor Young, Dr. S. J. Gibson and Rev. Father Meagher.

5 BOXES CURED PSORIASIS.

Mrs. Nettie Massey, Sommerson, Ont., writes: "Three doctors described my trouble as psoriasis, and one said I could never be cured. The disease spread all over me, even on my face and head and the itching and burning was hard to bear. I used eight boxes of Dr. Chase's Ointment and am entirely cured—not a sign of a sore to be seen. I can hardly praise this Ointment enough."

EVEN THE BIRDS SHUN GERMANIZED BELGIUM

Examiner Special

HARTFORD, Conn., Aug. 31.—Switzerland is on the verge of war, but is wavering whether to cast its lot with the Allies or Germany, is the assertion of Mme. L'Hoste in a letter to her sister, Mrs. Percy Rothwell, of Laurel street, this city. Mme. L'Hoste, who is a native of Switzerland, writes she only recently has succeeded in reaching there from Belgium, where she was living when hostilities began. Her husband, who is a Presbyterian clergyman, has been unable to leave Belgium.

Mme. L'Hoste says the Germans in Belgium were a cruel and heavy yoke. They do not allow even organ playing, singing in churches or services. She says all letters are supposed to bear censorship and that many are destroyed or held by German censors. Even the birds have deserted Belgium, she says, under German rule.

Sympathy in the northern part of Switzerland, she writes, is strong for the Allies, but in the southern part sentiment favors the Germans and Austrians. The Swiss will rise as one man, however, she declares, to resist the first country to commit a breach of neutrality.

"I don't see why every one raves over Adele's voice. Louise, for example, has a far richer tone." "Yes, but Adele has a far richer father."

Glasses a Necessity

Glasses are becoming a greater necessity every day, because of the increased tax that modern civilization places upon the eyes. Small newspaper type, music lessons, long school hours, fine machine sewing, close application to office work—to say nothing of night work, moving picture shows, etc., etc.

If you are misusing the only eyes you will ever have you had better see us at once. You save nothing by delay, and the longer you put it off the harder it will be for us to give you perfect vision again.

Reason and Experience had a dispute as to which of them is the more necessary.

"No matter what situation arises, I is only necessary to bring me to bear upon it," said Reason, "and the solution is bound to come."

"After which," said Experience, smiling gently, "it remains for me to demonstrate that your solution is wrong" —Life.

CZAR REED'S EARLY DAYS.

His Life in the Navy and His Tribute to its Officers.

It is not generally known that Thomas Brackett Reed served in the United States navy, but he told in a speech his own story of his naval experience, and his photograph as a young man in naval costume taken in 1864 is one of the priceless relics of the family:

"The navy means to me far different things from what it does to many here. To the distinguished admiral (Steedman) who sits beside me and to the distinguished admiral (Jenkins) who sits opposite it means the shriek of shot and shell, the horrors of the blockade. To me it meant no roaring wind, no shriek of shot and shell, but level water and the most delightful time of my life, for I was on a gunboat on the Mississippi river after the valor and courage of you gentlemen had driven the enemy off. * * * You see, I kept a grocery store for the government and well remember how I was tumbled aboard ship the first day with the provisions and small stores and a set of books, and the boat steamed up the magnificent defiles of the Tennessee. * * * But I also suffered for my country. How well I remember the fatal day when I drew $5,000 from the bank. The first time I counted the bills there was only $4,800. The next time it came out $5,200. I sweltered over it in the bank that hot August day, but it never would come out two times alike. Then in utter despair I bundled it up, took it aboard, locked myself in my office and there in grim despair wrestled with it alone. And, lo and behold, there was just $5,000—just what the bank clerk told me there was!

"It was a delightful life—thirteen hundred dollars a year and one ration and nothing to do. My sad heart hath often panted for it since. However, I learned that my country could support me, and I am bound to say it has faithfully done so ever since. What a charming life that was, that dear old life in the navy! I knew all the regulations, and the rest of them didn't. I had all my rights and most of theirs. * * *

"Do you wonder that I stand up for the navy? I want it increased, and I have solid reason for it. It means something to me.

"Mr. Commander and companions, I have made this speech to you in the lightest vein because I have no right to use any other. The brave faces that I see before me have been bared to the shock of battle and storm. You have seen on a hundred battlefields the living and the dead. It would be a shame for me to talk seriously of service to men like you. This button, insignia of the order, you wear because you honor it. I wear it because it honors me."—National Magazine.

When Silence Is Deadly.

Silence is commonly the slow poison used by those who mean to murder love. There is nothing violent about it. No shock is given. Hope is not abruptly strangled, but merely dreams of evil and fights with gradually stifling shadows. When the last convulsions come they are not terrific. The frame has been weakened for dissolution. Love dies like natural decay. It seems the kindest way of doing a cruel thing.—George Meredith.

London's Shortest Street.

The shortest street in Great Britain is Mansion House street, E. C., which has but one address in it and whose length is but a very few yards. Short as it is, however, it has won world-wide fame as being the very busiest street in these islands—nay, one may truthfully say, in all the world—for vehicles pass through it at the rate of some 2,000 an hour for twelve hours at a stretch day after day.—London Express.

Hard Luck.

Hardduppe—Why so despondent? Flubdub—Oh, I can't seem to get out of debt! Hardduppe—Gee, that's nothing! I can't even get in.—Life.

Don't cork up your house like a bottle.

PERSONALS.

Well-known Women.

Chatham, Ont.—"I was sick for about four years. Got very weak, could not eat to amount to anything. I got very thin and had no strength at all. I was very much discouraged at times—thought I was never going to get better. I could not walk a block without feeling all tired-out. I took different medicines but did not get the help I needed. A friend of mine advised me to try Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. I began to take it with the 'Pleasant Pellets' and by the time I had taken two bottles I was well on the road to recovery, and in six months I was entirely well. My appetite came back and I gained in flesh. Now I am as strong and healthy as any one could wish to be. I owe it all to Dr. Pierce's medicines and I am glad of the opportunity to give testimony in their favor; they have done wonders for me."—Miss Thelma Parker, 141 E. King St.

Chatham, Ont.—"I have taken Dr. Pierce's medicine with good results. I was weak and run down, lost my appetite and got very thin. I took 'Favorite Prescription' and 'Pleasant Pellets' and these two medicines built me up in a very short space of time so that I felt as well as ever. I found them to be all that is recommended of them; they are good."—Mrs. Wm. Wiese, Cor. Taylor & Grand Ave., E., Chatham, Ont.

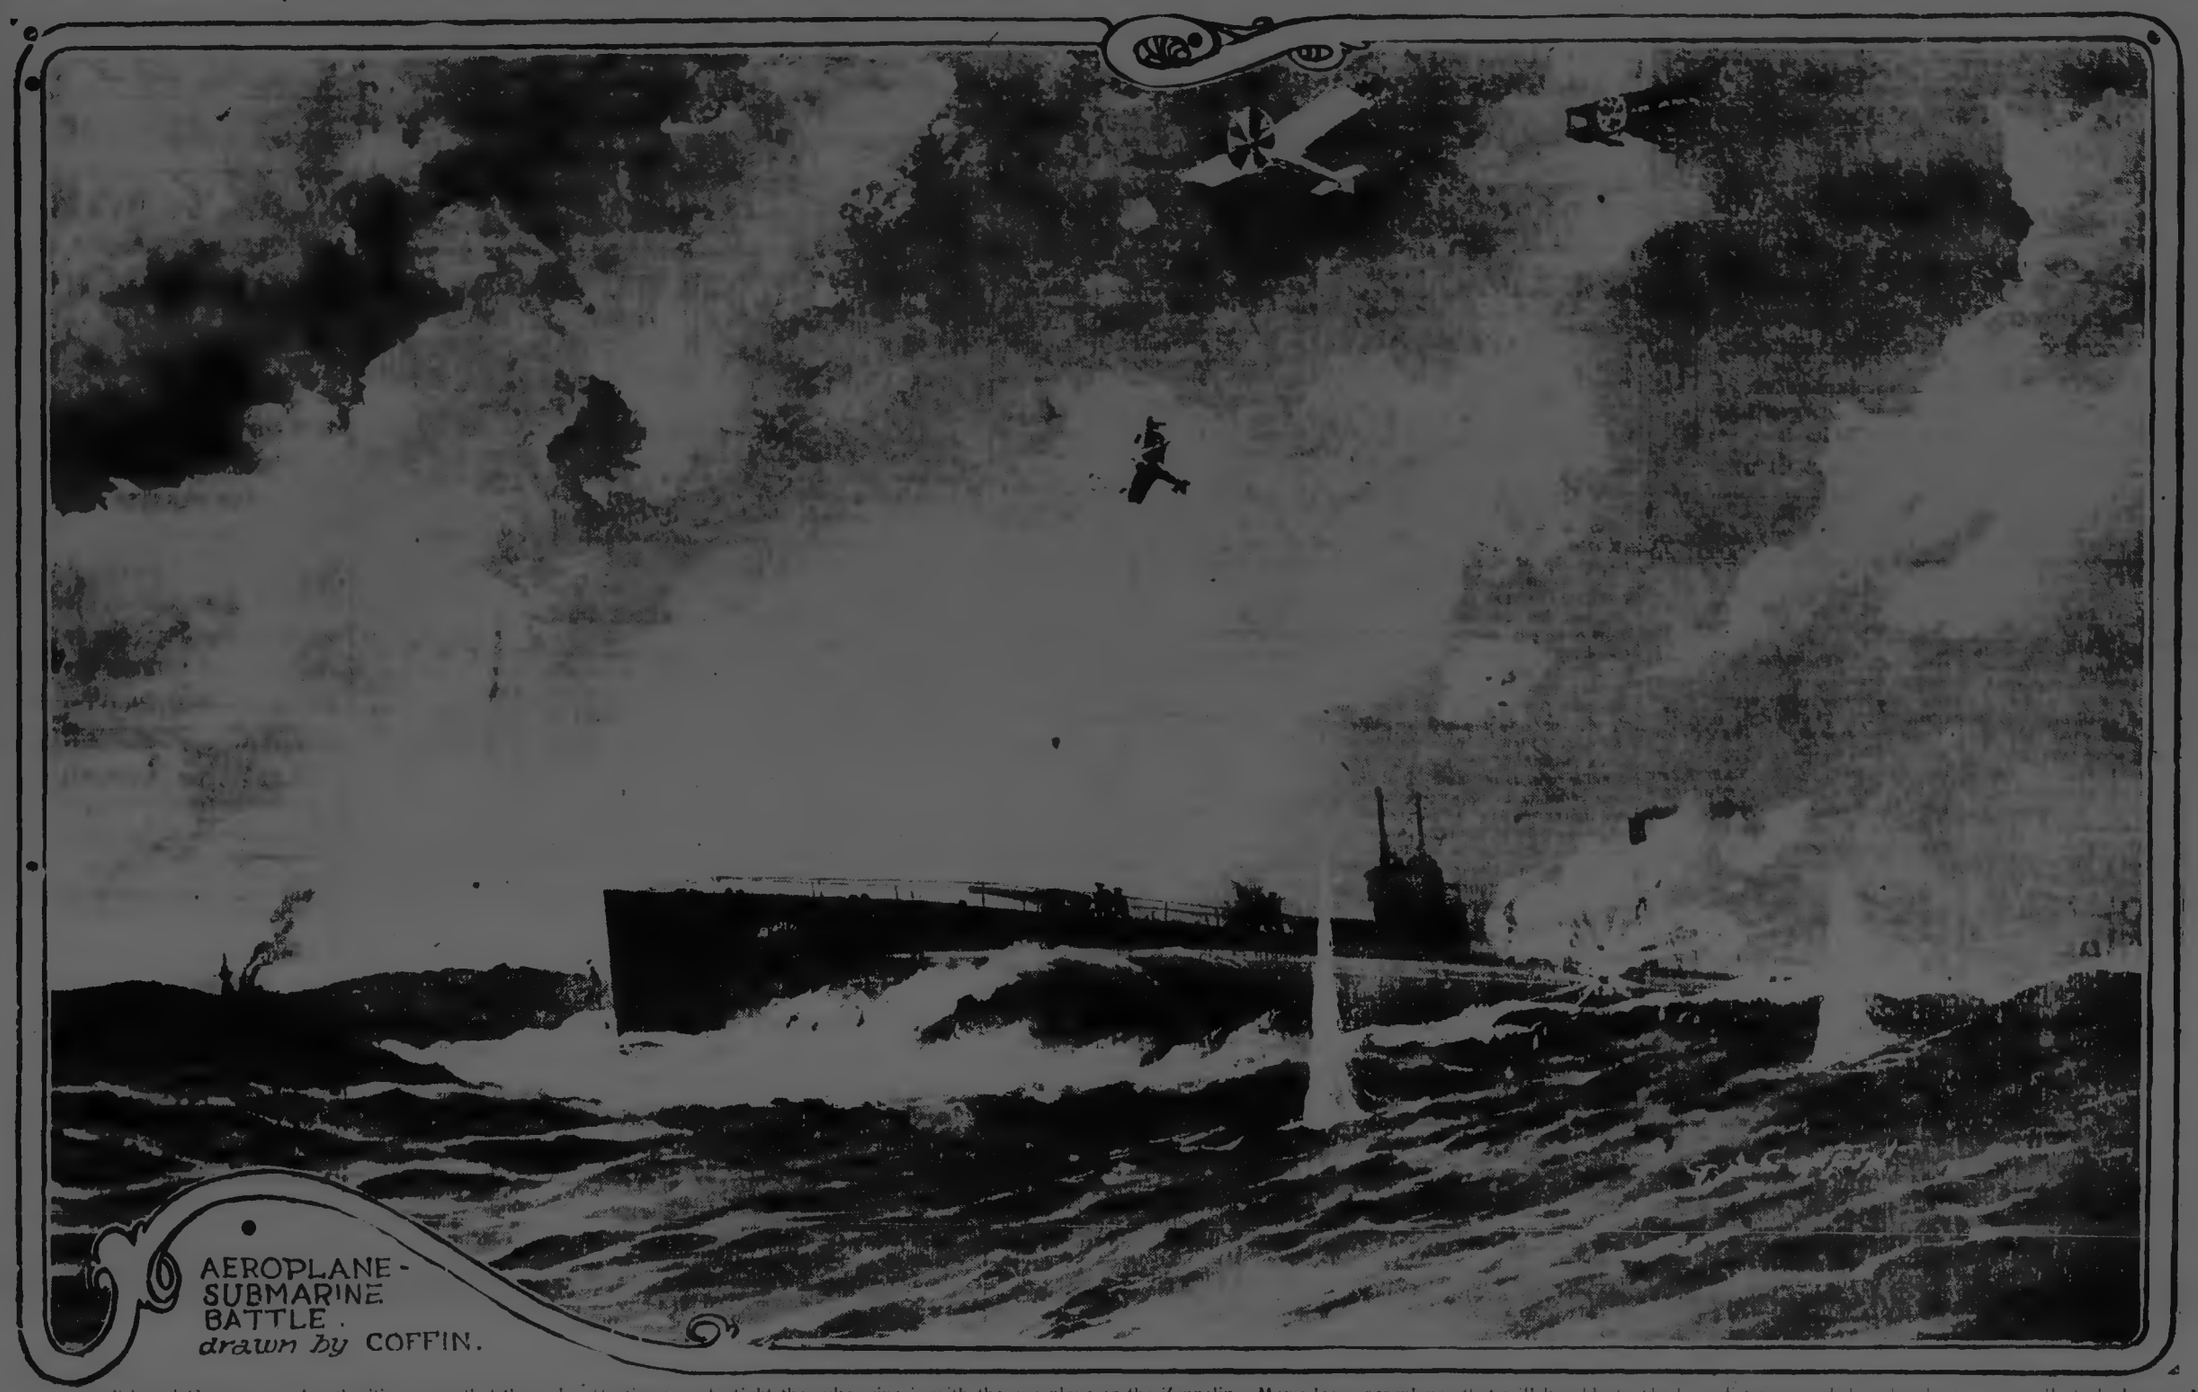
FIERCE BATTLE BETWEEN THREE AEROPLANES AND A SUBMARINE.



English and German naval authorities agree that the only effective way to fight the submarine is with the aeroplane or the Zeppelin. Many large aeroplanes that will be able to fly long distances and drop bombs from a well stocked arsenal aboard are being built. The above picture, drawn by the well known marine artist, G. A. Coffin, shows a battle between a submarine and three aeroplanes. A bomb from one of the aircraft has just exploded on the surface of the submarine, puncturing the light shell of steel, making submersion impossible.

Soldiers See Portents and Visions in Thick of Battle

(Special Despatch)

London, August 28.

It is [illegible] that many Russian soldiers declare that they have seen the famous ghost of General Skobeleff in a white uniform riding on a white horse.

This apparition, according to tradition, always marks a critical moment for the armies of the Tsar, and invariably causes panic in the enemy's ranks.

The telegram has started a correspondence in some newspapers on war myths and the appearance of apparitions which alter the course of battles.

"Supernatural appearances of this character," writes one correspondent, "have marked the narratives of almost all wars. Indeed, an army might begin to suspect the justice of its cause if it were not guaranteed by some apparition of this sort.

"Thus in classical history you have the appearance of the Castor and Pollux at the battle of Lake Regillus, riding on white horses. They were the battle for Rome and carried the news of it at incredible speed to the city.

"Another apparition is that of the Flaming Cross which appeared in the skies at noon above the army of Constantine I. at the battle of the Milvian Bridge, near Rome, in 312. The cross bore the famous words, 'In this sign you will conquer,' and Constantine is said to have been so affected by the portent that he had the cross inscribed on the shields of his soldiers and became a Christian. His victory over his rival made him Roman Emperor and confirmed him in the belief in the apparition.

O'Connell's Big Head.

Thackeray was six feet two inches in height and Sir H W Lucy says the great novelist wore a seven and five-eighths inch hat, beating Dickens and John Bright by a full half inch. Mr Gladstone's hat was of seven and three-eighths inch measurement—the same as Macaulay's—while Beaconsfield needed a full seven inch. The hat of Daniel O'Connell, however, would have beaten them all, measuring eight and one half inches by ten inches.

Ironwork in India.

India was the first country which turned iron into weapons. Persia borrowed the art from India. The Rigveda, which is the oldest record in the world, gives evidence of this. So do also the Astras and Sastras of the Dhanurneda, and during the early part of the Christian era the Indian blade was the most used throughout the eastern and western world. This art reached its greatest perfection in northern India, the Punjab, Nepaul, Rajputana, Gujarat and other provinces, where they still make beautiful arms.

Swallowed and Climbed.

A woman newly rich was invited to an aristocratic dinner party. During the course of fowl and salad this woman noticed with dismay a fat, furry caterpillar on her topmost leaf of lettuce. Glancing up, she met her aristocratic hostess' eye. The hostess, too, had seen the caterpillar. Her gaze implored the guest to save the dinner from catastrophe. The guest gave her hostess a reassuring smile. Then she doubled a lettuce leaf around the caterpillar and swallowed it calmly. The look of awe and gratitude that her hostess gave her was an assurance that her footing in society was at last firmly established.

"Did you think," said Mrs. Newlyrich to her daughter afterward, "that I'd lose a chance of establishing the family socially for a little thing like a caterpillar?"

Totally Discouraged by Nervous Prostration

After Many Weeks of Doctoring a Friend Recommended Chases' Nerve Food and She Was Cured

There is nothing more discouraging than Nervous Prostration. Because of the exhausted condition of the nervous system, weakness and helplessness take possession of the body. The faculties of the mind as well as those of the body are affected and hope and courage disappear.

The patient, often appearing well, gets little sympathy, and few doctors understand diseases of the nerves well enough to treat nervous prostration intelligently. Dr Chase's Nerve Food is founded on the prescription of a great nerve specialist, and hence its wonderful success in curing ailments of this nature.

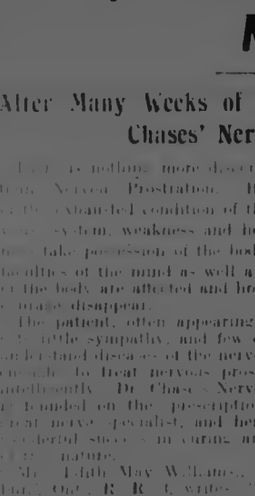
Mrs Edith May Williams, Tilsonburg, Ont., R R 6, writes: "I cannot speak too highly of Dr Chase's Nerve Food. I suffered for years with my nerves, and at one time I was confined to my bed with nervous prostration for several weeks. I cannot just explain my feelings, but I was weak and helpless and so discouraged and despondent that I thought I would lose my mind. I doctored with several doctors and received but little benefit. At last I became very much discouraged and thought I would never get better. A friend advised me to try Dr Chase's Nerve Food, and before I had finished the first box I knew that it was helping me. It took several boxes of the Nerve Food to make me well and I can truly say that it is a wonderful build-up of the nervous system."

It is only wise to prevent such dreaded diseases as Nervous Prostration, Paralysis and Locomotor Ataxia by keeping the nervous system in good condition at all times. When you cannot sleep well, have headaches and indigestion, be warned of approaching dangers and restore the nervous system by using Dr. Chase's Nerve Food. 50 cents a box, all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Company, Limited, Toronto.

EXAMINER PATTERN SERVICE

A FROCK FOR WASH MATERIALS.

By Anabel Worthington.



Although this pretty little frock is better suited to wash materials at this season of the year than to woollens, it may also be made of serge, and even of taffetas.

It presents a novel feature in the cut of the waist, which has its front panel in one piece with the pleated skirt. The sides of the waist are separate pieces and are tucked at each shoulder in both front and back.

The neck may be round or square high or low, and the sleeves long or short.

Very dainty frocks are made of dimity, cambric and fine gingham, as well as of linen and similar fabrics. The outline of the neck and the edges of the sleeves, as well as the girdle, are frequently made of white insertion, no matter what may be the color of the frock.

The pattern of this dress No. 7,191, is cut in sizes 6, 8, 10 and 12 years. Medium or 8 year size requires 2¾ yards of 36 inch material.

When ordering remember to give your name and address as well as the number and size of pattern required, and age of a child.

Price 10 cents or 2 for 25c.

RACE FOR A WIFE.

Getting Married Is a Strange Game In Frigid Kamchatka.

AN ORDEAL FOR THE GROOM.

After Working Hard For a Few Years For the Girl's Father He Finally Wins Her In a Public Chase, In Which He Gets His Skin Well Tanned.

It gets too hot for the Siberian only once in a lifetime. The native Koryak of Kamchatka, far up in the peninsula that is washed by the Bering sea, can sleep comfortably in a room four feet high with six by eight feet of floor space and have a fire smoking near all night while the doors are tightly closed and then does not object if three others share his apartment with him. Tomorrow he will have chance enough to breathe more cold, fresh air than he cares for. His picture of the happy hereafter is a snug, cozy place where every cell of his body can perpetually enjoy warmth and where neither ears, fingers nor toes shall be frozen.

Once in his life, however, things get a little hotter than he can honestly enjoy, and that once he cannot escape if he is to be a man of importance in the community, for it is his marriage ceremony. As soon as the youth falls in love in dead earnest he calls on the maiden's father to find out what dowry she can bring in case of eventual marriage. Since reindeer is the Koryak's medium of exchange, the dowry usually consists of reindeer. If the father consents to the engagement and the dowry pleases the young man he interviews the girl, and if she reciprocates his affection he enters her father's service. Chopping wood, tending the herds, cultivating the garden and all other kinds of farm work fall to his share. The period of service lasts from two to three years.

The marriage ceremony begins about 6 in the evening. There is a building in the village into which the villagers crowd at twilight. A large hall runs through the center of the building on either side of which are from ten to fifteen little rooms called pologs. Each polog is separated from the next by heavy reindeer curtains, and the entrance from each polog into the hall is closed by similar curtains. Nowhere in all that building except in the hall could a good sized man stand upright.

After considerable eating and some drinking a brass drum begins to beat. At the same time a solemn faced Koryak passes from one polog to another, dropping willow sprouts and alder branches in each inclosure. Presently the beater of the drum begins to sing, to accompany his slow performance on the drum. Gradually he accelerates his beats and his song. Faster and faster he smites his drum; louder and louder he sings, until within thirty minutes he has worked himself into a state of frenzy—a consummation that is not without its effect upon the villagers. The stolid calm with which they entered, suggestive of an impending funeral, gives place to smiles, to tossings of the head, until by and by the whole crowd is as excited as its leader.

At this point, the front curtain of each polog goes up, and two or three women appear inside. In their hands are willow sprouts and alder branches. In a moment the father of the bridegroom enters the building, leading the happy couple by the hand. The noise, the shouting and the whirling now become indescribable. At a signal from the groom's father the bride dashes into the first polog to the right. The women that are within lift the curtain for her, and she passes quickly from one compartment to the next.

Not so with the groom. He dashes after her, but no sooner has he entered the first polog than the women begin to beat him with the willow sprouts and alder branches. He seizes the curtain to enter the next polog, but one or two women hold it down, and if he finally succeeds there is a hot application of branches on that part of his anatomy that remains longest within the polog.

Meanwhile the women in the next polog are ready to receive him with equal warmth. They ply the switches energetically and do not hesitate to thrust out a foot also in order that the "happy groom" may stumble and afford a more enduring target for their blows.

There is no escape from this experience until the groom has entered and passed through every one of those twenty or thirty pologs. The front curtains are raised, so that the public has a clear chance to enjoy the spectacle.

Of course he never catches the bride. She has reached the last polog before he is halfway through. If she passes out of the last polog he must work another year at her father's house and pass through the same ordeal once more. But she usually awaits him in the last polog, and when they meet there the wedding ceremony is finished—and they are man and wife.—Youth's Companion.

Over the Telephone.

"Is this Mr. Jones?"

"It is."

"This is the Getemquick hospital. A woman who was taken ill on the street has been brought here and we think she is your wife."

"Does she say so?"

"No. The patient is unable to talk."

"Then it is not Mrs. Jones. It's somebody else."—Richmond Times Dispatch.

BAKED CIGARS.

Before Smoking the English Dry Out All Spirits and Nicotine.

The English bake their cigars thoroughly in the oven until all of the moisture and nicotine are dried out. As is well known, they have the pick of the tobacco crop over there, and what they apply to the best of cigars might well be administered to those of inferior quality which are smoked in America.

Here is what every smoker should do: First, loosen the cigars in the box and let them stand on or near a stove or radiator until absolutely dry.

A moment before smoking wash the cigar in water on the outside and dampen well the wrapper. This may be done at the table by holding the cigar by the tip in a glass of drinking water, taking care not to wet the filler. Then wipe the tip end before cutting it off on the napkin. Water revives the leaf and restores its natural flavor.

What you have previously dried out in the oven is not water moisture. It is the bay rum and other spirits which are frequently sprinkled over the cigars after boxing to keep them looking fresh. Both the wholesaler and the retailer often sprinkle them again before showing them to customers. It is these spirits that impart such a strong odor to clothes in which cigars are carried. Drying and washing afterward will make for a better smoke, to say nothing of better health, in cases where very cheap spirits have been used on the cigars.—Cleveland Plain Dealer

SUBMARINE CABLES.

Placed End to End They Would Reach Halfway to the Moon.

The various governments of the world own together 880 cables, having a total length of 14,480 miles and containing 21,560 miles of conductors. The French government, which takes the lead as to length of cables, has 3,460 miles in fifty-four cables. As to number, the Norwegian government comes first, with 255 cables, having a total length of 248 miles. Finally, as to the length of conductors, the English government comes first, with 5,468 miles of conductors, divided among 115 cables, having a total length of 1,588 miles. Private companies to the number of twenty-eight own 288 cables, having a length of 126,864 miles and containing 127,632 miles of conductors.

The French companies, only two in number—the Compagnie Francaise du Telegraphe de Paris et New York and the Societe Francaise des Telegraphes Sous-Marins—have eighteen cables with a total length of 7,249 nautical miles. The most important of the private companies is the Eastern Telegraph company, which operates seventy-five cables, with a total length of 25,347 miles. The total number of cables in the world is 1,103, with a total length of 140,347 miles and 140,103 miles of conductors. This is not sufficient to reach to the moon, but would extend more than halfway there.—London Tit-Bits.

The Ancient Brahmans.

The Brahmans were the lawyers, priests, professors, the sole instructed class, the sole authorities on taste, morality, the sole depositaries of whatever stood in the place of science. Everybody was to minister unto them, everybody to give way to them. The Brahman was above the law. He was "not to be subjected to corporal punishment, must not be imprisoned or fined or exiled or reviled." In the law of the Vishnu it was written: "The Brahmans sustain the world. It is by the favor of the Brahmans that the gods reside in heaven." Under English rule and ideas the ancient caste has lost some of its prestige, but is still a forcible reminder of its former grandeur.—New York American.

An Early Legal Blunder.

Dyeing, or, at any rate, the madder root used in it, was the subject of one of the oddest of England's legislative blunders. In the reign of George III. it was found necessary to regulate the trade in madder, and accordingly an act was passed for that purpose. Tests of its purity were ordained, and various regulations spread the length of the act to over sixty sections. But when it was finally passed into law it was found that madder was not once mentioned by name in it. In fact, those called upon to administer it had no official knowledge of what the act was talking about.—London Telegraph.

The Russians Turn on the Enemy in Galicia

GERMANY ACCEPTS THE AMERICAN DEMANDS

RUSSIANS TAKE OFFENSIVE IN THE GALICIAN FIGHTING

Successive Counter Attacks Have Stopped the Austro-German Advance and is Threatening to Roll Up the Right Flank of the Enemy---Foe Driven Back a Mile at One Point.

SITUATION LOOKS BRIGHTER TO-DAY

Special Cable to The Examiner:

PETROGRAD, Sept. 1.—Strongly reinforced, the Russians in Galicia have taken the offensive, and by successive attacks are threatening to roll up the right flank of the Austro-Germans. Despatches received here to-day indicated not only a complete check to the enemy's advance in Galicia, but Russian gains between Strypo and Zlota Lipa, southwest of Tarnopel. The troops brought up from the lower Dniester region are battering at Gen. Pflanzer's flank in the hilly country between the two rivers, and have driven the Austro-Germans back nearly a mile, at the extremity of a five hundred mile front. Heavy German attacks are being repulsed in the region south of Riga, and the enemy's offensive in the direction of Vilna and the Warsaw-Petrograd Railway has been stopped, and the whole situation is now considered satisfactory by the War Office. The Germans are concentrating heavily south of Riga, their heavy guns are hammering at Friedrichstadt bridgehead, and fresh German forces, presumably from Brest-Litovsk district are approaching Dwina. Military men here believe this activity forecasts a drive on Petrograd.

Around Brest-Litovsk and southwest of the Galician border the Czar's troops are moving back conforming to the general plan of retirement adopted when the evacuation of Brest-Litovsk became necessary. The retreat is slow and orderly. Several enemy detachments which attempted to hasten the pursuit have been defeated with severe losses. In their sudden attempt to expel the Russians from Galicia the Austro-Germans had apparently been heavily reinforced. Regiments which were reported in action before Warsaw participated in the Austro-German attacks against the Slavs on Zlota Lipa. When the Russion forces were redistributed to meet this blow the enemy was halted.

PETROGRAD, Sept. 1.—The finance committee of the Duma, presented a bill to-day extending the rights of the state bank to issue paper money. The committee report discussed the entire problem of meeting war expenses, stating that the sums needed were so large that all possible sources of revenue must be used, taxation, internal credit operation, an issue of paper money, and foreign loans. Minister of Finance Bark, supporting the report of the committee, said that in spite of the exploitation of internal credit to a degree hitherto unprecedented amounting to a total of over three million roubles, Russia possesses immense reserves of savings of which the Government intend soon to make use. The Government is increasing the number of savings banks, and simplifying and facilitating their use by the people.

ROME, Sept. 1.—Italy has no fear that the Austro-Germans, having finished their campaign against Russia, will throw forces down the Adige Valley for an invasion of the Italian northern provinces.

"We hold every important peak dominating the Adige Valley section," said a high official to-day. "The Germans might throw half a million men down the valley, but we could hold them off with ease for months.

"Winter is approaching, and by December military operations in the Alps will be out of question, another fact the Germans have undoubtedly taken into consideration. And before the arrival of spring, England, France and Russia will be keeping the Austro-Germans busy elsewhere."

The Government several weeks ago contracted for large supplies of wool, and every weaving and knitting factory in Italy is now turning out heavy clothes for the winter campaign. Extra heavy garments are being made for the troops engaged in the Alps along the Trentino frontier.

On some of the highest peaks, two miles above sea level, structures to house Italian soldiers during the winter are being built in the shelter of the rocks. These will be heavily provisioned, the War Office anticipating that many of the positions on the summits will be shut off from the outside world by the heavy snows.

BERLIN, via London, Sept. 1.—German troops have arrived before the western front of Grodno and are preparing to attack the fortress.

AMSTERDAM, Sept. 1.—Thirty Warsaw bankers, who refused to accept German promissory notes have been arrested and interned in Germany.

SOME MINERS STILL OUT.

CARDIFF, Sept. 1.—Though a settlement was reached at London yesterday, 30,000 miners in Rhonada Valley and 12,000 in Monmouthshire refused to resume work to-day, until the agreement is formally ratified and signed by the miners' delegates.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 31.—There is good reason to believe that the German submarine, which sank the White Star liner Arabic without warning has herself been lost, from information which reached Washington to-night through a reliable channel.

The fact that it is now 13 days since the Arabic was sent to the bottom and the German Admiralty apparently has received no word yet from the undersea boat has strengthened the belief in the reliability of the information that has reached Washington that the German submarine has been destroyed.

Although no details of this report were obtainable in Washington to-night, the assumption is, of course, that the submarine was destroyed by a British war vessel and that the identity of the undersea boat as the one which attacked the Arabic has been established through British sources

SCHOOLS RE-OPEN AFTER A LONG VACATION

After the long vacation Peterborough Public and Separate Schools opened this morning and commenced the work of another term.

Mr. Mowat, Public School Inspector, stated to the Examiner that there was a good attendance throughout the Public schools. There are a number of changes in the staff over last term. The release of Capt. Park, principal of the King George School, to go on active service with the 57th Battalion, C.E.F., has caused a vacancy which was filled by the appointment of Mr. Steer as principal. Several lady teachers who resigned have been replaced by Miss Elliott, Miss Fuser and Miss Richardson of Peterborough, Miss Sage of Peterborough County, Miss Harrison of Mitchell, Ont., and Miss McPhadden.

Mr. Downey, principal of the Central School, and Miss Walkey, vice-president of the Queen Alexandra school, who have been ill, expect to be able to report for duty in the course of a few days.

The different schools have been thoroughly whitewashed during the summer, especially the South Central School, which has been renovated and placed in a thoroughly sanitary condition.

As previously announced, the Collegiate Institute does not open until Tuesday next, Sept. 7th.

St. Peter's Schools.

The Catholic schools in the city opened this morning. St. Peter's with an attendance of 250 and St. Mary's Convent with 300. During the vacation necessary renovations were made in these schools and also on the Sacred Heart and Immaculate Conception parish schools.

The Sacred Heart school registered an attendance of 275, but the other figures could not be obtained to-day

AN ENTHUSIASTIC RECRUITING RALLY IN NORWOOD

A Number of Local Speakers Were Present—Fully a Dozen Men Signify Their Willingness to Join the Colours

SHOULD GERMANY WIN!

NORWOOD, Sept. 1.—A recruiting rally that was held here last evening, Mr. R. R. Hall of Peterborough, pointed out the results that might follow success for the Germans. The latter would dominate Canada as well as other countries now engaged in the suppression of the German menace. Conscription would be forced upon the manhood of the country and the shackles of despotic slavery would be fastened upon the country for probably all time to come. We would lose our freedom and the cherished traditions incident to truth and justice.

Other speakers were Major G. S. Cameron, A.M.C., of Peterborough, Mr. J. A. Sexsmith, M.P., and Rev. Father Galvin of Norwood. The chair was occupied by Mr. Squire. Major Cameron explained the terms and conditions upon which men are asked to enlist. He also referred to the protection that was provided for the wives and dependents of soldiers. At the close of the meeting fully a dozen men made their way to the front with a view of learning more about the terms and conditions of service, with a view of enlisting. The remarks of the speakers were punctuated by cheers which emanated from a large and enthusiastic gathering.

39TH BATTALION MARCHED 22 MILES TO NEW CAMP

Bugler A. C. Sharpe of the 39th Battalion, wrote on August 16 to Mr. F. D. Kerr, mentioning that in the previous week they had moved from Cheat's camp to Lydd camp, a distance of about twenty-two miles. Continuing he writes: We were up at three a.m. and had our tents all pulled up and were on the march by 7 a.m. We had two hours for dinner and reached our destination at 5 p.m. This tramp was done in full marching order. It was awfully hot so you see we did not waste much time. This is a very small place compared with Folkestone, the nearest place to our old camp. But we are here for rifle practice and the last five mornings we have been up at 5 a.m., as we only have until nine o'clock on the ranges, as the Royal Garrison Artillery are also stationed here and they have to use the ranges, too. The 48th Regiment also use it, so you can see it takes us going to finish our shooting in the time given to us.

Bugler Sharpe refers to Zeppelin raids and the use of machine guns. Of the weather he said: In regards to the county there is a terrible amount of rain and it is just pouring now, but it has not been so bad since we came to Lydd. Have you heard that Capt. Cameron had been made Adjutant of this Battalion. That speaks well for him, as he has been combing the ladder ever since he joined. He is well liked by the men and that helps a lot.

I suppose things are very quiet in Peterborough, as mother said in her letter. Almost all the men over here have some kind of a uniform on. They also have sea scouts, who are like the scouts at home, only they have to keep a lookout for German submarines and Zeppelins.

FINDS SKELETON OF HIS WIFE

Examiner Special:

WINNIPEG, Sept. 1.—Over eight years ago on the evening of May 24, Mrs. Wm. Chambers disappeared from her home near Cloverdale, in northern Manitoba, leaving her husband and five small children. Yesterday a bleached skeleton was found by hay cutters seven miles from her home and Mr. Chambers identified it as the remains of his wife by the wedding ring which he had given her.

WILL LEAVE AS A UNIT

8th Mounted Rifles One of the Two Mounted Corps in Canada Selected to Go as a Complete Organization

OTHER FROM CALGARY

Examiner Special:

OTTAWA, Sept. 1.—Two Mounted Rifle Regiments, the Eighth at Barriefield, commanded by Col. J. R. Munroe, Ottawa, and the Twelfth at Calgary, Col. C. Macdonald in command, have been selected to go on overseas service as complete units. This is one mounted regiment from Eastern Canada and one from Western Canada, and they were selected after the inspection of the mounted troops by General Lessard.

This announcement will be an interesting one to local people, who take a great deal of interest in the 8th C.M.R. One squadron was organized and trained in Peterborough, and is known as the Peterborough Squadron, under command of Major S. T. Medd. Peterborough has furnished over 200 men for the 8th Mounted and many of these are now in England, having gone over in the different drafts. The regiment is again at full strength and it speaks well for the efficiency that it should have been chosen by General Lessard as the Eastern Canada Mounted Corps to go as a complete unit.

Four Manitoba Ex-Ministers of the Crown Charged With Conspiracy to Defraud

Examiner Special:

WINNIPEG, Sept. 1.—A few minutes after 10 o'clock this morning Sir Rodmond Roblin walked dejectedly up to the city police court, preparatory to stepping into the dock charged with conspiracy. Following him came ex-Attorney Gen. Howden and Hon. Dr. Montgue. After another brief interview, Hon. Geo. Caldwell appeared. The four ex-Ministers of the Crown all met in the office of Crown Prosecutor Graham, and after a conference with their solicitor, went to the office of the Chief Detective, in which they waited, pending the arrival of R. A. Bonar, K.C., the Crown Prosecutor. The ex-Ministers asked that the case against them should proceed immediately, but Bonar's absence prevented the authorities from pursuing this course. The names of the four Ministers appeared on dock charged with that they did conspire to defraud. The hearing will be very short and a date will be fixed for the preliminary trial.

WINNIPEG, Man., Sept. 1.—Headed by Sir Rodmond P. Roblin, the four ex-Ministers appeared in police court charged with "conspiracy to defraud the province." They pleaded not guilty and were remanded until next week for a hearing.

TO HOLD PICNIC

The Apsley Telephone Company intend holding a picnic on Wednesday, September 15th at the Pine Grove, Apsley. A good supper will be served and a concert will be held in the evening.

This looks like the last picnic of the season around Apsley and the proceeds are for the improvement of the telephone line, a big sum will no doubt be on hand.

Oldest Man On Homestead

GRASSY LAKE, Sept. 1.—E. Barnette, Sec. 17-8-11, was in town yesterday proving up for homestead and pre-emption. Sam Elford and Jas. Shearer were his witnesses. Mr. Barnette is 84 years of age and probably is the oldest man to secure a homestead from the Canadian Government. He is hale and hearty and likely to pass the century mark.

Artillerymen Escorted to the Station by 57th Band and Detachment of the 80th Battalion

TO-DAY'S MILITARY NEWS

The [illegible] of the 80th Battalion and the 57th Regiment Band [illegible] from the 24th Field Battery to the 33rd Battery, C.A.F., C.E.F., entrained for Barriefield at 5.40 o'clock this morning. This is the fourth draft from the 24th Battery to Major Scott's organization. To-day's quota was a smart looking lot, comprising a lot of well-known boys and of a class that will prove a credit to Peterborough, as have the other detachments sent from here since the war began.

At the Armouries this morning Hon. Major Davidson, Chaplain of the 57th Regiment, conducted a short service, offering prayers for the safety of the men. Then the parade to the station was commenced with the 57th Band playing. The Red, White and Blue in the lead, followed by the artillery recruits in charge of Lieut. Hoecke and the 80th detachment, in charge of Major R. T. Hounsell and Capt. R. P. Watt. There was a big crowd at the station and the gathering included many relatives of the departing volunteers, to bid them goodbye tearfully but proudly. As the train pulled out the infantry men led in the cheering for the artillery men.

The names of this morning's draft were published yesterday, with the exception of one, Quentin Hargrove, who enlisted yesterday. He was born in Lindsay. He made the nineteenth native born Canadian out of the draft of twenty-four.

The organization of the band of the 80th Battalion will be proceeded with at once. Orders to this effect have been sent from Kingston. Twenty-seven bandsmen have already offered their services, nineteen of them from the local bands. It has been decided that Bandsergt. Walter Hughes, the corps soloist of the 57th Regiment band, will be the leader of the new organization. The matter was left to Lieut. Gliddon and Sergt. Hughes to arrange. Both had offered their services, Lieut. Gliddon being anxious to assist in the event of Sergt. Hughes being unable to go. It is likely that to-night will see many bandsmen enlisted.

The boys of the 80th Battalion wish to express their appreciation of the gift from Mr. Peter Campbell of a football. Mr. Campbell's generous attitude is appreciated.

Pte. Wm. Theobald and Percy Smith of the 80th Battalion are in Lakefield to-day on recruiting business following up the meeting on Monday night. They will remain in Lakefield for several days.

The 80th Battalion men on parade [illegible]

The Kingston Whig says: The first section guncraft to the artillery men at the camp was taken up on Monday afternoon. The officers of the battalion took their men to the guns and showed them the different movements as demonstrated yesterday. Some of the men were also taught signalling, but the gun-firing is a complete change from what has been formerly on the time-table and the men took a great interest in the work. Two officers are connected with the men in the battery from the Kingston district, one from Napanee and the other from Brockville.

A Violent Battle Is Raging in Vosges

GERMANY BACKS DOWN IN REGARD TO SUB. POLICY

Liners Will Not Be Sunk Without Warning or Without Giving Non-combatants a Chance, Bernstoff Promises

REPLY GIVEN OUT

Special to The Examiner:

WASHINGTON, Sept. 1.—German Ambassador Bernstoff to-day submitted to Secretary Lansing the substance of the German government's answer to President Wilson's last submarine note. It consisted of an acceptance of the American demands. "Liners will not be sunk by our submarines without warning and without the safety of lives of non-combatants, provided that the liners do not try to escape or offer resistance," was the written statement of Ambassador Bernstoff, conveying his instructions to the Secretary of State, on the German answer to the Lusitania note.

Buttermilk in the Whiskey

"You are a fine looking citizen," said Magistrate Dimmick this morning to Orenzo Humber, to which the latter replied: "I don't doubt it." Humber attributed his presence in police court to a beverage composed of whiskey and buttermilk. He also admitted having lost his watch.

"It's an expensive luxury. You'd better get an automobile," said His Worship, who imposed the usual fine of two dollars.

GRAND STAND WAS DESTROYED

MONTREAL, Sept. 1.—The grandstand of the Blue Bonnet race track was burned this morning at 2 o'clock. Montreal firemen did not arrive until 4 o'clock. The betting stand and members' stand were destroyed also five thousand dollars' worth of racing implements. The grandstand which was valued at $50,000, is a total loss. A new stand costing $150,000 will be put up. Arrangements have been made to erect a temporary stand in time to accommodate the crowds at Decoration Day, May 24th, the date of the Queen's Plate.

Germans Exploded Hundreds of Gas Bombs in French Trenches and Then Charged But Were Driven Back With Heavy Losses at the Point of the Bayonet and Rifle.

MANY ARTILLERY DUELS

Special Cable to The Examiner:

PARIS, Sept. 1.—(French official communique.)—A violent battle is raging around Schratzmaennele, in the Vosges. After a cessation of infantry actions in this region for several days, the Germans yesterday shelled the French trenches on the slopes for several hours. The explosion of several hundred asphyxiating gas bombs was followed by a rush of German infantrymen upon the French works. The French chasseurs, who had protected themselves from the gas with respirators, met the attack with their bayonets and knives, and drove the enemy back from the parapets. The Germans suffered heavy losses several hours before the French trenches. A second charge was made last night and was repulsed. Elsewhere there have been no important infantry engagements in the last twenty-four hours. Heavy artillery duels continued throughout the night around Neuville, St. Vaast, Roye and at several points around Arras. Other artillery fighting occurred in the Argonne particularly at Fontaine, Aux Charmes, Bonyette and Haute Chevauchee.

Will Organize A Chapter

About twenty-five ladies met yesterday afternoon in the parlors of Centenary Methodist church for the purpose of discussing the feasibility of organizing a branch of the Red Cross Society. Rev. R. G. Peverett, who occupied the chair, explained the aims and objects of the Society. This was followed by further explanatory remarks by Mrs. Adams and Mr. McCarthy, members of the Red Cross work in East City. After some discussion the ladies decided to organize a chapter and the following officers were elected: President, Mrs. R. G. Peverett; first vice-president, Mrs. Gordon Curtis; second vice-president Mrs. A. W. Cochrane; secretary, Mrs. J. M. Freeman; corresponding secretary, Mrs. Lorne Hall and treasurer Mrs. Ena Tate. An executive was appointed to complete the organization and report back.

HELPING THE ENEMY.

A local member of the medical profession has received and placed before us one of the letters which the German propaganda in the United States against the sending of munitions of war to the Entente Allies, is flooding the United States and this country. In regard to Canada such literature is seditious and should be refused the Canadian mails. It is part of the slimy German scheme to poison American and Canadian opinion, and enflat the sympathies of the thoughtless and weak against the cause of the Entente Allies. Why such mischievous rubbish is permitted to have the benefit of our postal service—making a branch of our government service contributory to defeating the efforts of our government to help win in this war—should be explained. We are helping the enemy, by giving him the use of the machinery of the governmene that is spending much money and human life to defeat him.

NEW FACES.

We have become used to the appearance of kakhi-clad figures of soldiers on the streets, members of the militant, as we were formerly accustomed to the appearance of the figures of the soldiers of the church militant, the clergymen and ministers. We haven't seen much of them lately. They have been holidaying, and picking up amidst rural scenes the energy for another winter's strenuous work. Again we see the familiar faces and figures of the gentlemen of the cloth, on our streets. We welcome them back. They are needed now. Though they may not on their return jam their respective churches with congregations, they can help give a fillip to the Red Cross jam shower due to fall on Sept. 20-25th. As the leaders of the churches that are to take part in the jam shower, the ministers can give impetus to the preserving activities of their flocks. Though one may not undervalue their spiritual ministrations, our ministers have the authority and hint of St. Paul that it "is also their duty to minister in carnal things," like, for instance, jam for our sick and wounded soldiers. We welcome the return of the ministers, and solicit their help in the latest enterprise of the Red Cross, the only one that has definitely enlisted the formal and corporate cooperation of the churches. Far be it from us to dictate subjects for early September sermons, but for the next three Sundays the ministers might preach the gospel of jam—not necessarily from the pulpit, but in some effective way. They pray every Sunday for the sick and wounded; and jam is to the sick and wounded soldiers one of the greatest material blessings. Let us, therefore, have "showers of blessing" on Sept. 20-25th.

AIDING THE ENEMY.

In another paragraph on this page is a denunciation, a protest, against the circulation of pro-German literature from the United States through the agency of Canadian mails. While this use of our mails is covert treason—helping the enemy—there are other agencies of helping the enemy among our Canadian newspapers. The Toronto News has an article with the high-sounding title of "National Defence." This is simply an untimely attack upon the Liberal party which is credited, by assumption, with being opposed to national defence. The arguments used are not in question, fallacious and far-fetched as they are. The point is that raising a hypothetical issue to get a chance for a drive against the Liberal party is covert treason—aiding the enemy. Anything that at this time serves to sow dissension among the people of Canada—now united without reference to party in promoting the success of the war, is negative help to the enemy—it impairs the solidity of the attacking line, and by helping withhold help, helps the enemy. This is no time for opening old party sores. In this war leaders of both parties, and people of both parties—with a few disgraceful exceptions — are one in supporting the war policy of the Government, and he is a traitor that utters one word of gratuitous party criticism of motives, and raises a question of comparative loyalty. In the same issue the News features with front-page prominence, an announcement that a staff correspondent is conducting an investigation to discover an answer to the question, "Is Berlin Loyal?" At the present time, with Waterloo battalions going to the front, such a question is as impertinent as asking one's neighbour—"is your wife virtuous?" Does such newspaper enterprise tend to maintain the harmony of sentiment and the unity of action that the great mass of the people of Canada, native-born as well as foreign-born—French as well as German—are maintaining. Anything that destroys this harmony of sentiment and unity of action is playing into the hands of the enemy. The News in its venomenously rabid partizanship and journalistic foolishness, is discrediting Canada. It should take a leaf from the book of the Mail and Empire, which is showing a poise, a dignity of attitude, and an abstinence from partizanship, which is characteristic of the Canadian people as a whole. The Mail and Empire in this reflects and helps mould public opinion. The News in its course, outrages and misleads public opinion. It is to be hoped that it is only midsummer madness, the result of the silly season influence.

THE WAR AND A GENERAL ELECTION.

The following communication, has been offered for publication:

To the Editor of The Examiner:

Sir,—Your reference of Monday evening to my humble remarks in The Review on the undesirability of an election during war-time is in the main fair. You are not in favour of an election during the war. Neither am I. Will you agree that you will oppose an election during war-time? Since it is necessary in order to carry out this wish that the life of parliament be prolonged if the war is prolonged, will you agree that the life of parliament should be prolonged accordingly? If you will The Examiner and I will for once be of one mind. You say:

> "Only let Sir Robert Borden declare as authoritatively and as unequivocally as Sir Wilfrid Laurier declares his support of the Government's war policy, that there will be no election while the war lasts, and everything will go better."

Or do you mean merely that there shall be no election during the life of this parliament? If so that would mean that you dread parliament more than the war, and regard it as less desirable that there should be an election during the life of parliament than during the life of the war. Which then it it—no election during the war no matter how long it lasts, or only for one more year?

Permit me to say that hitherto The Examiner has adopted a very sane course in connection with this election business, and it is to be hoped that now it will not be stampeded by the hue-and-cry raised by its Liberal confreres throughout the Dominion so unexpectedly and inopportunely.

J. H. BURNHAM.

The Examiner is not so much concerned over an election during the life of the present parliament as over an election during the war. The question whether we "dread parliament more than the war" is not pertinent at the present time. What is to be dreaded, what is to be avoided, is a general election during the war, and especially before an election is constitutionally indicated. As has been pointed out we are now united in the mighty effort to discharge our duty in respect of the war. What is to be dreaded; what every patriotic citizen dreads, who places his country, the integrity of the free institutions we enjoy above party considerations, is destructive diversion of our presently united national efforts. Our efforts, our unity of action, our harmony of spirit, will be destroyed if we turn aside; if we turn the national ambition away from our war duty, and give ourselves over to the party madness an election would engender. The only excuse for an election, outside constitutional requirements, is to decide upon a policy upon which national opinion, in the party sense, is divided. There is now no two opinions upon Canada's war policy, either among party leaders or people. We are all of one mind—we are all, irrespective of party, bound to the policy of Canada doing her utmost and her best in helping end the war, and win success for the cause of civilization, of human freedom, and all the rights of humanity. Therefore there is no demand for an election. It is not necessary for The Examiner to commit itself to a hard and fast promise such as is demanded. We have already made clear our position, which is that an election during war time is not in the interests of Canada's effective provision of assistance in waging the present war. We said yesterday:

> If the war is not over then (October, 1916), then we can consider an extension of the life of parliament; not indefinitely, but from session to session. Surely the war will not last long enough to make more than one extension necessary.

This means, as plainly as words can express, opposition to an election during war time, and provides for a workable substitute for holding a general election—renewing the life of parliament if the war continues long enough to make such an expedient necessary. It is expressly stipulated, however, that the parliamentary term is not to be renewed without an election, but the life of parliament be extended merely from session to session, provided that as seems possible, that can constitutionally be done, In any event an election during the currency of the war is to be avoided, altogether, or as long at least as constitutionally possible, without peril to the integrity of the cardinal principles of responsible government.

THE ZEPPELIN BUBBLE

Mr. Balfour's assertion that during twelve months of effort not a single soldier or sailor has been killed by Zeppelins and that only in one case can any stretch of language attribute to them the scoring of a military advantage comes as no surprise. The interesting question will be as to what kind of an alibi the German government will trump up in reply.

It should be remembered, however, in connection with this authoritative statement on the failure of Zeppelin raids on England that Germany has promised the world great things from her Zeppelins. The City of London, if we remember aright, was to have been destroyed, the members of the perfidious English government killed at their desks. Instead of wiping out London, the gas-bags have sailed over England, thinking they were dropping bombs on London and on military institutions elsewhere, when, as a matter of fact, these bombs have been as ineffective, except in the killing of civilians, as so many puffballs would have been.

It is interesting, too, to recall that there were in England a year ago many loud-voiced pessimists who were as certain of Zeppelin success against London as the Germans themselves. And since these successes have not been announced, the pessimists are still frightened. They have been in fear that the British government was holding something back, that it was hiding damage done by the Zeppelins, and they have berated the government for its secrecy about the matter. The government's reason for this secrecy, as given by Mr. Balfour, should have been obvious without its being announced. Certainly it would be the greatest folly to tell the enemy that he was making mistakes, and thus render it easier for him to avoid them in the future.

For the slaughter of innocent civilians including women and children, by these Zeppelins, Germany hasn't even the flimsy and insincere excuse she offered for the murder committed by her submarines. In the case of the Lusitania, the German government claimed that the thousand non-combatants died to help Germany to success, to prevent munitions going to England for the destruction of German soldiers. But by the killing of the seventy civilians through bombs dropped from airships, Germany has neither helped herself nor injured her adversaries. It has been killing for the sake of killing and for nothing else.

A couple of weeks ago The Free Press printed a statement by Mr. Balfour in reply to the vain bragging of Count Reventlow on the "achievements" of the German navy; he now again uses the rapier, a weapon in the handling of which he is a past master:—

> Judged by members this cumulative result of many successful Zeppelin crimes does not equal the single effort of a submarine which, to the unconcealed pride of Germany and the horror of all the world, sent 1,198 unoffending civilians to the bottom in the Lusitania —Ottawa Free Press.

THE TRUE CAUSE.

Shall tyranny of Prussia's band
Dictate its rule to every land?
Were Britons born to cringe and bow
As only Prussian slaves know how,
To every upstart, armed with sword
Who makes them tremble at his word
With Arrogance and Lordly sway
Bids "His Inferiors" clear the way
Could ever Anglo-Saxon race
Submit itself to such disgrace?
To Teutons born, such law may hold
But not to Britons Brave and Bold
Who value Freedom, more than Life,
Who value Peace, far more than strife
And stand together to uphold
Their cherished freedom, gained of old.
When Magna Charta, signed and sealed
For all time to the world revealed,
For Justice, Order, Truth and Law
The British sword will only draw,
But drawn once, shall sheath again
When Justice, Law and Truth shall reign.

The Deadly Danger of Trespassing Upon Railway Tracks

Mr. George Bradshaw, secretary of the General Safety Committee of the Grand Trunk Railway, has issued the following circular letter to the press. It should be read with interest and can be read with profit if the lesson it suggests is taken to heart.

During the six months ended June 30th, 1915, thirty-eight (38) persons were killed and thirty-four (34) were injured on the Grand Trunk Railway while trespassing on its property. All but a small percentage of such persons were citizens of the communities in which they were killed and injured—business men, labourers and people generally using the Company's tracks and yards as walk ways for their own convenience.

The experience of the Grand Trunk in this respect during this period is typical of the experience of all roads in Canada and the United States, year in and year out, as shown by the fact that almost 6,000 persons are killed and about the same number injured in the two countries every year while trespassing on railways. In fact, more than 50 per cent. of all persons killed on railways from all causes are trespassers.

If 6,000 persons should be killed in one accident, people would be horrified, and would rise as one man, determined to prevent a similar occurrence; yet, here is a practice, unnecessary and preventable, which every year kills and injures more than twice as many persons as the Titanic, Empress of Ireland, Lusitania, Iroquois and Eastland disasters combined, and yet we are doing practically nothing to prevent it. Are we logical or merely sentimental? Do we really value human life and try earnestly and persistently to conserve it, or do we merely rise to fitful action when some great horror stirs our sentiment and passions?

The Railway Act makes trespassing on railway property an offence punishable by fine or imprisonment, but the trouble is that no one pays any attention to the law because it is so seldom enforced. In fact, a considerable proportion of the public seem to consider it as their perfect right to walk on railway tracks and through railway yards when ever they please, and resent even a polite request to keep off the Company's property. The dangerous practice of walking on railway tracks has been indulged in so long and so generally that it will be difficult to break it up, but that it should be stopped, a mere reference to the serious results clearly prove.

Aside from the protection to life and limb which would result from the enforcement of existing laws on this subject, there are other considerations of great importance involved in this problem. The presence of persons on tracks, especially in great numbers, detracts attention of engineers on approaching trains from the performance of their proper duties. The injuries and deaths which they witness, and the narrow escapes from same, place upon them an unnecessary mental strain, all of which jeopardizes, to a material extent, the safety of the travelling public.

We hear a great deal about the tramp problem. If walking along railway tracks and unlawful riding on trains were stopped, the tramp problem would be, to a considerable extent, eliminated. Railways are compelled each year to submit to losses totalling millions of dollars from pilfering, and this burden, like others placed upon common carriers, must be borne indirectly by the public. The enforcement of such laws would materially reduce this burden.

The solution of this problem requires, as most problems do, the education of public sentiment to the point where the necessity for decisive action will be appreciated, and we venture to call this information to your attention in the belief that the public interest involved makes it a proper subject for your serious consideration, and in the hope that you may find it consistent to exert your efforts towards a proper solution.

Yours truly,

GEO. BRADSHAW,
Secretary, General Safety Committee.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

THE CUPID EXPRESS

A Comedy of Love

By CLARISSA MACKIE

Trentham people always called the 6.36 train "the Cupid express," because it invariably carried one or more bridal couples.

It was the close of a March day, exactly 6.36 p. m., and the Cupid express had just snorted away cityward with two of Trentham's fair brides and incidentally the newly made husbands.

The Faber twins had just been married. It was a double wedding, and all the town had turned out to send them off with a suitable merrymaking.

"Where is Edith?" inquired Mrs. William Blake, craning her neck around the carriage. "Where is Edith?" she repeated sternly as her niece took her place in the surrey.

Cora Morris' voice was guilty.

"Edith is walking home," she said.

Mrs. Blake drew a sharp breath.

"Walking?" she interrogated.

Cora nodded, but her face beneath the white hood of her cloak was serious.

"Not alone?" declared Mrs. Blake in the decisive tone of one who knew.

"With Harley Lane," confessed Cora.

"Ah!" Mrs. Blake's tone was freezing. She sank back in her seat and was silent. Bitter thoughts crowded her mind.

It was like an unkind fate to decree that her only child, Edith, should fall in love with Judge Lane's son.

She had always tried to keep them apart and was openly rude to young Lane. And Harley was disconcertingly polite to her.

"Mrs. Blake would be the jolliest woman in the world if she would only forget her grouch against the world," said her would be son-in-law to his father one day.

But the judge had frowned and looked very uncomfortable.

"I wonder why your mother is so set against me," remarked Harley as he tucked Edith's hand under his arm and marched down the street.

Edith's eyelashes flickered as the surrey passed them at a corner where a street lamp shone brightly.

"I don't believe she really hates you, Harley," she said, "but some one has whispered a bit of ancient history to me. Years ago mother was engaged to marry your father. They quarreled, and neither forgave the other. Both married. There you are, sir!"

"The deuce!" whistled Harley; then he added hastily: "They've both been widowed for fifteen years. Why didn't they marry each other?"

"I don't know," sighed Edith. "They couldn't really have cared."

"Dear, do you know I was wishing that you and I had courage to throw conventions to the four winds and elope on the Cupid express some day!"

"They would never forgive us, dear," murmured Edith, "and we couldn't really be happy if they didn't."

"I know it. There's only one thing to do, then—to convert them to our way of thinking."

"How can we do that?"

"I didn't have an idea until you told me that once they had been sweet hearts. Listen to this scheme."

Mrs. Blake saw them lingering at the front gate. Her handsome face grew sterner, and her lips straightened into a thin line.

Her hands smote sharply together in a passion of wounded pride.

"His son—of all men!" she moaned softly.

* * * * * * * *

One April afternoon Mrs. Blake returned from her euchre club to find the house strangely silent.

"Miss Edith?" repeated Jane, the maid. "Why, Miss Edith left the house an hour ago. She carried a suit case and"—

"A suit case?" interrupted Mrs. Blake. "Did she say where she was going?"

"No, ma'am. I wouldn't have known about it only I heard the front door close, and I looked and saw Miss Edith running down the walk. A cab was there. She jumped in and was off!"

"Very likely she has been called over to her cousin's in South Trentham. She will telephone to me no doubt."

The clock in the hall chimed the quarter after 6, and mingled with it was the sharp, insistent tinkle of the telephone bell.

Winona Blake's voice shook a little as she lifted the receiver from its hook.

"Yes?" she inquired.

It was Edith's voice, speaking in tremulous excitement.

"Mother, dear," she quavered, "would you consent to my—my marrying Harley?"

An instant's silence, then the mother's voice, cold and terrible:

"No daughter of mine ever will marry him!"

"Mother!" Edith's voice was stricken.

"Where are you?" asked Mrs. Blake.

"The railroad station."

"Wait until I come!" ordered Mrs. Blake, and, hanging up the receiver, she rushed from the house, still wearing her hat and her most becoming afternoon gown.

There was no time to call Thomas. Before he could harness one of the lazy blacks into the runabout the Cupid express would be away from the station!

As Mrs. Blake hurried up the stairs she heard the thunder of the approaching train. Her lips tightened.

"I will go along, too!" she thought. 'Edith is a minor, and"—

"Here, madam!" A conductor almost lifted her to the steps, and as she staggered across the platform into the coach a shower of small particles fell stingingly upon her face.

"Rice!" called somebody from the coach behind.

"Where's the bridegroom?" some one asked in a loud whisper.

"The old party in the gray overcoat. See the confetti on his hat?"

And at this moment Mrs. Blake collided with some one in the aisle. They grasped each other and swayed with the moving train.

"You?" glared Mrs. Blake.

"You?" glared Judge Lane.

A murmur ran through the car. Smiles spread from face to face, for was not this the honeymoon train, and did they not recognize a bridal couple? They did.

There was the handsome middle aged pair in gala attire; there was the confetti, rice. Somewhere in the rear a light headed youth whistled the wedding march from "Lohengrin."

Furiously embarrassed, angry and quite helpless in the face of so many whole hearted strangers, Judge Lane accepted the nearest proffered seat and pushed the equally embarrassed, angry and helpless lady into it.

"We may as well sit down," he snapped.

"Yes!" she gasped. "Of course you know why I'm here?"

"I'm on the same errand. I was searching the train when I met you. Harley telephoned me for my blessing before they were married. Bah!"

"Tickets, please!" smiled the conductor.

Mrs. Blake suffered a coldchill. Her pocketbook was at home. Could she accept money from John Lane?

She did, for without asking her permission he opened a bulging pocketbook and paid for both tickets.

Grinningly the conductor punched the rebate checks and gave them to the man.

"Congratulations, judge," he said as he moved along. "I knew the Cupid would catch you some day!"

A cold horror settled upon the two in the seat. So they were supposed to be a newly wedded pair!

Both were thinking of one day thirty years ago when they plighted their troth in the apple orchard beneath a snow of blossoms.

It was before the day of the Cupid express, but they had planned a wedding journey, and it had never come to pass.

And now, each one in pursuit of an eloping child, they had met after all these years. People believed they were a honeymoon couple!

"Absurd!" declared Mrs. Blake aloud.

"Ridiculous!" huskily agreed the judge.

"Perhaps you had better see if they are on the train," suggested Mrs. Blake after awhile.

"That's a good idea!" and Judge Lane escaped to the rear coaches.

After awhile he came back.

"They are not on the train," he said slowly.

"How odd!" cried Mrs. Blake. "But, then, Edith didn't say she was married. She only asked permission, and as she was telephoning from the railroad station I concluded they were going to take this train."

"So I inferred from Harley's message," responded the judge stiffly.

"I hope they are not married. It is out of the question!" went on Mrs. Blake.

"Out of the question," agreed the judge.

A silence fell between them, and then Mrs. Blake felt a blush creeping over her smooth, pale cheek.

Was he looking at her?

Slowly her eyes turned toward him, until, through her lashes, she could see his blue eyes regarding her with an odd wistfulness.

"Absurd!" she chided herself sharply.

"Winnie," he whispered suddenly, "you haven't forgotten, after all?"

"I never could, John," she whispered in return.

"Then let this be our wedding trip," he urged after awhile.

"But we must return tonight," she cried hastily. "I must be sure about Edith."

"And Harley," he added.

"About Edith and Harley," she gently corrected herself.

* * * * * * * *

When the 11:15 train from town drew into Trentham that night it found two anxious young people pacing the platform.

"They will never forgive us for luring them aboard that Cupid train," said Edith nervously.

"They might," Harley smiled cryptically. "Here they are, Edith! Together—and looking sheepish! Why, father," he said reproachfully, "I've been worried to death about you! Where have you been?"

The judge blushed and clung to his wife's hand. "Why, we've been getting married!"

"Married!" echoed Edith. "Without saying a word to me? Why, mother!"

"But you and Harley have married without consulting us"—

"Married?" interrupted Edith innocently. "Why, mother, dear, I wouldn't marry without your blessing. And I want a home wedding, with all my friends and heaps of presents—and we shall take the Cupid express, shan't we, Harley?"

A smile flickered on Harley's face.

"Sure we will, if dad doesn't object."

But the bride and bridegroom, walking ahead, were so absorbed in each other that they never answered the question. But, as Harley ... his sweetheart, it was one of those questions that answered themselves.

AFTER SUFFERING TWO LONG YEARS

Mrs. Aselin Was Restored to Health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Minneapolis, Minn.—"After my little one was born I was sick with pains in my sides which the doctors said were caused by inflammation. I suffered a great deal every month and grew very thin. I was under the doctor's care for two long years without any benefit. Finally after repeated suggestions to try it we got Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. After taking the third bottle of the Compound I was able to do my housework and today I am strong and healthy again. I will answer letters if anyone wishes to know about my case."—Mrs. JOSEPH ASELIN, 628 Monroe St., N.E., Minneapolis, Minn.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from native roots and herbs, contains no narcotics or harmful drugs, and today holds the record of being the most successful remedy we know for woman's ills. If you need such a medicine why don't you try it?

If you have the slightest doubt that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound will help you, write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential) Lynn, Mass., for advice. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman, and held in strict confidence.

TORTURED BY RHEUMATISM

Sunday School Supt. Tells How "Fruit-a-tives" Relieved

TORONTO, ONT., Oct. 1st, 1913.

"I have lived in this city for more than 12 years and am well known. I suffered from Rheumatism, especially in my hands. I spent a lot of money without any good results. I have taken "Fruit-a-tives" for 18 months now and am pleased to tell you that I am well. All the enlargement has not left my hands, and perhaps never will, but the soreness is all gone and I can do any kind of work. I have gained 3 pounds in eighteen months."

KAWARTHA PARK COTTAGERS' ASSOCIATION

Cottagers Get Together for Many Needed Improvements

An association of the cottagers of Kawartha Park colony has been formed, with Mr. H. G. Fitzgerald of Lakefield, as president, Mr. Neale of Toronto, vice-president and Dr. M. A. Morrison of Peterborough, secretary treasurer.

It is practically a continuance of the Clear Lake Cottagers' Association formed in 1911.

It has for its object the furtherance of plans for the benefit of Stoney Lake in general, and of Kawartha Park colony in particular.

The following are a few of the things discussed at the two meetings held last week: The opening up of a road to the rear of the properties fronting on Clear Lake, to be known as Hiawatha Avenue, additional road work to be done on that part of the fifteenth concession line leading from the Burleigh Road to Kawartha Park, improvements to the mail service on Stoney Lake, restocking the lakes with fish, the management of regattas held at Kawartha Park, an addition to Kawartha Park wharf, and the securing of the uninterrupted privilege of bathing on Sandy Beach, and the erection of dressing rooms thereon.

A committee has been appointed to draw up rules and regulations for their guidance in the future.

It is the purpose of the Association to co-operate with the other interests that may be formed in the future, in anything whatever will be of benefit to Stoney Lake as a whole.

—Monty La Rock.

Thin Men and Women

DO YOU WANT TO GET FAT AND BE STRONG?

The trouble with most thin folks who wish to gain weight is that they insist on drugging their stomach or stuffing it with greasy foods; rubbing on useless "flesh creams," or following some foolish physical culture stunt, while the real cause of thinness goes untouched. You cannot get fat until your digestive tract assimilates the food you eat.

There is a preparation known to reliable druggists almost everywhere which combines all the digestive elements needed by the digestive organs to help them convert food into rich, fat-laden blood. This preparation is called Sargol and much remarkable testimony is given as to its successful use in flesh building. Sargol, which comes in the form of a small unobtrusive tablet takes no meals, and in using with the digesting food tends to promote its fat, flesh and muscle building elements so that the blood can readily accept and carry them to the starved portions of the body. You can readily picture the transformation that additional and previously lacking flesh making material should bring with your cheeks filling out, hollows about your neck, shoulders and bust disappearing and your taking on form up to 20 pounds of real healthy flesh. Sargol, harmless, inexpensive, effective. All leading druggists of this vicinity have it and are authorized to refund your money if weight increase is not obtained as per the guarantee found in each large package.

NOTE: Sargol is recommended only as a flesh builder and where excellent results in cases of nervous indigestion etc., have been reported cure should be taken about using it unless a gain of weight is desired.

Cut Forty Alfalfa Crops

LETHBRIDGE, Sept. 1—Messrs. Gregg and Gattrell, farmers three miles east of the city, have just finished cutting their forty-first crop of alfalfa from a field. They planted the field in 1874 and in 1875 cutting two crops off it. Each succeeding year they cut three crops and this year at last have cut two crops. The first cutting made forty in fourteen years.

"Tipperary" Has New Rivals In Popular Military Songs

One of Them, With the Music by Sir Frederic Bridge, is Written Around the Exploit of Michael O'Leary—King George Says "It's Splendid"—"Keep the Home Fires Burning."

LONDON, Aug. 31—"It is splendid," said King George, "and I will give it to my daughter to play over for me.

It was at the close of a great Red Cross concert in the Albert Hall, when Sir Frederick Bridge presented to the King a copy of his song, "Michael O'Leary, V. C.," which had just been sung for the first time in London by Mr. Ben Davies, a famous Welsh tenor, amid tremendous enthusiasm—such a scene, in fact, as those who took part in it declare they never witnessed in the great hall before.

The words of the song were composed by a well known Irish author, Mr. John McGrath, complimentary to Lance Corporal Michael O'Leary, of the First Irish Guards, perhaps the most lionized of all the winners of the Victoria Cross who have come back from the front "on short leave."

The story of the young Irish soldier's bravery already has been fully told, but it may be recalled that it was at Cuinchy on February 1, this year, when forming one of the storming party which advanced against the German barricades he dashed to the front and, single handed, killed two Germans who were holding the first barricade, after which he attacked a second barricade about sixty yards further on, which he captured after killing three Germans and making prisoners of two more. He practically had captured the German position by himself, and prevented the rest of the attacking party from being fired upon.

Mr. Ben Davies had no sooner sung the song than its success was assured. It is a remarkable coincidence that a year ago the whole British army marched to battle singing the Irish song "It's a Long Way to Tipperary," the popularity of which has never waned. The recruiting bands of London still play it every day as they march through the streets. Now, a year later, the bands have taken up another new Irish song, "Michael O'Leary," which has been arranged by Mr. Percy E. Fletcher as a march, entitled "The V. C. March," with a suggestion of that old inspiring Irish air "The Minstrel Boy" thrown in.

Line from American Poem.

The song opens with a line from the well known Irish-American poem "The Fighting Race," and the first verse runs:

"Kelly and Burke and Shea
Flannigan, Doolin and Geary
Very good men in their day—
But nothing to Michael O'Leary
There was the black barricade
Germans all fixed with their rifles,
Shells, and the grim cannonade;
'Tut!' says O'Leary, 'they're trifles.'
There is the barricade grim.
Manned by the truculent German.
What is the business of him,
O'Leary? 'to kill all the vermin'
Forward, O'Leary! they're there;
Dont forget the old sheeling
Mountains of Cork may be bare."

Nothing but furze and good feeling,
Yet you raise boys that are men!
Out on those mountains of heather;
Up from the hill and the glen,
Old Inchageela, they gather.

Refrain.

Michael O'Leary! they cry,
Here's to the health of our brother,
Raise his fame up to the sky,
And the fame of his father and mother!"

Sir Frederick Bridge, principal organist at Westminster Cathedral and composer of oratorios and cantatas, never before wrote a song of this character, but captivated by the words and inspired by the bravery of the young Irish guard-man, he" wrote this:

"Till the Boys Come Home."

Another catching song that is being sung by every soldier is "Till the Boys Come Home," "Keep the Home Fires Burning," composed by Mr. Ivor Novello and published by Messrs. Ascherberg, Hopwood & Crew, Ltd., 16 Mortimer street, London.

Mr. Novello's name is well known in the musical world, and there is such a mystic charm and simplicity about the melody that it grips every one who hears it. The words, too, by Mrs. Lena Guilbert Ford, have the same direct appeal to heart and mind in these days of titanic struggle. Mr. Ivor Novello is the son of Mme. Clara Novello, the conductor of the Royal Welsh Ladies' Choir, and, although only twenty years old, has won a high reputation as a singer as well as a composer.

He was barely fifteen when his first song was published. "Till the Boys Come Home" has latest was written very quickly. His mother had asked him why he had not written a patriotic song, and as luck would have it, the phrase "Keep the Home Fires Burning" had been persistently running through his brain.

"It was an inspiration, and he gave full rein to it at the piano. The result was that soon he had evolved the melody that is haunting everybody today.

Then he made a trip to the British front in France, and when he sang it to the soldiers they were enraptured—so much so that he sang it four hundred times to them, and they would have had him there yet if they could have had their way.

CONSCRIPTION WOULD BE ACCEPTED IF "K" DEMANDED IT

LONDON, Aug. 30—Lord Cromer gives three reasons why he deprecates the campaign in favour of conscription. He says:

"In the first place, I think that whatever may be my personal opinions my support would at present do more harm than good. It would tend, not to allay, but rather to accentuate, the class controversy with which we are manifestly threatened, and which we should above all things, endeavour to avoid.

"In the second place, it is obviously not impossible that the acute differences of opinion which exist on this subject may break up the present condition, and this, in my opinion would be disastrous. It is essential that unity be preserved even at the expense of great sacrifice of personal opinion on the part of many.

"In the third place, I think this is eminently a question upon which the Government, which has full information on this subject, should give the lead. When I say the Government I mean more especially Lord Kitchener.

"Circumstances have forced him into a position which is altogether unique. If he were to state publicly that compulsion is necessary, my belief is that the support of the mass of the public would be at once secured.

On the other hand, I should regard it as not merely unwise but practically hopeless to endeavour to enforce compulsion if Lord Kitchener were to adopt the hostile or even neutral attitude. There never was occasion when, as it appears to me, silence more deserved the epithet of golden."

BODIES WERE NOT LOCATED

Special to The Examiner.

HONOLULU, Sept. 1—Exposure of the hulk of the U. S. submarine F 4 failed to reveal any trace of the bodies of the crew or to throw any light on the cause of the accident.

The F 4 lies on her starboard side in the drydock. When the examining board entered the vessel they found the starboard side and bottom filled with debris, battery plates, sand and mud. If any bodies remain in the hulk they are under the debris. Doubt was expressed as to whether any would be found since the great holes torn in the submarine allowed the marine creatures with which the waters of Hawaii swarm, to enter, and it was feared the bodies of the crew had been entirely destroyed.

CANADA SHOULD ENLIST 500,000 MEN ADVOCATES THE OPPOSITION LEADER

"Half a Million Men Thrown Upon the Battlefields of Europe Might Win For All Time the Fight for Freedom" Says Mr. Rowell—"What If You and I Perish If Liberty and Democracy Survive?

TORONTO, Sept. 1—Newton Wesley Rowell, leader of His Majesty's Opposition in the Ontario Legislature, the speaker at the luncheon at the C.N.E. on Empire Day today, gave one of the most stirring and eloquent addresses ever delivered in the banquet chamber of the Administration Building. "If the Empire is worth living for," he said at the conclusion, "it is worth dying for. What does it matter if you and I perish, if liberty and democracy survive, guaranteed by the institutions under which we live in our Empire."

Different Empire To-day.

Mr. Rowell was listened to with rapt attention, and at the close of his powerful address, was given a flattering ovation.

Mr. Rowell commenced his address by stating he was a constituent of Sir George Foster, and Sir George represented him in the Federal House. It was a novel experience to be taking the place of Sir George Foster. Mr. Rowell pointed out that the "Empire was a different Empire in many respects than it was a year ago, it is larger in area by 3,000,000 square miles," said the speaker, "with the addition of Egypt, and the Soudan, which had been officially annexed since a year ago, with Arabia and German South Africa. This brings to us additional responsibilities. One thing, however, stands out, and that is the greater sense of unity and solidarity throughout the Empire. There is an essential oneness of all the free nations that make our Empire, in the love for national freedom and democracy."

Mr. Rowell reviewed the history of the war, declaring that, as a result "We are greater democrats than ever, and more determined to adhere to our love of liberty and democracy.

Chose Path of Duty.

"One thing we Britons should be thankful for," said Mr. Rowell, "and that is that the statesmen of Britain used every effort to prevent the outbreak of war. When the decision had to be made, our Empire chose the path of honour and duty rather than that of self-interest. If disaster should overtake us, and I do not for a moment believe it will, then Briton could not have chosen a nobler cause for which to face disaster, that acuse being defence of the rights of gallant little Belgium."

He pointed out that Britain had done such a magnificent work so quickly in sweeping the seas of the enemy that many people didn't recognize the full value of the achievement. Neutral opinion was with the allies. The enemies were kept within their harbours as if by magic.

"Britain had done more on the seas than Germany has done on the land, and wherever Germany turns she faces enemies," said Mr. Rowell.

Bright Spot in History.

As to Britain's expeditionary force, the speaker referred to their conduct at Mons as one of the brightest spots in history. Britain, he maintained, has more than discharged her duty in the size of her expeditionary force to France. Further, Britain has been able to uphold the stability of the financial markets of the allies. There may have been timid souls in England a year ago, as to the loyalty of the British domains, but the one year of war has shown the benefit of liberty and of freedom to be so great that all men of all classes have volunteered their services for the defence of the Empire. The attitude of the people of India was a matter of particular pride to the speaker. These people, members of the Moslem faith, had remained loyal to England, despite the diplomatic triumph of Germany in getting Turkey, the head of the Moslem faith, to join her side of the conflict.

That stability on the part of the people of India, displayed more than anything else, the appreciation of a nation towards Britain's gift of freedom.

Enemy Once, Friend Now.

The second great example, Mr. Rowell declared, is to be found in South Africa, from which colony once an enemy—there are now being sent armies to fight the enemy at the Dardanelles. These things, as Mr. Rowell declared, pointed out more strongly than anything else could have done, the benefits of a democratic freedom such as Britain stands for.

"It is worth more to-day," Mr. Rowell concluded, "to be a Canadian than it was a year ago. We are proud of those who have given up their lives for us, for you, for me. They have proven worthy of us. Are we worthy of them?

Should Enlist Half-Million.

"Are we prepared to carry out their work, to uphold the standards of liberty, for which they so cheerfully laid down their lives? We have not commenced to enlist a percentage of those eligible. Have we had enlisted as many men in proportion to our population as has England? If we had, we would have enlisted 500,000 men. We must listen to the warning, which is constantly coming from the front, that the forces in Europe may be so evenly drawn that the result will be inconclusive. If that is the case, then the future generations, instead of turning their attention to regular manufacturing, will be compelled to continue the making of munitions and the young of our land must be trained for the next great Armageddon. Let us act now, when a half-million men thrown upon the battle fields of Europe, might win for all time the fight of freedom."

WHAT ARE YOU GOING TO DO?

Bucler Alan Sharpe of Peterborough, who is with the 39th Battalion at Lydd Camp, Eng., sends the Examiner the following poem, which is popular in England and which, as he expresses it, might help recruiting here—

What Are You Going to Do?

If you haven't a mother with a grey, bent head,
And you have no kiddies and a wife,
Then fall in the ranks with the men who have,
To relieve Brittania's strife.
You'll be sad when they've won and the troops return,
Then what will you have to say
You may thank a lot of your soldier lads
But they think more of you to-day
We share his joys, but not his woes
He's sowing and we will reap
He'll drain his blood to the meanest foes,
Each day we heel and sleep
There's a cap for you of khaki or blue,
There's room in the ship or trench
Where you'll do more honour to your pals and king
Than on the arm of a lovesick wench

You remember the time when you used to sing
Rule Brittania, Rule the Waves,
You shouted hooray to the toast of the King,
And you said we never would be slaves
You're challenged now to uphold your boast
By the chanters of "Die Wachtam Rhein."
Now do as you said when the flag you boast
Like your pals in the firing line
What maid could call you her own brave
If not in blue or khaki clad,
When the braves of her breed the guns do feed,
When the Empire's dim and sad.
We've seen you on glorious parades
With a spirit quite loyal and true
But how many failed to walk on the day
When the country needed you

You may sing Tipperary or the Maple Leaf
And your patriotic badges you can show,
But that won't help your country and king,
Lord Kitchener and Jellico
They want you there, and they'll pay you fare
For to help cut the Tommies and Tars,
And when you're old with silvery hair
You will cherish both your medal and bars,
If you haven't a mother with a grey, bent head
And you have no kiddies and a wife,
Then fall in the ranks with the lads who have
If you're well and in the prime of life
You'll be sad when they've won and your pals return
Then the golden sun will shine,
They'll have robbed you of your heirloom and have made you free,
If you weren't in the firing line

Arts and Crafts Column

In this column, conducted by Mr. Hughson Johnstone, painter and decorator, 510 College street, will be answered on Wednesdays questions of the kind given below, for the benefit of those who, in this period of stringency and enforced and suggested economy, might like doing their own work. Questions relating to painting, sign-writing, paperhanging, furniture polishing, and decorating may be sent to the Examiner, and will receive attention in due course.

Bob, Cobourg, Ont.—Will you be kind enough to tell me how to put gold letters on glass?

Answer.—Your question is very indefinite, as there are several kinds of gold letters. Some are cemented on the outside; others stuck on the inside and there is gilding on glass. I will presume then that you refer to gilding on glass. This is rather difficult for a novice, however, it is not hard to practice on a small square of glass until you become proficient enough to attempt to better your own window. First, be sure to get pure gold leaf or disappointment will follow. "Dutch metal" may be used for practice, however. Draw out on a sheet of paper your letters, then, with a tracing wheel, run all around the letters, now clay your pricked pattern on the outside of the glass in the position you want your letters to appear, attach your pattern with gummed paper or stamps, get a piece of cheesecloth, in which put some fine whiting or powdered chalk, gathering up and fixing the four corners. With this pounce bag rub over your pattern, when the chalk or whiting will work through the holes you made with the tracing wheel, showing perfectly your letters on the glass. Take off your paper pattern and clave it. On the inside of the glass use your pounce bag freely, dusting on lots of whiting, then with a clean rag or silk handkerchief clean your glass thoroughly, now take enough fine isinglass to cover a dime, put it in a tea cup, half fill it with boiling water, and stir when dissolved and while warm, fill the cup with alcohol, then strain through a piece of silk. With a camel's hair brush wash on lots of your mordant, drawing your brush crosswise along the top, allowing it to flow freely down. When it gets sticky lay on your gold leaf, lots of it, being sure to cover all your letters. Then flow on more size, being careful not to dislodge the gold. When this is perfectly hard—say, in a day or two—reverse your paper pattern, lay it on the gold position as before, then with a hard, sharp pencil, go over all the outlines, take away your paper, blow off the loose whiting, and you will see the outlines of your letters. Now with Japan black cut in very carefully your letters, when this is hard, clean off with a wet sponge the ragged gold edges. The process, after this is manifold, such as shading, outlining, ornamenting, etc., but all done with paint and varnish.

Ignoramus, Peterborough, Ont.—What will remove ink stains from mahogany?

Answer.—Dissolve two ounces of Oxalic acid in a pint of rain water, to this add one ounce of butter of antimony. Use it carefully or you may discolour the wood surrounding the stain.

Tay Pay, Brighton, Ont.—Through your "Arts and Crafts" column of your interesting paper please publish the way painters make their white enamel.

Answer.—We are loath to publish the intricacies of the trade in this column. However, here is a recipe that may answer your purpose. To five pounds sendrine zinc white ground in varnish add one quart damar varnish, mix this thoroughly, then add one pint French Oil Varnish, half pint of pale gold size and thin with pure turpentine. The above makes a good white enamel for interior work. The addition of a little stock of Prussian blue improves the whiteness.

One in Doubt, Peterborough, Ont.—Will you kindly advise me through your "Arts and Crafts" column what to do with the cracks in my kitchen floor. I do not like linoleum on it and would like to paint it. Will it be all right for me to putty the cracks, or will I use a crack filler? If the latter will you give me a recipe for same?

Answer.—Pure linseed oil putty is very good and was in general use up to recent years, when crack fillers were compounded and placed on the market, some of them are better than putty. You can make one that may answer your purpose in the following manner. Thoroughly mix equal parts of plaster paris, yellow ochre and Vandyke dry. Then with boiled linseed oil and turpentine, mix it to the consistency of putty and force it well into the cracks; it will dry harder and quicker than putty and is more satisfactory.

A.B.C., Peterborough.—I am troubled to know what is the proper colour to use in a bedroom facing north. Is it true that certain colours should be avoided in such a room? If so, what are they?

Answer.—Instead of enumerating a multitudinous colours not to use, or suggest a colour which may be used, I will give you a simple plan to follow in decorating a north bedroom. A north light is a clear, cold, penetrating blue light, therefore, select a warm, soft hue, harmonized by its complementaries. At the same time you must be guided by your other details, besides a north light. Remember your rugs, furniture, picture frames, etc. Another thing: You may have green vines or a tree casting a shade through your window, if so, then your north light, so clear and cool, is subdued. So, if the aspect is cold, select warm colours, if warm, select cold colours.

It's Easy to Peel Off Your Tan or Freckles

This is what you should do to shed a spoiled complexion spread evenly over the face, covering every inch of skin, a thin layer of ordinary mercolized wax. Let this stay on over night, wash it off next morning. Repeat daily until your complexion is as clear, soft and beautiful as a young girl's. This result is inevitable, no matter how soiled or discolored the complexion. The wax literally peels off the filmy surface skin, exposing the lovely young skin beneath. The process is entirely harmless, so little of the old skin coming off at a time. Mercolized wax is obtainable at any drug store; one ounce usually suffices. It's a veritable wonder worker for rough, tanned, reddened, blotchy, pimpled or freckled skin.

Pure powdered saxolite is excellent for a wrinkled skin. An ounce of it dissolved in a half pint of witch hazel makes a refreshing wash lotion. This renders the skin quite firm and smooth, indeed the very first application erases the finer lines, the deeper ones soon follow.

When rinsing the children clothes it is a good plan to add a little alum to the water as this renders them less liable to catch fire.

A new chair for invalids is equipped with a system of mirrors by which the occupant may see what is going on all around without the necessity of moving the head.

SOCKS ARE NEEDED BY MEN OF NEW BATTERIES

The attention of the different Peterborough societies who are making comforts for the soldiers, is called to the following items from the Kingston Whig. Half the 33rd Battery are Peterborough men and the need should be supplied:

There are now organized at Barriefield camp three of the finest kinds of artillery batteries. The men of the three batteries which have been here since their organization, now need socks and the Ordnance Corps, due to peculiar circumstances, are unable to supply them. Some of the men are not in a financial position to buy them as they brought no money, thinking of course that the militia authorities would look after their needs. Now if wet weather sets in and the men get their feet wet, they have no change of socks. It is a splendid thing to send socks to the men at the front, but here is a splendid opportunity for some of the Kingston societies or individuals who have been doing this for the boys at the front to do good work for the men in training at the camp.

The only socks which have yet been received at the camp were 140 pairs from Mrs. G. T. Johnston, regent of the Margaret Polson Murray Chapter of the I.O.D.E., Montreal. Her son, Lieut. Johnston, 34th Battery, made the request to her a few days ago, and on Monday he was pleasantly surprised to receive 140 pairs of woolen socks. They have been issued to the men, one pair each, but the men of the 32nd and 33rd Batteries have not been so fortunate. It is up to Kingstonians to supply this need and not have to send to Montreal or any other place for such a necessary item as socks.

Fired Barn For Insurance Pleaded Guilty in Court

Belmont Township Man Before Magistrate Langley This Morning —Sentence Will Be Pronounced on Thursday.

Cephus Munroe of Belmont Township pleaded guilty in the County Police Court this morning to a charge of arson and was remanded for sentence until to-morrow morning.

Mr. G. N. Gordon, the prisoner's counsel, stated to Magistrate Langley that the prisoner had decided to change his plea, and accordingly, elected to be summarily tried and forthwith pleaded guilty. The offence was committed at 10 o'clock on the night of August 13th, when the prisoner set fire to his father's barn after the latter had urged him to destroy it for the insurance it carried. Mr. Gordon said that the young man was twenty-six years old, was married and had one child. His record had been good previous to this affair. Munroe had worked at shovelling coal for the C.P.R. at Havelock. In establishing his home and through illness he had become financially involved, his furnished the motive for the offence, although he overlooked the fact that the property was encumbered. The young man, Mr. Gordon said, was illiterate, could neither read nor write.

The building was valued at $150 and was insured for $75. It is understood that the father did not put in a claim for insurance, nor does he propose to. Mr. Gordon made a strong appeal for leniency.

Crown Attorney Hatton stated that this was a very serious crime. The barn had been rented and the tenant had paid a rental in advance, notice had been given to Mr. Munroe, Sr., of its termination on Aug. 16th. It was evident that the offence had been carefully planned and carried out. The burning involved the destruction of the tenant's property. Magistrate Langley stated that arson was punishable by life imprisonment. It was a serious crime and an example had to be made that the community would realize that crime is ferreted out and punishment given.

For the sake of his wife the Magistrate said he would be as lenient as possible, but he intimated that he would impose a short term. Sentence will be given at 10:30 on Thursday.

WITH THE CANADIAN REMOUNTS IN FRANCE

Mr. and Mrs. Bartlett, Murray Street, have received the following interesting letter from their son, Claude, who is in France with the Canadian Remount Depot. In it he refers to Harold Morrow and Leo. Holland, the other Peterborough boys with the Remounts:

Somewhere in France,
August 15th, 1915.

Dear Mother and Dad. Received your letters of July 26, 31 and Aug. 1, last night, and was pleased to get them all. Harold, Leo, and I are all well, and not having too bad a time, although it is a rough life. Harold and I went to the lines again with horses and it is a fine trip, although the suffering one sees is terrible. We saw a trainload of German prisoners, and they seemed to be glad they were captured. Harold was in the car next to me, only one man in a car with eight horses, packed like sardines. The horses get terribly frightened at first, but gradually get accustomed to it. I had one horse nearly out the door with the train going full speed, but after clubbing him over the head he finally got back, much to my pleasure. We were very close this time, and could hear the guns and rifles cracking. It was a good trip after we got the horses under control. It took us one day to come back, leaving there in a box car about 12 o'clock, midnight. We went over a new bridge outfit in the place of the one the French blew up to stop the Germans advancing. We also passed several old French castles, some in ruins. We passed several Red Cross trains full of wounded soldiers, some of whom were rolling in pain.

My knee is all right again. I think it must have been the wet weather which affected it. You may send me some heavy grey woollen socks. The ones I have now have no heels or toes in them. When you receive any assignment from the Government let me know, so I can tick it off in my pay book. The climate of France is very similar to that of Canada. In the summer it is like with a heavy uniform and woolen underwear on. I got a couple of bundles of papers the other day and was sure glad to get them. I will drop Blake a letter of congratulation to-day. Would like to see that new cousin. There is nothing you need send us except a little money once in a while, and plenty of socks. We have only had three pair since we enlisted, and I can't darn them, although there is yarn and needles in our housewife. You might send us something to eat that we can't get here, anything that will keep. I have been going to Church quite regularly. I went to Church with Harold last Sunday and the Church where we went is said to be over 900 years old. The inner walls were all bare stones, and the images were blackened with age. It was lit with oil lamps and had the old-fashioned box pews in it. I have just had a letter from Uncle, and he is most anxious that Harold and I should continue our French lessons at the Y.M.C.A. in our spare time. So when we go to see him we will be able to parlevo with him. We hope to get a furlough soon. I am going to wrestle a fellow to-night in the Y.M.C.A. He bet me 25 francs I couldn't throw him three falls out of four. That looks like easy money to me, although he is heavier than I am.

Well, mother, the food is good, only there is always the same old thing, and since our rations have been cut down we generally make a couple of rounds if broke, or else go to the canteen. Our beds are made of hard wood with the soft side of the slats turned up. We put one blanket and a rubber sheet over the boards, and three blankets over us. We are quite used to hard beds and our hips are getting covered with callouses, but we sleep quite comfortably. I never complain.

It seems funny to think of you and mother at dinner while I am having my jam and cheese for supper. Our camp is on a high hill and is well hidden by trees from the sea. The drives around the camp have fine tall trees on each side of the road, and meet at the top. We also get a good view of the sea and can see the boats of supply being escorted to — which is only about four miles from us. There has been a lot of rain here, and Harold and I ordered rubber boots; we get soaked through through patties, boots, and everything; it is so muddy. I do hope we will not have to put the winter in here. Sil vous plait, send us lots of papers, as they help us spend many an hour.

Harold and I were helping to build a new road yesterday, but after working a short time found a berry patch. Harold has gone to the town to-day. I could not get a pass so will have to go to a small village. This is payday, so we will have a good vegetable dinner.

Well mother I think I have answered all your questions this time, so will close, with love to you both; hoping this letter will find you both in good spirits, as it leaves me at present.

Your loving son,
CLAUDE.

Ancient Wrinkle Chaser at Toronto Exhibition

One of the most interesting features at the Toronto Exhibition this year is the Egyptian Room in the Arcade, between the Women's Building and the Manufacturers' Building, where a noted beauty specialist explains the marvellous powers of Cuit Wrinkle Chaser.

Cuit is a combination of Oriental oils prepared exactly as Cleopatra and the noted beauties of ancient times applied to their skin to keep away wrinkles and preserve the youthful complexion. The secret was given to a Canadian traveller by an Arab who had been entrusted with the formula. Druggists everywhere handle the preparation under the trademarked name of Cuit. The beauty specialist also explains the superior qualities of Cuit Face Powder De Luxe. USIT MANUFACTURING CO. LIMITED, 476 Roncesvalles Avenue, Toronto.

WHOOPING COUGH.

Mrs. Charles Lovell, Agassiz, B.C., writes: "Seven of our nine children had whooping cough the same winter and we attribute their cure to Dr Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine. We always have it in the house, and recommend it as the king of all medicines. I was formerly completely cured of protruding piles by using Dr Chase's Ointment."

Rather Than Lower the Value We Will Raise the Price

¶ Men of Canada:---The day has dawned when the Scotland Woolen Mills is forced to raise its price to EIGHTEEN DOLLARS in order to maintain the high standard of value you have become accustomed to.

¶ It is no longer possible to tailor your Suit or Overcoat with our famous BRITISH WOOLENS for $15 and leave ourselves any margin of profit at all.

¶ Our big British Mills have been producing enormous quantities of KHAKI, and they have to pay fancy prices to get a surplus supply of raw wool fleeces with which to manufacture our woolens. War conditions have almost doubled the cost of production at our mills, and freight charges on shipments from the old land are in many cases three or four times as large as they were before the war.

¶ From July 31st, 1914, to July 31st, 1915, the Scotland Woolen Mills Company turned out more orders than in any previous year in its existence, and yet for more than three months past we have BEEN SELLING AT A LOSS.

¶ Gentlemen:---It is now over nine years since we opened at 139 Yonge Street, Toronto, introducing Canada's first one-price tailoring institution, and we fixed the price at a figure within the reach of every man. During that period our unequalled value in Made-to-order Suits or Overcoats of BRITISH WOOLENS at fifteen dollars ---"no more, no less"---has brought our name and fame into tens of thousands of Canadian homes, and we have grown to such an extent that it now requires THIRTY-SIX stores to look after our trade, together with a big mail order department for those who are out of reach of our branches.

¶ It has taken me almost a year to write this announcement. We have hesitated a long time about increasing your clothes cost. We have entirely reorganized our business to cope with the change in price. Big shipments of expensive fabrics have been received from our mills, and arrangements have been made for a steady supply for future needs. Our standard of value will be RAISED. For $18 you will have much wider choice, better fabrics, better workmanship and trimmings, better attention and quicker deliveries.

¶ I believe we have shown good judgment in changing the price now, rather than lower the VALUE. It is for YOU to decide whether we are right or wrong.

¶ The change goes into effect simultaneously in every Scotland Woolen Mills Store on Saturday morning, September 4th---except in the extreme West, where the price remains at $20.

GERMANY'S TOY TOWN IS IDLE

Special to The Examiner:

BERLIN Aug 30. The toy town of the world is silent and deserted. From the thirteenth century until the outbreak of the European war the eyes of all the children of the world have turned to Sonneberg, perched high among the Thuringian forests in Germany, but Nuremberg can no longer export the former huge output of its mountain neighbour.

Seven centuries ago the inhabitants of this small village, almost hidden in dense forests, carved by hand all their household utensils. Gradually more of these were made than the thrifty housewives used, so the men took them down for sale to Nuremberg.

Such was the modest beginning of this world centre of toys. Before the sudden cessation of the manufacture at the outbreak of the war more than 10,000 different kinds of toys were manufactured in this place, among them the wooden toys and the waxen dolls produced in enormous numbers. As the importance of this centre grew schools of design and modeling were established in the neighbouring villages and drawing was made compulsory in all the schools for many miles around.

In Sonberg only the children are glad. To them the cessation of manufacture means time for play. Owing to the pressure put upon them in helping to make toys after school hours the boys and girls of this mountain village alone among the children of the world have grown to hate these playthings. At last they have relief. The war at least has brought those children joy.

FIRST SURVEY OF TRENT CANAL

The first survey of the Trent Canal was made in 1833. Mr H. N. Bond, civil engineer, was appointed by Sir John Colborne, Lieutenant-Governor of Upper Canada, to make a survey of the waters connecting Lake Simcoe and Lake Ontario. In 1834 he completed the survey of the Trent and Otonabee Rivers, and in 1835 resumed the survey, continuing it from Peterborough, via the Otonabee and back waters, to Lake Simcoe. The Imperial Government built about 1837, a lock at Peterborough, another at Hastings, and a third at Crisholm's Rapids. The last two were demolished a few years ago to make room for larger structures in concrete. In 1833 Sir John Macdonald's government let contracts for the construction of locks at Bobcaygeon Falls, Buckhorn, Lovesick and Burleigh Falls. About 1887 these sections were thrown open to navigation. In 1896 contracts were let for the construction of the division extending from Lake Simcoe to Balsam Lake, and for the Peterborough-Lakefield section, including the construction of the Peterborough lift lock, which was opened in June 1904. The Kirkfield lift lock was opened in July 1907.

WE MAY HAVE TO WEAR GREY

Examiner Special

That the industrial development of Canada along chemical lines affecting many branches of trade is being throttled by the duty of fifteen cents per proof gallon levied on the manufacture of alcohol is the declaration of members of the Society of Chemical Industry.

"We have called the matter to the attention of the Government, but we do not want to embarrass them at this time," declared Alfred Burton, honorary secretary of the Canadian section and manager of the Canadian Dyers' Association.

Mr. Burton was questioned as to the state of the dyeing trade in Canada. He stated that the same condition existed here as have caused the Government of the United States to create a commission to investigate what can be done to remedy the shortage of anilines, largely imported from Germany.

Could Produce Dyes.

"If we had duty free alcohol, we could produce the aniline dyes," remarked Mr. Burton. "As it is, our Government has not done anything. It has been hesitancy on military matters, and things have been allowed to drift. We will have to do what was suggested by Sir George Foster earlier in the war and cut our coat according to our cloth. There is plenty of khaki and there may be mixtures with white. There can be Oxford and Cambridge and we will have to be fashionable. In spite of the effort we will not be remarked.

For the lady shopper, it looks as though there would be no colour than heretofore. We do know that a trend can be turned out for the troops, however. After a while the material stuff that were crowded out by the aniline dyes, will be again available.

GERMAN SPY WAS ARRAIGNED

Special to The Examiner:

NEW YORK, Sept. 1—When arraigned in Brooklyn on a federal warrant charging forgery amounting to nearly $500,000, Ignatius T. Lincoln, formerly a member of the British Parliament and a self-confessed German spy, asked that his case be postponed for a week. The request was granted.

The alleged forgery was committed in London. Lincoln said in court that the charge was one "trumped up" in order to get him back to England where he said he had been [illegible]

THE WORLD OF SPORT

LINDSAY TEAM HERE ON SATURDAY NEXT

The Lindsay Olympics, winners of the Midland district baseball league will play the East City team at Riverside on Saturday afternoon. This will be the first game to decide the championship of the two towns, and should provide a fast line of ball. Swanston and Kirn will likely form the locals' battery.

Cobb in a Batting Slump Goes Badly

MIGHTY TYRUS IN THROES OF SLUMP.

DETROIT, Aug 31.—Ty Cobb is fighting to get out of one of the worst batting slumps that he has ever encountered. In the last five games, against Shawkey, Pich, Donavan, Caldwell, Vance and Cole, the Georgian has been to bat 20 times, running, without landing safely. Four times, however, he drew bases on balls, and once the pitcher hit him.

That leaves 15 consecutive charged times at bat, with no hits. Three of these times Cobb struck out and only twice did he get the ball to an outfielder. He was unjustly leaped upon on Saturday, but the Sunday crowd showed the right spirit by cheering him every time he came to bat. The fans can help hold back a player who is trying to break a slump.

CHENEY OF THE CUBS GOES TO BROOKLYN FOR SCHULTZ.

CHICAGO, Aug. 30.—Larry Cheney, Cub wetball king, has been traded to the Brooklyn Club, of the National League, for Outfielder Joe Schultz, the former Leaf. The deal has been on the fire for some time, but it was not until to-day that Manager Bresnahan, of the Cubs, and Manager Robinson, of the Dodgers, reached an agreement.

Cheney came to the Cubs in 1911, and after he got acclimated in the big league became the pitching sensation. This year he has trouble with his arm, and has been pounded harder than ever before. He has won eight and lost ten games to date.

Funny lot, those Philadelphians. They refused to patronize Connie Mack's ball park when the Athletics were winning pennants and world series. As a result the Mackmen lost $60,000.

But it's different with the Phillies. During the first 50 home games the Phillies have drawn 350,000 spectators—an average of 7,200 per game. If this rate of attendance keeps up the Phillies' owners stand to clear about $110,000 on the season.

CHICAGO, Aug. 31.—Poor Buck Weaver, Sox shortstop, will have to worry along on his baseball salary after to-day. His pool-room license was taken from him because there was bone-rolling in a back room.

ALEXANDER THE GREAT, GOOD LOSER

"There never was a pitcher who was a better loser than Alexander," is the bouquet that Pat Moran heaves at the pitching star of the Phillies. "The majority of pitchers crab and peeve when they lose, and if it happens to be the fault of their teammates they howl like a wounded sea lion.

"But Alexander is different. To lose hurts him—but no one knows it. After a defeat he's just as good natured as after a victory. If the boys make a game behind him Alex never says a word. If the boys come up and start to tell him how sorry they are he just laughs and tells them to forget it, that such things are all part of the game.

"Alexander is the most popular player on the Phillies' team, not because he is a great pitcher, but because he has a wonderful character because he's a man clear through."

BASEBALL

The Canadian league has but one more week to run, but that week seems like a million years to the pitchers of the St. Thomas team. Riley, Howick and Fulton are the only flingers now attached to Bierbauer's squad and a great warmness has come upon their 'gid soupbones.' Riley hasn't enough 'ambish' to pick up a baseball and the wings of Howick and Fulton are as full of "pep" as an ice cream soda. On Saturday these two were just bobbing them over and the batting averages of the Zimmerites soared skyward. Hamilton Spectator.

'Twas Ever Thus.

Media, Pa., Aug. 30.—Homerun Frank Baker's big bat gave Upland the championship of the Delaware County league here yesterday in the same manner it gave several championships to Connie Mack's Athletics. Upland beat Media 6-5. Baker's double sent in two runs early in the game.

In the ninth, with three balls and two strikes on him, Baker lifted one over the wall for a homer, clinching the pennant.

Billy Hart, who recently resigned as a National league umpire, has lived frugally in his 30 years of baseball and as close guardian of his purseys he is said to have rivaled Sam Leever. Umpire Charley Rigler had a lot of fun with Hart while paired with the veteran. While in Pittsburg they stopped at the Seventh avenue, but Hart preferred to get his little noon lunch at a five-and-ten.

"Say, Bill," remarked Rigler to Hart one noon-day, "The hotel is serving some fine clam chowder with a plate of toast for a dime. Try some of it."

"A dime, Charley, are you sure?" exclaimed Hart.

"Surest thing you know," replied Rigler. "Just had some of it."

Hart changed his mind about the beanery and returned to the hotel for his clam chowder and toast. He enjoyed it, but was handed a check for 40 cents. From that time on Hart entered any tips handed him by Rigler.

FRANCE SEIZES ESTATE OF GERMAN PRINCES

PARIS, Aug. 30. The property rights of three German princes in the estate of a French king have been taken over for the period of the war by the government. The property in question consists of the interests of Prince Pierre Auguste, Prince-Auguste Leopold and Prince Louis Gaston of Saxe-Coburg and Gotha in the Association of the Forest of Dreux. The society was organized to administer the undivided property of the heirs of King Louis Philippe.

Stock Markets

New York Stocks

NEW YORK, Aug 31. Speculation on the "war bride" is becoming less turbulent owing to the insistence by the banks that borrowers on this class of collateral put up large margins or pay extra high interest rates. One broker said yesterday the banks were insisting on margins ranging from 10 to 50 points, according to the advances that has taken place in the collateral offered.

Brokers with small capital but with customers desiring to speculate in war issues, have been forced to ask for large margins as when these have not been forthcoming, have discouraged the customer by emphasizing the good points of the rails, which are desirable as collateral.

Oil shares were strong, for reasons recently explained. California Petroleum, Texas Copper and Mexican Petroleum all advanced.

Commission houses are advising customers to purchase high grade rails. They argued that the railroads have started to move war munitions, and that earnings should soon reflect this additional traffic. Then there is the prospect of a huge tonnage from the bumper crops also, the growing recognition by the Inter-state Commerce Commission that the railroads are deserving of better pay for their services.

The plant of the American Steel Foundries Company, in Granite City, Ill., which has been closed since November 1 last, is to be reopened next week.

An official of the Anaconda Copper Company said the stories of an amalgamation of the Anaconda and Inspiration companies were ridiculous. "This is another case," he added, "of the revival of an old report, time and time again proved untrue and denied many times."

Anthracite coal interests directly affected by the recent Interstate Commerce Commission's order will hold another meeting in New York as soon as a quorum of the commission is in Washington.

Officials of the J. G. Brill Company deny that the company has received large munitions order.

Germans Find Many Uses For Sand Bags

Examiner Special:

"A book" with the German army now in the trenches in northern France sends the following interesting letter to the Berliner Tageblatt.

"The necessity is the mother of invention as was never so strongly demonstrated as in this war. We learn to use the most simple things for a most useful purpose, and objects that would never have seemed valuable before are made use of. In this connection the most useful article that we have in the trenches is the sandbag. How we ever would get along without it I do not know.

"The floor of our trench is so moist that straw is of no use in protecting us from dampness, and for this purpose we found the sandbags of great use. Our whole trench is lined with them. For sleeping purposes a sandbag makes an excellent pillow. A few sandbags placed one on top of another make an excellent chair or even table. And for protection against the enemy's bullets the sandbags are invaluable. We put a sandbag in front of our little windows and loopholes and feel safe. With us this protection how would we ever transport our bread, mail, meats, and other things from one trench to another.

"I want to say to the people at home, don't bother so much about making bags and other little affectionate gifts. but keep busy sewing sandbags. They are the most useful and valuable articles that we now have in our trenches."

WEDDING BELLS

ANNIS—DAVIS.

One hundred and ninety-seven Brock Street was the scene of a pretty wedding this afternoon, when Miss Agnes Gregg Davis was united in marriage to the Rev. Stanley Ewart Annis of Toronto. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. R. G. Peever, Pastor of George Street Methodist Church, assisted by the Rev. George Dixon of Saskatchewan. The house was prettily decorated for the occasion, and a large concourse of admiring friends were present to congratulate the bride. Miss Dorothy Aller rendered the solo "Until" by Wilfrid Sanderson.

Mr. and Mrs. Annis left this afternoon for Hartford, Conn., where they will spend a year in training preparatory to their departure for the mission fields of West China.

OKE—CLARK.

Quietly at her home, on Tuesday afternoon the marriage of Olive, second daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Clark to Ernest W. Oke, was solemnized, Rev. James of Omemee, officiating. The bride, attired in ivory crepe silk with embroidered tulle veil, entered the parlour to the strains of Lohengrin's wedding march, played by the bride's sister, Cora, and was given away by her father. Their only attendant was the bride's little niece, Olive Webster, who acted as flower girl.

After partaking of a sumptuous repast the happy couple amid showers of confetti, left for a trip to Muskoka before taking up their residence in Peterborough. The groom's gift to the bride was a pearl necklace, and to the flower girl a jewel bracelet.

The many and beautiful presents of the bridal couple evidenced the high esteem of their many friends.

HINTS ON TREE PRUNING FROM FORESTRY EXPERTS

WASHINGTON, Aug. 31.—September is the month for pruning trees, so the American Forestry Association here notifies its members, and gives them in the American Forestry Magazine the following hints on how the pruning should be done.

Always use a pole saw and pole shears on the tips of long branches, and use the pole hook in removing dead branches of the ailanthus and other brittle trees where it would be too dangerous to reach them otherwise.

Do not "head back" or cut off the top of a tree except where the tree is old and failing, and then under special instructions.

Be as sparing and as judicious in your pruning as possible, and do not raise the branches so high as to make the tree look like a telegraph pole.

Commence pruning the tree from the top and finish at the bottom.

Make every cut as close and parallel to the trunk as possible.

Your saw must be well set and sharp in order to make the cut perfectly smooth.

Leave no stubs, dead and dying wood, or fungus covered branches behind you.

Do not fail to cover every wound with coal tar, not allowing it to needlessly run down the trunk.

Do not remove several large branches on one tree at a time. They must be removed gradually, the work extending over several seasons.

Prevent tearing the bark off the tree in removing large limbs by first making an "undercut."

Make the cuts on a slant. Some trees, like the elm, sycamore, linden and willow, will stand the process of "heading back" more than others, and the poplar is a tree that must be cut back every few years to keep its crown from becoming too tall and unsafe.

When you shorten a branch leave a few twigs at the end in order to draw the sap to the fresh cut wound and thus enable the growing layer under the bark to heal it over.

In trimming small branches or shoots the cut must be made just above a bud.

When several branches come out from the trunk in a whorl they should not all be cut away at the same time lest the tree be girdled. This arrangement of branches occurs most frequently in the coniferous trees.

MOVING MORE QUICKLY

Special Cable to The Examiner:

He obtained his subaltern's certificate at the Provisional School of Infantry, held in Lindsay.

MR. FORD IS GIVING SOME OF IT BACK

DETROIT, Aug. 31.—These are busy days at the Ford Motor Company's administration building. Checks for $50 each are going out to more than 300,000 Ford owners who by purchasing their cars between August, 1914, and August, 1915, participate in Ford profits to the aggregate of more than $15,000,000. This disbursement is in itself rather a stupendous task. The checks are being mailed at the rate of about 10,000 a day, a per diem distribution of $500,000.

A large and distinct organization has been arranged to complete this task. When the profit sharing arrangement for Ford owners was announced August 1, 1914, a department to handle the details was installed in the Ford administration building. For several weeks now a large corps of stenographers has been filling in the 300,000 names in the checks. These names are taken from the original bills of sale. Open face envelopes are used, the name of the payee serving also as the mailing address. The amount of the check is printed on its face.

The work of signing more than three hundred thousand checks itself offered a problem. Each check carries the signature of one of three assistant cashiers, and the most inveterate scribbler might easily develop writer's cramp and grow exceedingly tired of his own name without some device to lighten his labour. There are five checks to a sheet, and by a single operation of the pen five checks are signed simultaneously.

Neutrality and British Submarine

Details of the attack of German destroyers upon the British submarine E-13 furnish one more instance of a particularly wanton violation of neutrality, this time with Denmark as the victim.

The E-13 was stranded in attempting to pass into the Baltic, and Danish torpedo boats were present to enforce neutrality by interning her in case she remained more than twenty-four hours in territorial waters.

While grounded and helpless and lawfully under Danish protection she was attacked by German destroyers, and fourteen of her crew were killed.

Aside from the savagery manifested the attack was a humiliating assault upon the sovereignty of Denmark, and under the circumstances it is surprising that the Danish torpedo boats did not return the fire of the German vessels. The Danes are realizing the bitter truth that "to be weak is to be miserable," but at least they have the satisfaction of knowing that their plight is not the result of incompetence and pacificism, but is due solely to the fact that they are a small nation.

Statements have appeared that the entry of the E-13 into the Baltic would in itself be a violation of neutrality. The assertion is an error. International law requires that the passage between free seas shall be free and, moreover, the neutrality and freedom of passage of the Sound, Great Belt and Little Belt are specifically provided by Treaties. The Russian Baltic fleet passed this channel on its fatal journey to the battle of Tsushima Straits during the Russo-Japanese War. The Kiel Canal owes its military importance to the fact that the German fleet is able to pass into the North Sea either from the Baltic or directly into Heligoland Bight. New York Herald

MOVIE NOTES

Back in New York on his first trip East in more than a year, Cecil B. De Mille, director general of the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company, yesterday stated his belief that the photoplay was developing into one of the great branches of world literature.

"It is stated on good authority that 60,000,000 persons in the United States and Canada attend motion pictures every week," said Mr. De Mille. How many others in different parts of the world also obtain entertainment and instruction from this medium is difficult to say. The photo play appeals to almost as many persons as newspapers, and the very nature of the appeal is swiftly developing a new world literature. Its form is that of a narrative which reaches the mind and the heart through the eye and we all know that sight is the most convincing of senses."

Jane Burnstone is to assume Raymond Hitchcock's role in a motion picture version of "The Red Widow" which the Famous Players Film Co. will bring out. Through its affiliation with the Charles Frohman Company, and Henry W. Savage this corporation has a control of the screen rights of more than three hundred plays.

Miss Florence Sweet's next motion drama will be "The Case of Becky," by Edward Locke, in which Miss Frances Starr appeared under the direction of David Belasco.

Victor Moore, who starred in "The Talk of New York" and other Cohan musical comedies, has been signed up to appear exclusively in Paramount pictures. He was recently seen at the Empire in "Snobs," one of the best comedies seen here in a long time.

JERSEY PASTOR QUITS TO FIGHT FOR BRITISH

NEW YORK, Aug. 31. The Rev. Frederick C. Jackson, pastor of the Dutch Reformed Church of Nyack, N. Y., yesterday resigned to become a lieutenant in the Canadian forces of the British army. He was married three months ago in Nova Scotia.

Mr. Jackson, who is thirty-two years old, is an American by birth, but he was brought up in Canada, and began preaching in Canadian mining camps. He served in the Boer war as a Canadian soldier and was wounded.

GENERAL HAMILTON REPORTS PROGRESS

RUSSIANS ESCAPE THE GERMAN TRAP

General Ivanoff's Armies Evacuated Lutsk With Scarcely Any Loss of Men or Guns While the Slavs By Falling Back Captured 10,000 Prisoners.

Special Cable to The Examiner:

PETROGRAD, Sept. 2.—Gen. Ivanoff's armies have escaped the last trap set by the Austro-Germans, the fortress of Lutsk having been evacuated by the Russians with scarcely any loss in men or guns, and the Slavs, falling back in the direction of Dubno fortress, have taken ten thousand prisoners. The enemy has made no material gains, but on the contrary has suffered heavily in killed and captured. The Slav line already has been reformed. Half a million Austro-Germans are now engaged in the attempt to sweep the Russians out of Galicia, but despite their moat determined efforts, supported by heavy shell fire, the enemy forces have been unable to break the Slav front. It is admitted here that the complete evacuation of Galician territory may be necessary because of the enemy's superiority in men and shells, but the present retirement in the Strypa River region is being accomplished with very light losses.

NEW YORK, Sept. 2.—That the German submarine that sank the Arabic was captured, not sunk, by British warships, was the story brought here to-day by an officer of the White Star liner Adriatic, who said the report was current in Liverpool and widely credited in Britain.

Swiss Thank France For Returning Interned Aviator Who Escaped

Examiner Special

PARIS, Aug. 31—Eugene Gilbert, the French aviator whose return to Switzerland after his escape from internment in that country was ordered by the French government, arrived in Berne yesterday, escorted by Captain Dufour, of the Swiss army, according to a Havas News Agency despatch today from Berne.

The aviator, whose recent escape was said to have been effected he had withdrawn his promise not to try to get away, was received by the Swiss staff and informed that he was considered as an officer interned without having given his word of honour.

Mr. Gilbert arrived this morning at the village of Hospenthal, where he was interned anew.

All the Swiss newspapers, the despatch states, declare that a most excellent impression has been created in Switzerland by the return of Gilbert.

Dr. Lardy, the Swiss Minister to France called on the French Minister of War, Mr. Millerand, today, to present "the thanks of the Swiss government for the courteous and chivalrous decision taken by the French government concerning Second Lieutenant Aviator Gilbert."

It has developed that Mr. Gilbert, before escaping, had written a letter to the Swiss General Staff, withdrawing his word of honour that he would make no attempt to escape. The letter was received several hours before the attempt was made, but was left unopened at War Headquarters, and the General staff maintains that Gilbert had not been released from his word of honour.

A VICTORY FOR U.S.

New York Papers Are Jubilant Over the Settling of the Long Controversy With Germany

"PEACE WITH HONOUR"

Special to The Examiner:

NEW YORK, Sept. 2—The New York newspapers today without exception, characterized the settlement of the German-American situation a great victory for the United States and for President Wilson. The comment included

World—"President Wilson's patient but unyielding devotion to the vital principles of law and humanity has brought peace with honour out of the German crisis."

Times—"President Wilson is in a position to say with fervour of full conviction that 'truth is mighty and will prevail.' The great diplomatic triumph which he has achieved in the long controversy with Germany is one for which the world will award him great credit. It will bring him high distinction."

Sun—"The United States has won a great diplomatic and moral victory in the square acceptance by Germany of these principles concerning neutral rights on the high seas for which our State Department has been contending since last February."

Reports From General Hamilton Reports Progress Made by the Allies---Germans Held in Check by Russians---Summary of the Latest War News.

Special Cable to The Examiner:

British. The ground thus far occupied by the British is of little military Berlin and Wireless to Tuckerton, N.J., Sept. 1.—The losses in dead on the whole Gallipoli front which the allies sustained as a result of the general offensive movement coincident with the Anafarta landing exceed 20,000 men. Most of the bodies are still unburied. One battalion was annihilated.
The Turkish losses are not light, but they do not approach those of the BBritish. The ground thus far occupied by the British is of little military value if an attack on the Dardanelles forts is their objective.

VIENNA, Sept 1, via London, 8:40 p.m.—The Russian fortress of Lutsk has been captured by the Teutonic forces, it was officially announced to-day by the Austrian War Office.

LONDON, Sept. 2.—Sir Ian Hamilton reports further important gains by the Allies at Gallipoli.

PARIS, Sept. 2.—French troops have occupied several Turkish islands off Syria.

PETROGRAD, Sept. 3.—The Russians seem to have the Germans now in check at all points.

LONDON, Sept. 2.—It is expected here that Germany will now try to wage a heavy submarine war against warships and transports.

PARIS, Sept. 2.—Several more German batteries have been silenced in the western front.

Famous Hotel, "Star and Garter," Will Be a Military Hospital

British Real Estate Agents' Institute Has Made a Gift to the Nation of the Renowned Inn Which Has Housed Kings and Emperors and Been the Scene of Historic Events

LONDON, Aug. 31—The historic old Star and Garter at Richmond has been presented to Queen Mary by the members of the Auctioneers and Estate Agents' Institute of the United Kingdom as a permanent home for paralyzed and totally disabled soldiers and sailors. The institute paid $107,500 for the old hotel, which originally cost $400,000. The Queen in accepting the gift, states that she is handing it over, with its beautiful terraces, gardens and grounds, to the British Red Cross Society, which has undertaken to equip and maintain the institution in conformity with the Queen's wishes.

The ground floor of the hotel contains a number of large and lofty rooms, which will form exceptionally fine wards. The windows of these rooms look over the Thames Valley, and that fine stretch of wooded country which is bounded only by the Surrey hills and the Great Park of Windsor.

Of the garden on the steep crest of Peter-hum Common it is proposed to make a garden city for paralyzed soldiers. There will be a little street with cottages and bungalows each with one good room capable of accommodating four beds. The houses will be warmed and will be occupied by patients the whole year through. The helpless man as he lies on his bed will be able to enjoy the view across the valley, while it will be the work of a moment to draw him, bed and all, to the edge of the terrace when the weather permits.

The position of the garden is such that the cottage in the picturesque village will not in the least interfere with the outlook from even the lowest wind ws of the hotel. As the Soldiers Garden City will accommodate some fifty patients the number of helpless men who can find a home either at the hotel or in the village will be about 150.

An Historic Inn.

The Star and the Garter probably the most famous hotel in England or was, until it fell upon evil days.

Among its most notable records is that of a breakfast given on June 10 1814 at which were present the Prince Regent, the Emperor of Russia, the King of Prussia, the Grand Duke of Oldenburg and the Duke of Prussia with his sons and nephew. The occasion when Napoleon's mother, Madame Mere, Queen Hortense and Queen Julie of Spain were present.

Queen Victoria's first visit was to the Star and Garter in 1845 when Louis Philippe as a boy in exile stayed there while after his death Queen Amelie lived there for some time. Princess Lieven gathered a little salon around her within its walls. Of Queen Victoria's later contemporaries there were indeed few who sooner or later did not seek its hospitality.

By 1872 it had been rebuilt, with a spacious pavilion and a handsome ballroom. For the next few years after that it was at its zenith of popular favour. The society of the latter 70s was vivacious. The reaction against the exceeding austerity of the ten years that had followed the death of the Prince Consort had begun, the late King, as Prince of Wales, liked bright social surroundings, people began to give brilliant balls, the professional beauty and assorted hostess. Dress was becoming more elaborate and the more modern standard of extravagance was beginning to be set up. The Star and Garter fell into line with all these manifestations. Given a fine pair of horses, it was a delightful drive of just the right distance from Hyde Park Corner on a fine summer's evening. The cooking was good, the wine unimpeachable. It is true that the coast was heavy, but to dine there was the right thing.

City companies held their banquets there. It was fashionable to hold wedding breakfasts in one or other of its fine rooms, and for a considerable time it was the objective of the Sunday afternoon drives of the Four-in-Hand club. The fashionable dress of the day were to be seen at its tables, and statesmen and celebrities of every degree met beneath its roof.

But its attractions began to wane long before the present century had dawned. It is the conventional thing to say that the coming of the motor car killed its popularity, but other causes were at work. The road-side hostelries through pastoral, open country not then entirely deserted, arrived at their zenith and began to decay. The era of the big hotel was coming on, and the Star and Garter, no longer necessary as a posting house for dinner on the journey to or from London, began to be neglected and after a period of struggle to keep up appearances, closed its doors to the public but in order to preserve its ancient character, a number of the best apartments were kept as a private club. Then came the war, and the old hotel, which had been the scene of so much revelry, so many historic gatherings, was converted into a hospital for wounded officers.

WAR NOTES

Interesting Items From Various Fields in the War Arena

Six more generals have been transferred from the active to the reserve list of the French Army by General Joffre, following the policy inaugurated by him early in the war of having only active and comparatively young men in command. As a result of this the average age of French generals has dropped since last year from 61 to 56 years.

Pardhon, the famous French aviator who was sent to help the Serbians nine months ago, has been made a Captain in the Serbian Army for his gallantry in bringing an Austrian aeroplane to earth. It is interesting to note that Pardhon, at the outbreak of the war was not doing sensational aerial stunts but growing flowers on the Riviera for the London market. He promptly abandoned this work and volunteered for service in the air.

Petrograd estimates that the Russians are now facing 35 to 40 per cent of the total forces of Germany and 70 per cent of those of Austria-Hungary. It is said that the German infantry pitted against the Czar's armies have increased 400 per cent and the cavalry 900 per cent during the last few months.

Fourteen German professors are to be called to Turkey to become members of the faculty of the University at Constantinople. They must lecture to the Turks in language for which purpose they are to be allowed a year in which to learn it.

Count Zeppelin that mad Englishmen welcome to travellers arriving from Germany are the spoiled children of the Hamburg cafes where they congregate. The travellers add that one hears of most wonderful air raids on the part of the admiral's airships.

GEORGE'S BAD SPELL.

Washington Never Could Learn to Write Some Words Correctly.

Whoever heard that the great George Washington never could learn to spell correctly?

You see, it happened this way. When George was quite a young boy he came across a copy of an English book called the "Young Man's Companion," written in a "plain and easy style," as the title stated, which taught one how to write letters, wills, deeds, to survey, to navigate, to build houses, to make ink and cider, how to doctor the sick and how to conduct one-self in society, "all without the aid of a tutor."

Washington studied this book from cover to cover and from it acquired two qualities that clung to him through life. His handwriting, easy, flowing and legible, was modeled from the engraved "copy" sheet, and certain forms of spelling were learned that he never could correct.

To the end of his life Washington wrote lie, lye; liar, lyar; ceiling, cieling; oil, oyl, and blue, blew, as in his boyhood he had learned to do from this old book. Struggle as he did in trying to spell as the others of his day did, he never could be sure of certain words.—St. Louis Republic.

FAULTS IN OUR SENSES.

Defects That Enable Us to Enjoy Stage and Moving Pictures.

It is a fairly well known fact that we cannot hear distinct sounds that come to us at the rate of twenty or more a second (it varies for different people, but only slightly). The result is that we get a continuous sound or musical tone. The same deficiency is evident in our sense of sight, for we cannot see distinctly objects presented to our vision at the rate of more than about eight a second. For this reason only is it possible to have moving pictures. For this reason also a light waved quickly appears as a streak.

The explanation of the deficiency in both cases lies in the fact that it takes time for a sense perception to go from the nerve ending in the particular organ of sense (ear or eye) to the brain; for we perceive only in the brain. It is caused by irritation of the nerve ending, the irritation causing a wave motion winding up at the brain. This speed has been measured and is not very fast. It is about an eleventh of a second after a tall man stubs his toe before he can send word to the foot to be held up. If a man had an arm eighty miles long and some one cut off a finger it would be an hour and three-quarters before the wave would cause pain in his brain.

Now, as a man's life consists of absolutely nothing else in the world but these sensory and motor nerve activities, it would seem that the smaller a man is the more perceptions he could have in a given time and that at the same age in years he would really be much more mature than a tall man. Albe has calculated that the entire number of such perceptions in a normal human life of seventy years is about ten to the eleventh power, or ten thousand million.

Of course, if it was not for this so-called deficiency two of our most enjoyable entertainments would be forever annihilated—that of music of whatever kind and that of moving pictures.—Chicago Herald.

AN EMPTY STOMACH.

Its Effect Upon the System and Why It Craves Food.

During our waking hours the stomach is rarely, if ever, completely empty; and apparently there is a very good physiological reason why it should not be. Thus the universal custom of taking meals about five hours apart, so that the contents of the stomach are replenished before the organ is completely emptied, is dependent upon a physical need.

Since most foods are not assimilated by the system directly from the stomach, and as food remains in the stomach several hours after being swallowed, the well known fact that eating relieves fatigue almost immediately has long been puzzling. But recent studies of the still mysterious action of the gastric juice offer a rational explanation. When the stomach is empty this digestive fluid draws directly upon the blood, thus depleting the amount of nourishment necessary to the muscles and producing fatigue. But the depleting action ceases immediately when food enters the stomach; hence the feeling of refreshment that follows a meal.

The amount of fluids and salt in the food also influences the action of gastric juice. When either of these is deficient in quantity the amount of gastric juice is reduced. As a result the food is not properly digested, is hurried through the stomach and is likely to produce intestinal disturbances. Hard work with profuse sweating reduces the fluids and salt in the body. This explains the craving of fluids and salty foods, which is experienced by persons taking prolonged muscular exercise and why it is that when these substances are lacking intestinal troubles develop.—Los Angeles Times.

A Prediction by Ouida.

Ouida, far from regarding heavy feeding as a concomitant of literary success, once declared that to eat anything more than was strictly necessary was vulgar and barbaric, and, further, that to take food in public or anywhere except in entire domestic privacy was "an indelicacy which in the coming golden age of refinement we shall not dream of. We shall then," she said, "no more think of indulging bodily needs in the presence of others than of cleaning our teeth or washing our hair in the public view." And then will be the end of the "restaurant" habit.—Pearson's Weekly.

Joy of Oblivibousness.

"How did you like my turning off the gas at 10 while you and that young fool were in the parlor last night?" asked her father.

"Did you?" she responded innocently, and father knew the true meaning of the word failure.—Philadelphia Ledger.

A Hard Task.

"Miss May certainly has the male contingent at her feet. But she is rather a capricious belle, isn't she?"

"Yes; a bell who is going to be very hard to ring."—Baltimore American.

Where Shell Bracelets Come From.

Though Dacca has lost its trade in fine muslins, it is still the chief center of the manufacture of the shell bracelets everywhere worn among the Hindus. These are cut by women, using a very primitive saw, from what is popularly known as the chunk shell of the East Indian seas, and into the sunk portion of the design colored lac is melted. Except the rare specimens with reversed opening, which have fetched as much as £70, chunks are not costly. But the shell is sacred to Vishnu, and the bangles and anklets made from it are frequently left on the body at burial. Thus these sankha are not entirely subject to fluctuations of taste, and the demand for them remains steady.—London Chronicle.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

A Scientific Wooing

Curiosity, Sympathy and Imagination Were the Basic Principles.

By F. A. MITCHEL

Dr. Shotwell was about to leave his consulting room at the close of his morning office hours when a man entered whose appearance at once arrested his attention. There is no word to describe his appearance except queer. He was neither homely nor good looking, neither well nor poorly dressed. Indeed, there was nothing for or against his personal appearance. He was simply queer. Nevertheless intellect was expressed in his face. He might have been a poet; he might have been a Socialist; he might have been a lightning calculator escaped from a dime museum.

The doctor looked at him with an expression intended to ask what he could do for him. The patient thrust his hand in his pocket and pulled out a roll of bills, from which he selected five tens and, handing them to the doctor, said:

"There's nothing the matter with me, doctor. I'm in perfect health. I desire to consult you as to a matter of importance to me, and since I know your time is valuable I offer payment in advance. For these bills I desire half an hour's consultation with you or such part of that time as may be necessary to my purpose."

The doctor gave a tacit consent, asked his visitor to be seated, took a chair himself, and the other proceeded:

"I desire to win the love of a certain woman who has not manifested the slightest interest in me. I am convinced that love between the sexes may be produced by exciting the imagination. Nine-tenths of our marriages in America are for what is called love, but what I call an abnormal temporary development of the imaginative faculty. In proof of this I would cite the different conditions of a couple about to be married from those of a couple that have been married. During the courtship, while they are feeding on what I call imaginary love food, they are in an ecstatic suspense. Marriage ends that suspense and brings reality. After that their relations are dependent upon a number of conditions, the chief of which, to state it concisely, is whether they are naturally fitted or unfitted to give each other aid and comfort."

The doctor sat attentive to this disquisition on love, an incipient smile gathering on his lips as his visitor proceeded. When this point had been reached and the speaker added, "Do you follow me?" the doctor replied: "I do. Proceed." Whereupon the man continued:

"My name is Norman Bloodgood. I wish to marry a young woman named Catherine Anderson. The reason why I wish to marry her is because I desire to marry some one, and I have settled upon her. There is no more reason why she should marry me than any other man. She has met me once and treated me with indifference."

"Beg pardon," interrupted the medical man, "did she not evince at least curiosity?"

"Now I remember," responded the client, "there was a look on her face at seeing me indicating surprise or amusement or something of the kind, but nothing indicating admiration or in any way being drawn toward me. But why do you ask this?"

"I take it for granted from what you have told me that you wish me to suggest some scientific method of exciting an interest in you, which, being fanned by the imagination, may result in love."

"Exactly."

"Very well. I would recommend attempting to effect a lodgement through curiosity, the only constituent part of your makeup that seems to have taken any hold upon the young lady. Beginning with this as a foundation we may build upon it with other excitants of the feelings commonly used by wooers. Sympathy may be excited by real or feigned misfortune. Flattery when undetected as such is a stimulant. Sentiment excited by gifts, principally flowers, is an excellent means of producing love. Then when a substructure has thus been laid a touch of hands, a kiss"—

"I am aware of these methods, common to all mankind," interrupted the visitor. "What I desire to learn from you is how to handle that very difficult matter of making a beginning. Subsequent devices may or may not serve. What I am looking for is something that must produce a scientific result, just as the mingling of one part of oxygen with two parts of hydrogen will produce water."

"While I am willing to admit," replied the doctor, "that there may be some means of producing such an effect, I doubt if we have attained to a knowledge of it. Nevertheless I confess that the bent of my mind is toward investigation, and I will be interested in assisting you to win the love of the lady of your choice by scientific means, but"—handing his visitor the proffered fee—"I could not consent to take money for what is beyond the pale of my profession."

The matter of the fee having been settled by the client accepting its return, the doctor proceeded: "Since you consider the imagination the excitant of love I am willing to work with you on this line. But we must in your case begin with curiosity, since you say that is the only hold you have upon Miss Anderson's attention. Now, suppose you make a mystery concerning yourself. Hint at some great grief in your life, some injustice done you. I would not scruple to try to impose upon the lady a sin you have committed, of which you are repentant."

"But, doctor, the time must come when it will become necessary to make plain this mystery."

"Not necessarily, but if it does you may gain a strong point by confessing some noble act which your tender conscience has exaggerated into a crime."

"Shake, doctor!" said the visitor, grasping the other's hand. "That suggestion is worth more than any prescription you have ever written."

"That isn't saying much," muttered the man of medicine to himself.

"I must leave you now," he said to his client, looking at his watch, "to make my morning round of visits. Suppose you start on the lines I have suggested, and if you find that you have produced results let me know. I advise you, having made your beginning on a basis of curiosity, to add a teaspoonful—I mean a quantum—of sympathy, leaving the imagination to come in third, after which resort to the ordinary devices pertaining to courtship."

"Thank you, doctor," said the visitor, rising and grasping the doctor's hand warmly, and with the same serious look on his face that he had worn through the interview he went his way.

Within a fortnight the doctor received a letter from his client in which he laid down his great grief and a sin that he had committed. He had killed a man for revenge, but had been driven to the act through a great wrong done him. He was suffering no end of mental torture. Miss Anderson's sympathy had been aroused, and she was intent upon knowing what had spurred him to kill a fellow being. This was as far as he had gone. He had noted the rise of considerable interest in him on the part of the lady. In due time he would reveal that his father and mother, who had lived in the wild west, had been murdered by Indians. He had not only killed all the Indians concerned in the massacre, but he had barbarously taken their scalps, acts for which he could never forgive himself.

A second letter came in which Mr. Bloodgood spoke of the murder of his parents and his confession of his revenge. Miss Anderson had been much grieved for him and had been disappointed because he had not tortured the Indians before killing them. She had expressed wonder that he should have allowed the killing of a few savages who had murdered his dear father and mother to trouble his conscience. Surely he must have great nobility of soul to consider such an act a sin.

And here, as these two scientists, Dr. Shotwell and Mr. Bloodgood, had intended, the imagination began to work. Miss Bloodgood pictured the settlers' cabin, the trees of the virgin forest waving over it, the old man sitting before the firelight at evening smoking his pipe and the old woman clearing the supper table; then the figures of the red men far in the evening twilight, stalking toward the cabin. The massacre was too horrible for the dreamer to dwell upon, but she pictured the son's return to find his parents weltering in their blood.

And now the queerness of Norman Bloodgood had given place to a heroic looking man bending over his parents' bodies, then looking up to heaven and swearing to avenge their death. She saw him mount a mettlesome steed and, plunging his spurs into the horse's flanks, speed away into the depths of the forest. She heard the crack of his rifle as he brought down the first savage. She saw him plunge a tomahawk into the next redskin's skull. She fancied him dealing death to a dozen Indians and wished there were more.

Then her hero rode off, his vengeance wreaked, appalled at the gory being the massacre of his beloved parents had made him. Years of regret followed. What a noble spirit to grieve over the punishment of bloodthirsty savages!

One day Mr. Bloodgood called at Dr. Shotwell's office and reported the story he had told, the object of the experiment they were interested in. He knew nothing of his success in exciting Miss Anderson's imagination or her sympathy. He simply reported what he had done. The doctor listened to his report and, confident of the effect he had produced, suggested that he try a light application of hand pressure; if this was not repelled, an arm stolen around the waist, a touch of the lips.

Not long after this Bloodgood reported that in one of his fits of remorse he had dropped his head upon Miss Anderson's shoulder. She had not withdrawn from the contact. Encouraged, he had folded her in his arms. Still not being repelled, he had kissed her. Then one day he called at the doctor's office to be congratulated upon his engagement.

These two scientists discussed the matter in the same vein as when they were laying out their plan of attacking Miss Anderson's heart by scientific methods as if they had it in a test tube. Mr. Bloodgood did not appear to consider that there was any difference in the two processes. As for the doctor, he was a reticent man and never told even his best friend how much of the conquest was due to cause and effect and how much to nature.

After Mr. Bloodgood's marriage Dr. Shotwell met him and asked him if he had preserved the secret of his deception.

"Oh, I confessed that at the time our first child was born," replied Bloodgood, "but she was too much interested in the baby to consider the matter of any importance."

SUBMARINES NOT NEW

Inventor of Steamboat Made One; Also Perfected Torpedoes

In 1801 Robert Fulton, then residing in France, constructed and used, in the harbor of Brest, a submarine, the description of which bears a striking resemblance to the modern vessel. It was 66 feet in length, with eight feet beam, and was propelled by steam. Fulton's immediate object was to supply the French government with the means of attack on the British fleet, then occupying the channel and blockading or threatening the French harbors. On July 3, 1801, he navigated his first "plunging boat," in which, with three companions, he descended to a depth of 25 feet, and remained below the surface for one hour. The craft was easily turned and navigated below the surface; kept at any desired depth, and traveled about 70 yards a minute. A few weeks later he was able, by the use of compressed air, to remain under water six hours at a stretch. He called his invention a "submarine boat," or "plunger boat," and afterward gave it the name of the Nautilus.

Fulton was also the inventor of torpedoes, and published a work descriptive of them entitled, "Torpedo War or Submarine Explosion." His desire of discovering a means of using torpedoes against warships is what turned his thoughts to a submarine boat. His motto for the above publication and his favorite sentiment was: "The liberty of the seas will be the happiness of the earth." The above invention preceded Fulton's application of steam power to commercial navigation.

HAD DYSENTERY.

WAS VERY BAD WITH IT.

Mrs. G. A. McKnight, Mulvihill, Man., writes: "I have used Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry for nine years, and I would not be without it in the house. I was very bad with dysentery; a friend gave me a dose of 'Dr. Fowler's,' and told me to get a bottle right away, which I did, and it did me lots of good. My brother was bad too, and I told him to take it, and he was cured. I hope there are others who will get 'Dr. Fowler's' and keep it in the house, for it will surely save doctor's bills."

Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry has been on the market for the past 70 years, and has been used in thousands of Canadian homes during that time.

You do not experiment when you buy it. See that you get what you ask for, and if your dealer tries to palm off a substitute on you, insist on getting "Dr. Fowler's," or go where you can get it.

The genuine is manufactured only by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

Toys, Teeth and Golf Balls Are Held Up By War

Special to The Examiner:

BERLIN, via London, Aug. 31 — American business men in Germany are taking the gloomiest view of the fate of great quantities of goods ordered in Germany for the American Christmas trade. They say that orders on these goods will amount to millions.

Orders totalling about 500,000 for such wares as toys, Bohemian glassware, bronzes, Christmas cards and special specialties had been placed, mostly last autumn, for summer delivery, it is stated this being the usual practice in order to give American wholesale dealers an opportunity to place their goods. The articles are all of a comparatively small value and become virtually contraband of war. However, the [illegible] ordered immediately. However, the [illegible] for [illegible] services, but because they are unable to get dyestuffs supplies and artificial teeth from America.

Frying Without Smoke or Smell

It is impossible to use butter or lard in frying without filling the kitchen with smoke.

The reason is that these two fats cannot be made hot enough for frying without smoking somewhat themselves.

CRISCO
For Frying · For Shortening
For Cake Making

The smoking temperature of Crisco is considerably higher than that which is necessary for frying--especially where a deep frying kettle and plenty of Crisco are used.

Any amount of deep frying therefore can be done by the use of Crisco, without tainting the atmosphere of the kitchen, and ruining the food.

GERMANY'S VANISHED DREAMS OF EMPIRE

Cape to Congo Was German Scheme in Boer War and Now—Botha the Key

The foundation of what was to have been the German Empire in Africa has become the completion of the British South Africa Empire. That in epitome, says the Boston Transcript, is the significance of one of the most dramatic and most decisive episodes in the great war—the conquest of Germany's African Colonies by the various Allies. The vast region comprising Ovamboland, Damaraland and Namaqualand, under the name of German Southwest Africa, was the scene of Germany's first colonial exploit. It was in 1883, when Otto von Bismarck was at the height of his power, that the foundation of what was to be a world-embracing German colonial empire was laid by F. A. E. Luederitz at Angra Pequena, the very harbor at which Bartholomew Diaz touched in 1487, when he discovered that coast of Africa in his endeavors to find a route to India.

From that beginning the colonial possessions of the empire were extended until they comprised more of Africa than any other Power had save only France; numerous important islands in the Pacific, and a large part of the Chinese province of Shantung. In addition, the German expansionist eye was fixed upon the Dutch West Indies and upon the southern States of Brazil. It was to be a world-embracing empire, rivalling that of Great Britain.

The first colony was also the costliest. It was the scene of a four years' war with the Hottentots, which cost $80,000,000 in gold and 5,000 German lives, while under General von Trotha's order of extermination probably 30,000 natives were massacred. It was, however, the scene of a scheme of German expansion which, if successful, would have changed the whole history of the African continent and of the colonial empires of the world.

Why of Southwest Africa

The supposed opportunity came during the Boer-British war. The Kaiser's famous message to Paul Kruger at the time of the Jameson Raid had caused the Boers to look upon him as their champion, and thus upon German Southwest Africa as a friendly and sympathetic country. That territory was used freely as a refuge for fugitive Boers, and as the scene of all manner of anti-British plots. The understanding was that in case of Boer victory over the British and the expulsion of British rule from the Cape, Natal and all South Africa, a league was to be formed between the Boer states and this German colony, to serve as the stepping stone to the annexation of the former to the latter, and the establishment of German rule from the Cape to the Congo. German Southwest Africa was thus to be the foundation of a German empire at least in that part of the world. The chief leader of the Boers at that time, an earnest advocate of that scheme, was Louis Botha, probably the ablest man that race has ever produced.

The British success in that war, under Roberts and Kitchener, brought those grandiose visions to naught. But the outbreak of the present war renewed them. German southwest Africa was again made the scene of anti-British intrigues and operations. A considerable insurrection in the Union was actually planned and fomented, and it was confidently expected by the Germans that Louis Botha would fall in with their plans as he had done before. The Cape, Natal, the Orange State, the Transvaal, Rhodesia and all the rest would ally themselves with Germany, and ultimately would be joined with German Southwest Africa in a single colonial empire.

Botha No Kruger

But Louis Botha did not fall in with their plans. Instead, he remained loyal to Great Britain, and in that course he was sustained and followed by ninety-nine per cent. of the Boer people. With the same masterful methods which he had for so long employed years before against the British, he pursued a campaign of unbroken success. Thus the dream of German supremacy in Africa was dispelled, and another long step was taken toward the realisation of Rhodes' dream, "all that for England."

THE DUTY OF IRELAND

Mr. John Redmond has sent a long reply to the vote of confidence in the Irish Parliamentary party passed by the Dublin Corporation. In it he says:

In my deliberate judgment, any attempt to bring pressure to bear on the government to bring the Home Rule Act into operation while the war is in its critical stage would be an act of bad faith on our part. It could not possibly succeed, but would on the contrary inflict a deadly blow on the national cause and play right into the hands of its enemies. Some people seem to consider that Home Rule will lose a great deal of its value if a settlement is arrived at which does not involve the coercion of Ulster. I take this as a sample of the reckless criticism which has been indulged in. On the contrary, I would regard it as a great calamity if the coercion of any section of the Irish people were to accompany the inauguration of a free Parliament in Ireland, and while I never advised, and never shall advise the Irish people to be consenting parties to any settlement involving the permanent division of Ireland, I have the hearty assent of all sections of Irishmen to a settlement which will bring liberty to all, and if Ireland in this supreme crisis of her destiny is true to herself and can only practise self restraint, discipline and that patience without which no great or permanent results can be achieved, I do not by any means despair of a settlement of the Irish question by the general assent of all Irishmen.

Let us all recognize the great and overshadowing fact that the war for the moment dominates all other issues. Civilization and freedom throughout the world are at stake on the issue of this war, and for that reason I have on many occasions felt it incumbent upon me to tell my countrymen that in my judgment the highest duty and the most vital interest of Ireland for the moment is to do everything in her power to support the cause of the Allies.

HASTINGS NEWS

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

HASTINGS, Aug. 31.—Citizens of Hastings were shocked to learn that Mr. Ivan Tapping had passed away in the hospital at Bowmanville, whither he had been taken for treatment. Deceased, young man was the eldest son of Mr. and Mrs. F. Tapping, town, and was only 21 years of age. He had been ailing for some time with typhoid fever but hopes were entertained for his recovery until Thursday last when his parents were summoned to his bedside, but only too late, to find that he had already passed away. The remains were brought to his home here on Saturday and kept until Monday a.m., when they were taken via G.T.R. to Gananoque for interment. He is survived by his parents, two sisters, four brothers, who today are mourning the loss of a dutiful son and a loving brother. The floral tributes were numerous, testifying to the esteem in which he was held in his home town. One brother, Elmer is at present in training for service overseas.

A large shipment of oil from the Columbia Oil Co. at Ohio arrived in town this month and was distributed among the surrounding farmers. The shipment contained some 6,000 gallons, and was in charge of Mr. F. Cook.

The Ladies' Aid of the Methodist church met on Thursday at the home of Mrs. J. Trotter, when a number of important items of business were disposed of, after which lunch was served and a social halt hour enjoyed.

On Thursday last Mr. J. Stevenson sent a large shipment of hogs to the city market.

The steamer Stoney Lake came down from Peterborough on Friday carrying a party of excursionists bound for Healey Falls.

The Bell Telephone Co. have a gang of men at repair work on the lines in this vicinity.

Mr. A. C. Bailey has purchased a fine McLaughlin car.

Mr. J. Johnson has procured a Ford.

Large shipments of cheese were boarded at the G.T.R. station here on Monday from the surrounding districts.

Wednesday last closed the halt holiday for the season.

Miss Bessie Colville of Toronto, has been the guest of Miss T. Hawkins.

Mrs. V. Lamey and child have returned to their home in Western Canada after sending a holiday with her parents here.

Messrs. S. Patterson and David Drope are on a trip to points west.

Mr. E. Burnham of Peterborough, gave us a call on Friday.

Mr. Douglas of Campbellford, was in town during the week.

Miss Belle Howson of Otonabee, has been holidaying at the home of Mr. and Mrs. M. Baker.

Mr. J. Brown of S. Dummer, has purchased the farm of the late Patrick English and is taking possession in the near future.

Miss C. Lajoie of Peterborough, has been visiting friends here.

Mr. Banton of Toronto, has been holidaying with his daughter Mrs. (Dr.) Edmison.

Rev. D. A. Thompson and family have returned from their mid-summer vacation.

Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Warner returned on Friday from a pleasant visit with friends at different points.

Miss Breckenridge of Warkworth, spent a few days with Mrs. J. Trotter.

Miss Pansy Runnels has resumed her duties on the post office staff after a two weeks' vacation.

Mr. Winter of Campbellford, occupied the pulpit of the Methodist church in on Sunday morning in the absence of the pastor.

Dr. and Mrs. Hess have been the guests of Trenton friends.

Miss Grace Ingram of Campbellford spent Friday with friends in town.

Mr. and Mrs. C. Marion of California, are guests of the former's sister, Mrs. H. Puffer.

Mrs. E. J. Laing and daughters of Norwood, visited friends in this vicinity on Thursday.

Mrs. Hall of Campbellford is the guest of Mrs. Wm. Preston.

Mr. W. Boyce of Warkworth, gave us a call last week.

Mrs. J. Cruickshank has been visiting friends at Peterborough, etc.

Mr. and Mrs. Smith of Cobourg spent a few days during the week with Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Warner.

Alabama's Capitals.

When Alabama was a territory its capital was at St. Stephens, in Washington county. The convention that framed the constitution under which it was admitted into the Union was held in Huntsville, where the first legislature met in October, 1819, and the first governor was inaugurated. Cahaba became the seat of government in 1820. In 1825 the capital was removed to Tuscaloosa, and in 1846 it was again removed, this time to Montgomery.

Witness My Hand.

In the early days only a few scholars knew how to write. It was then customary to sign a document by smearing the hand with ink and impressing it upon the paper, accompanied by the words, "Witness my hand." Afterward the seal was introduced as a substitute for the hand mark and was used with the words above quoted, the two forming the signature. This is the origin of the expression as used in modern documents.

EXAMINER PATTERN SERVICE

A GARMENT OF COMFORT AND UTILITY.

By Anabel Worthington.

What dress [illegible] very little people [illegible] as easy as it seems to have from [illegible] and at the same time practical [illegible] Rompers have been acknowledged for many years as the ideal garment, and surely they may be worn by children of every age during the times of play and when they are not to be admired or inspected by friends and others. In the points which are shown in the accompanying picture we have a garment which is ideal for very little people, be they girls or boys. The front is in a single piece, with the sleeves cut in one with it and the back also has the sleeves in one with the body, but it is divided down the centre to [illegible] of crossing. To make things even easier for the little wearer we have the inseam of the leg buttoned, so that the putting on and off is a matter of great facility.

The lower edges of the legs are gathered in bloomer fashion, the neck is cut out in square outline, and the little sleeves are short.

The material which is most often used [illegible]ked, and these are trimmed with white for rompers is gingham, because it is of some contrasting color strong and inexpensive and can be had. The pattern of these rompers, No. 7225 is in all manner of pretty color combinations, is cut in sizes 1, 2 and 3 years. Three [illegible]tions. Besides which, it also wash[illegible] year size requires 2⅞ yards of 36 inch wide. Lawn and its imitations are also material.

When ordering remember to give your name and address as well as the number and size of pattern required, and age of a child.

Price 15 cents, or 2 for 25c.

Outer Forts of Grodno Fall to the Germans

BRITISH SUB. SINKS FOUR ENEMY TRANSPORTS IN THE SEA OF MARMORA

Steamers Crowded With Troops Are Destroyed---French Aviator Also Gets in Some Deadly Work in the Straits Sinking Transports---British Captured Bitterly Contested Position From the Turks.

FALL OF GRODNO IS EXPECTED SOON

Special Cable to The Examiner:

PARIS, Sept. 2.—British submarines operating in the Dardanelles and the Sea of Marmora sank four Turkish transports loaded with troops.

In giving out this statement the War Office reported that these transports have been sunk in addition to transports sunk by French aviators at Acba Shiliman. It was not made clear whether the transports sunk by the aviators is the one mentioned a few days ago.

British troops, it was officially announced, have captured a bitterly contested position west of Biyuk Anafarla from the Turks.

PARIS (French Official) Sept. 2.—Fighting with hand grenades occurred in the course of the night in the vicinity of Souchez. There were several artillery engagements in the sector of Neuville near Roye. In the Vosges fighting with bombs occurred at Schratzmannel.

LONDON, Sept. 2.—Three of the crew of the British steamer Savona sunk by a German submarine to-day are missing. Seventeen others have landed.

AMSTERDAM, Sept. 2.—The French aviators to-day bombarded and destroyed the military barracks near Brussels. There was a large number of German casualties.

BERLIN, via London, Sept. 2.—The outer forts of Grodno have fallen before the German assault, and the capture of the fortress is believed near.

NEW YORK, Sept. 2.—An officer of the White Star liner Adriatic said that within the past sixty days the British have captured no less than fifty German submarines.

WASHINGTON, D.C., Sept. 2.—In a statement emanating from the German Embassy to-day it is declared that Germany and her allies might be willing to consider peace terms if the Allies granted her the "freedom of the seas, the freedom of Poland, and the rights of citizenship to Jews in any and every country."

These conditions, it is intimated, must be given before any further negotiations progress. Just what Germany means by the freedom of the seas is not understood here.

LONDON, Sept. 2.—Political circles here took the view to-day that Germany's yielding to the United States will have little if any effect upon the negotiations now pending between Great Britain and America, for the modification of the British order in council.

No comment could be obtained at the Government offices. But it was stated unofficially that if England makes concessions to the United States, these concessions will be made because the Government recognizes the merits of America's arguments and not because of Germany's action. The English view to-day as expressed by editorials of the comment of London papers, was that President Wilson has scored a great diplomatic victory in compelling Germany to recognize the usages of international law. But political circles here expressed the opinion that the concessions actually made by Germany were few and in no way justified England in withdrawing her blockade of the German coast. The majority of newspapers attribute Germany's yielding to three things: Fear that Von Tirpitz' policy might lead to war with the United States, recognization that Germany's submarine campaign is a failure, and the desire to retain the friendship of the United States.

STERLING AT 4.48

LONDON, Sept. 1.—Sterling dropped to 4.48 in the foreign exchange markets here to-day.

The sensational drop would have created something akin to alarm in the city but for the knowledge that the banks have actively taken the arrangement of the matter in hand and the belief that the trouble will be over very shortly.

To-day's erratic movement in cable transfers, which closed yesterday at 4.59 and opened at 4.54½, frightened merchants into covering their near and forward positions. This created a great demand for dollars on a short market forcing the rate down to 4.48. At this rate a large quantity of ammunition securities were marketed, thereby helping a recovery to 4.53. But the market was still very uncertain and closed around 4.52½.

E. F. Davies, chairman of the Commission of Foreign Bankers on Exchange Problems, discussing the situation to-day, said: "As far as the immediate future is concerned, importers here find exchange so much against them that they are endeavouring to obtain credits in New York from their business friends. Exchange is likely to go much lower unless the long talked of credit is quickly arranged, although one must not lose sight of the fact that large quantities of securities will be marketed if exchange remains at the present low level.

"Merchants on this side are seriously considering a curtailment of buying orders in America wherever possible, as importers have incurred large exchange losses. All indications show that there will be little cessation of the demand for dollars."

Officers of 40th Are In Accord With New Battalion

The Norwood Register says: Lieut.-Col. Birdsall in speaking to the Register on Wednesday morning stated that any young men in the village and district who desired to enlist and had a preference for a certain regiment or any part of the service, would be given every assistance possible by the officers in order that their wishes might be met. The cause was so big and the need for men too urgent to permit of any friction whatever in regard to boundaries and regiments. The officers of the 40th Northumberland regiment were heartily in accord with the raising of the new 80th battalion.

CYCLONES IN MANITOBA

Special to The Examiner:

WINNIPEG, SEPT. 2.—Cyclones did great damage in Central and Northwest Manitoba to-day. The range of the storm was from Minota to Hamiota. Plumes and Melville. The fields were swept bare of stacks of hay and grain. Houses and buildings were blown over and horses and cattle were killed. The bridge at Uno on the Grand Trunk Pacific was blown away, and the train went through, the engineer being killed. Telephone and telegraph wires are down and the information is meagre.

AN AVALANCHE OF SHELLS IS POURING INTO FOE'S LINES

Early General Offensive is Looked For in the West—The Prodigal Expenditure of Ammunition Evidencing This Conjecture

CELEBRATE MARNE BATTLE

Examiner Special:

PARIS, Sept. 1.—For a week the French have been pouring an avalanche of shells into the German lines in the west. It is not believed that this ammunition would be used simply for the purpose of damaging the German trenches, and, therefore, an early general offensive is looked for.

Asphyxiating gas was used without success by the Germans in an attack against Lingo and Schratzmaennele, in the Vosges, last night. After releasing the gas the Germans charged the French positions, but were driven back. Elsewhere on the French front there were no infantry actions, though heavy cannonading occurred at several places. German aviators violated Swiss territory yesterday for the fourth time. Five German military aeroplanes flew inside the Swiss frontier opposite the French town of Delle. Although under fire from French artillery, the aeroplanes turned back. One damaged machine came down near the Swiss bridge of Buix, but afterwards took to the air and escaped towards Alsace.

The Municipal Council is making arrangements with the Government for an official commemoration of the Battle of the Marne, in which the German advance through France in the early weeks of the war was ended. The celebration will be held on September 12.

How Two Duck Hunters Opened The Season

The opening of the duck season yesterday barely missed an accompanying fatality. Down the river, there were two "up-town" sportsmen who had selected a feeding ground after receiving various reports from the natives in regard to the birds. Just before dawn they began to bestir themselves, moving cautiously to avoid attracting attention from the ducks which they expected were floating around the little bay unaccustomed to the sound of firearms. Finally the first streaks of gray appeared in the east to struggle with the waning harvest moon. "What the — do you know about that" suddenly exploded one of the men. "Shut up" said his companion and in a lower voice. "What's the matter." His companion was trying to load a 12 gauge gun with 16 gauge shells and all around him the air was a smoking blue, sulphourous and hazy. They had quietly pushed their canoe out through a fringe of weeds and had reached the edge of an open feeding ground. While the man in the bow was oozing epithets uncomplimentary to himself there was a sudden splash about twenty yards away on their right. Followed a whirr of wings and the other sportsman was heard from. "I see a good notion to blow your head off. What d've want to talk like that and spoil my chance." He talked in streaks until he ran down utterly disgusted, disgruntled and unable to vent his anger on anything animate or inanimate. There was boiling oil, daggers, bird shot and other murderous contrivances flitting through his mind. But his pal was a picture of disappointment and the humour of the situation gripped him. There in the light of the morning with their first day's bag safely feeding in far off grounds they loosened the tension with laughter and pulled out toward the river to fish.

COMPANIES WILL TRAIN FIRST AT BARRIEFIELD CAMP

As Soon as Complete Company is Raised Here for the 80th It Will Go to Kingston for Training But Whole Battalion Will Likely Be Wintered in Peterborough

ORDERS FROM KINGSTON

In connection with the 80th Battalion, for which recruiting is now going on, the following orders received by Lt.-Col. Walker O.C. 57th Regiment, from Col. Ogilvie, Assistant Adjutant General of the 3rd Division, will be of interest.

From the Assistant Adjutant General, 3rd Division to the O. C. 57th Regiment.

80th Overseas Battalion, C. E. F.

I am directed to inform you that authority is granted for the formation of the 80th Overseas Battalion, C. E. F., in the 3rd Division with two companies at Peterborough, and it is desired that recruiting for the same be proceeded with at once.

In this connection it is pointed out that as each company is completed it is to be brought to Barriefield for instruction, as it is considered that beneficial results will be obtained in so far as practical training is concerned by such a course. When the cold weather sets in, however, it is unofficially understood that this battalion will be quartered at Peterborough."

These orders would indicate that when a complete company of 250 men is organized here it will be taken to Barriefield for training and the raising of another company proceeded with. Although not officially stated, it seems to be certain that the intention is to have the whole battalion quartered in Peterborough for the winter.

In this connection the following orders in regard to recruiting a band for the 80th Battalion were received yesterday by Lt.-Col. Walker.

Lt.-Col. D. Walker, O.C. 57th Regt.

Authority granted for you to proceed with recruiting for band, 80th Battalion on understanding that it is to proceed to Barriefield when mobilized. A. A. G., 3rd Division.

To-night's Military Supper and Concert

Victoria Hall has been nicely decorated and everything is in readiness for the concert and supper under the auspices of the men of the 80th Battalion to-night. A big crowd will be in attendance and an enjoyable evening is looked for. Supper will be served at 7:30 p.m. and a splendid programme will follow. Capt. R. P. Watt of the 80th Battalion will officiate as chairman in the absence of Lt.-Col. Walker, who has been called away from the city on urgent business.

Another Peterborough Nurse For Overseas

KINGSTON, Sept. 2. Yesterday two graduate nurses of the Brockville General Hospital, Miss Irene Douglas and Miss Gladys Kilborn, left there for Quebec to receive a course in military instruction preparatory to overseas Red Cross service at the front. They went under the direction of Major R. J. Gardiner of Kingston, Assistant Director of Medical Service for No. 3 Division, and it is possible that they may go overseas in a month or six weeks as the militia authorities are organizing a "rush crew" of nurses. The two young ladies are very urgent and efficient nurses, thoroughly well trained and are certain to do credit to themselves and their vocation. Miss Kilborn is a Brockville girl, and the home of Miss Douglas is close by Peterborough. Miss Douglas' mother is herself at present being the assistant matron of the Queen's Hospital Unit now settled at Cairo, Egypt.

PREMIER BORDEN AND GEN. HUGHES REACH NEW YORK

Canadian Leaders Arrived Early To-day from England on the White Star Steamer Adriatic 100,000 Under Training in Canada

FINANCIAL SITUATION

Examiner Special.

NEW YORK, Sept. 1 — A distinguished group of Canadians arrived from England to-day on the White Star Adriatic early to-day. The party included Sir Robert Borden, Premier of the Dominion, Major Gen. Sir Sam Hughes, Col. J. J. Carrick, M.P., R. B. Bennett, M.P., and Sir Herbert Holt, President of the Royal Bank of Canada. The looked-for delegations of English financiers supposed to be on its way to do something about condition of English pounds sterling was not aboard on the boat. It was of the opinion that the financiers are coming by warship to Montreal. Regarding the report that 50,000 more Canadians are soon to be sent to England, Gen. Hughes said nothing had been determined. There are 100,000 more under training in Canada now he said.

Sir Herbert Holt declared there is no occasion for alarm in the depreciation of sterling exchange and that the United States need look for no diminution of foreign orders. Britain can pay, he said, and must have war materials.

Sir Robert Borden, the Canadian Premier returning to-day from Europe refused to discuss the possibility of a Canadian being added to the British Cabinet, saying that it would obviously be improper for him to do so. He refused to discuss also the report that Canada is to be called on for 50,000 more troops immediately, or the plan for getting out the grain crop aside from telling that satisfactory arrangements are being made. In the course of an optimistic formal statement issued from his hotel, however, he declared the mission on which he and Maj.-Gen. Sam Hughes had gone abroad had been accomplished. He said "We have taken up with the various departments of the British government many matters touching on the cooperation of the two governments in carrying on the war. In addition to the organization of our military forces, other matters of great importance have been under consideration, among them the providing of adequate transportation on both oceans. The Premier bespoke Canada's appreciation of the work being done by the Americans in the way of relief and care of the wounded.

One Month With Hard Labour

Was the Sentence Imposed by Magistrate Langley Upon Belmont Man Who Was Convicted of Arson

One month's sentence with hard labour was the sentence imposed this morning in Police Magistrate Langley's Court upon Magistrate Langley Accused who resides in Belmont township was convicted of arson of being accused that he set fire to a certain stable owned by his father. Mr. Crown Attorney Hutton had the evidence and Mr. G. N. Gordon was appointed for the prisoner and sought a remand in the case that his client be examined by the doctor before sentence. He also said that the latter would make his report upon the mental condition of the accused to the Judge. That was carried and that the matter of the case amounting to approximately forty dollars would be paid by the county and not saddled upon the township as usual. In case the defendant is found to be insane a motion for sentence will be made.

The Steamer "Manita"

Capt. Young states that Monday next Labour Days will be the last regular trip this season for the steamer "Manita." Business on this route has lasted longer this season than last and been more remunerative both in passenger and freight traffic.

ORGANIZATION OF NEW 80th BAND

Local Musicians Who Wish to Join Are Asked to Apply at Once—A Dozen Bandsmen Were Accepted Last Night and More Will Be in To-day.

TO-DAY'S MILITARY NEWS

Band-men who wish to join the 80th Battalion Band are asked to apply at the Armouries at once as Sergeant Walter Hughes, the leader, is anxious to proceed with the work of organization as soon as possible. Last night a dozen bandsmen from the Temple and the 57th Bands were accepted and eight were on parade this morning, the others requiring a day or two to wind up their business affairs. Bandsmen who play brass and drummers are required, as for the present it is not proposed to use reed instruments. All local band-men who would like to join this organization are urged to apply at once.

The following eight bandsmen were on parade this morning:

Sergt. Walter Hughes, 57th Band.
T. H. Brooks, Temple Band.
E. A. Browne, formerly 57th Band.
J. A. James, Temple Band.
Herbert Parker, Temple Band.
Robert Wood, 57th Band.
William Fowler.
John A. Dance, Temple Band.

The good of King and country is to be placed before the people of Peterborough County on 22nd July by Sir Sam and party. Here the big concert and supper by the men of the 80th Battalion in Victoria Hall should prove a success in recruiting.

At Havelock the Speaker, Patriotic Leaguers conducted a mass meeting at Norwood and Lakefield respectively on events during the 80th are following up the recent patriotic meetings by a special appeal to the people of the county.

Pte. E. P. Coyle and Wm. Jones of the 80th Battalion from Norwood left on the noon train to-day for Kingston and Barriefield, and with a large number of Norwood Company and the 57th Regiment of Tuesday night's train are expected.

The 80th Battalion had a parade this morning at 8:30 o'clock and 240 men were on parade. Lt.-Col. Walker is expected to be in Peterborough for Saturday. Since the campaign opened a couple of days 262 men have enlisted in Peterborough for the 80th Battalion. Of these 80 have gone to Barriefield, 58 to the 59th Battalion, 67 to the 39th Battery and [illegible] Manvers Rifles.

THURSDAY, SEPT. 2, 1915

A DOUBLE FIASCO.

Germany has been disappointed from the beginning in realizing her ambition, that aimed at world domination. She built a great navy to secure colonial possession; all her possessions overseas which she had at the beginning of the war have been wrested from her. She has, it is true, got a tentative grip on part of Belgium and Poland, but these will soon be taken from her. Her subsidiary schemes to weaken the enemy, especially England, have practically come to nought. Her submarine piracy has failed. Not a single warship or transport has been touched in the North Sea zone, and the sinking of merchant ships and passenger ships has only yielded destruction of life and property without the slightest naval or military advantage. While the total destruction of British ships, from fishing smacks to liners, has amounted, after six months of submarine piracy, to 300,000 tons, this is nothing compared with the 21 million tons of shipping Britain has afloat, not mentioning the fact that new merchant ships have been built at a faster rate than ships are destroyed. Both the submarine and Zeppelin schemes have turned out to be fiascos. It is no wonder that Von Tirpitz is reported sick—in sympathy with the sickness of his submarine schemes. The submarine as a terror, appeals only to defenceless travellers, and women and children; neither it nor the Zeppelin terror has in practical warfare amounted to anything more formidable than bogies.

DIVIDE THE HONOUR.

The journals which support Sir Robert Borden give him great credit for his aristidean stand in regard to investigation into various scandals, which the early history of the war developed. Fair-minded Liberal journals which do not support Sir Robert Borden, only when he is right, also give him credit for promoting more thorough investigation. At this time, however, when there is, in respect of the war and its demands upon our patriotism, need for united action, for a solid front, there should be equality of praise as well as blame. While Sir Robert Borden is given credit ungrudgingly for his desire to remove the lid, the credit for his having got the opportunity, is due to the initiative of a Liberal member of Parliament whose vigilance and courage began the operations of the probe. Mr. McCoig, Liberal M.P. for West Kent, asked to have the connection of Mr. A. De Witt Foster, M.P. for Kings, Nova Scotia, with crooked horse deals, made the subject of investigation. At first Mr. McCoig was represented as an unfair critic, but he persisted; and this matter as well as other matters were investigated in the Public Accounts Committee. Mr. McCoig's charges were amply justified, and the revelations attending the investigation showed so serious a state of pilfering and abuse of representative influence that both Mr. Foster and Mr. Garland, M.P. for Carleton, who was shown to have trafficked in his influence as a member to make personal profit at the public expense, were invited to step out of their parliamentary seats by Sir Robert who is to be given credit not only for this Brutus action, but also for appointing the Sir Charles Davidson commission which is revealing a most ghastly state of absence of morals in the purchase of war supplies.

Sir Robert Borden deserves credit and is given credit for the action he took under the circumstances; for the discharge of a disagreeable duty, for it must have been a disagreeable duty to show the door to two of his supporters. While Sir Robert Borden is to be given credit for his course, it is not unfair to say that he would not have had an opportunity to gain so much credit, and to do a great service to the country, if it had not been for the previous action of the Liberal member, Mr. McCoig. In giving credit it is only fair to fairly apportion the credit.

In this case Sir Robert and Mr. McCoig were working together for the good of the country and the vindication of honest methods. Mr. McCoig was at first declared a "sniper" and disloyal critic by the very journals that are now loudest in their claims of credit to Sir Robert Borden for his herioc conduct, which was only made possible by the very "sniping" and "unfair criticism" of a political opponent.

Both have worked together to help purify methods and help strengthen our contribution to the war, as all members of both parties are working together, heart and hand, to help Canada do her full duty to herself and the Empire in this time of terrible stress. It is a fine thing, according to the point of view, to be a Grit or Tory; but it is a finer, grander, thing to be Canadians, subordinating party considerations to the united discharge of a great duty, which cannot be efficiently performed, if one or other half of our people, or the whole people, are turned aside from the highway of duty to give room to the party band waggon.

SUMMER HAS COME.

This is a year of great over-turning. All international human relationships; all commercial, financial, and industrial conditions are turned topsy-turvy. Even the weather conditions are dislocated. Here we are in the second day of the ninth month of the year, and only yesterday did summer put in an appearance, seventy-one days behind schedule time. Yesterday and to-day was, and is about the only really true and typical summer days we have had this year. The prospects are that September will in temperature be a summer month. The unofficial weather prophet pins his faith to the assertion that the "second day rules the month"; that is that the weather we have on the second day of any month indicates the general character of the weather of the month; whether or not this easy rule works in all cases it seems probable that it will work this month. Some maintain that the second day of the first month of a season, spring or summer, determines the general character of the weather of the season. If this is true so much the better; we stand to have a fine autumn as well as a fine September.

Nature is strong on averages. It insists on equalizing in its own good time, weather conditions; striking a balance. If not always seasonably, the weather account is balanced. The heat and cold, the sunshine and shade, the rainfall and the dry weather, if they don't come when they are expected, come in compensatory ways some time. We had a couple of extraordinarily dry summers, and there was a shortage of rainfall. This year we have had the equilibrium of precipitation restored in a most emphatic way. The dwindled streams and low level lakes are restored to normal conditions. We haven't had our share of summer weather this year. The supply of sunshine and heat is greatly in arrears. September therefore, will probably balance the account and and realize to, us the spirit of the divine promise that "while the earth remaineth, seed time and harvest, and cold and heat, and summer and winter, and day and night, shall not cease." The weather may be freakish, at times; but on the average it is true to nature; and what it withholds one period of time, is supplied with compensatory generosity at another. Reasoning on general principles it is probable that this September will make up for the shortage of summer weather doled out to us this year. But whatever the weather will be it will be right, according to the plans of a Power that may work, to us, in mysterious ways, but through nature's laws, works so as to maintain the balance, in all ways, of all the elements of this good old world. All is ordered, all foreseen. What seems chance to us is not chance. In fact and effect, in the words of Pope:

All nature is but art unknown to thee
All chance, direction, which thou canst not see,
All discord, harmony, not understood
All partial evil universal good;
And, spite of pride, in erring reason's spite,
One truth is clear, whatever is, is right.

AN OPTIMISTIC OUTLOOK WHICH MAY BE JUSTIFIED

Hilaire Belloc writing over two weeks ago in Land and Water, in discussing the retirement of the Russian forces and the straightening out of the Riga-Kovno-Grodno-Brest line, stated that the line once straightened may still further retire, and the offensive be none the stronger.

Mr. Belloc is admittedly the press expert on the war, and this point is one that any pessimistic person may well give heed to. Military experts all declare that the successful retreat of the Russian armies from the Polish salient is one of the finest military exploits in history, and surpasses anything in the present war. The man in the street who thinks that to run away is a sign of defeat, finds this difficult to understand. But it is simply, as Mr. Belloc suggests, because war is not a game. War is a matter of life and death.

Germany may win a hundred engagements, but if she loses the decisive ones, she is beaten. So the results of war are not counted in victories or defeats, but in ultimate results. If the Germans have paid more for their advance into Russian territory than the movement was worth to them, then it was the Germans and not the Russians who have lost in the great game.

It is well to remember that the Russian plan of campaign never counted on any stand being made in Poland at all. The first line of defence which the Russians were to occupy was to have been that to which they have only just retired. This means practically that the war has only begun from the original Russian point of view. It had been expected that the Germans, with their swifter mobilization, would have penetrated into Russian territory without opposition, as far as they have only now advanced.

This means, therefore, that the Germans have paid to extend a stagger-ing account of life and treasure to achieve what had been conceded to them in the first occasion. This is all to the advantage of the allies. The cost of the war to the Germans is utterly beyond anything upon which the Kaiser and his advisers had counted. They made war as a commercial speculation. So much blood and iron was to bring so much territory and indemnities. The robber barons of the Rhine carried on their nefarious business exactly on the same terms. They had nothing on the Kaiser in the way of piracy.

The Germans are losing in their eastern progress out of all proportion to any advantage they are gaining. They have only held the west and as Sir John French says, after a prolonged interval, taken the pains to state that there is nothing doing on the western battle front. It may confidently be expected that the long-promised move is shortly to be made.

Lord Kitchener said that the war was to start in May. It started with the Dardanelles affair, and it will be continued with other offensives which we may rely upon as capable of discomfiting the exhausted rump of the German army. The Russians are still in the field and the Russian climate is a terrible handicap for the Kaiser to expect a long campaign. Well-clothed better than the Kaiser left his troops in the snows of the Russian winter. We do not perceive that Joffre and French are going to spend another winter in the trenches of France and Belgium. They can avoid it. They are taking steps to avoid it.

Stock Markets

The price of seats on the New York Stock Exchange has advanced $3,000 in the last week. A membership was sold Tuesday for $60,000, as compared with $59,000 at the last previous sale. This is the highest price paid for a seat since the reopening of the Exchange last December. The names of the purchaser and seller will not be made public until after the transfer has been formally approved.

With the increase in business the Consolidated Stock Exchange has decided to issue a number of new seats. M. E. de Agnero, president of the Exchange said: "Seats on this exchange at about $1,000 certainly should appeal to any one. We are the second largest market for American securities."

Vernon C. Brown & Co. were the principal sellers of American Car Foundry. Josephthal, Loolheim & Co., who were heavy sellers at each recent reaction, again sold stocks all around the room.

Edward C. Potter and Drake Brothers drew attention to themselves on the floor of the New York Stock Exchange by selling New Haven.

The so-called De Forest Committee of International Mercantile Stockholders, appointed after meetings in the offices of Loucks & Alexander, has decided to act on its initiative without regard to the committee headed by George C. Van Tuyl, Jr., president of the Metropolitan Trust Company. It has approved a new proposition which does not require any assessment and calls for a scaling down of capitals. Bondholders have until September 15 to deposit their bonds.

So determined are the minority stockholders of the International Steam Pump Company not to pay the assessment of $12.50 on each share as proposed in the reorganization arrangement that they have decided to place their protest before the Trade Commission in Washington.

A committee to represent the first collateral mortgage five per cent bonds of the Missouri Pacific Railway due August 1, 1920, and the trust five per cent bonds due January 1, 1917, has been formed. The committee is composed of Morgan Delano & Co., Brown Brothers & Co., Spencer Wilbur Kane, president of the Columbia Trust Company; Asa S. Wing, president of the Provident Loan and Trust Company, Philadelphia, and L. Emanuel Zadek, secretary of the Tokyo-Fire Insurance Company of Hartford. It will urge the advantage to depositing bonds before the interest of September 1, 1915, upon the bonds and before January 1, 1917, upon the bonds of 1917, at the rate of interest on each presentation certificates of deposit will be issued.

Catching Top and Bottom.

Sometimes the man in the market plays quite particular luck. Moore & Co. told yesterday of a trader who could not have done much better if he had been provided with a telescope of the market. This man put in an order Thursday morning to buy 100 shares of Tonopah Copper at 54. His broker bought the stock at the price named, the transaction being the first in the stock reported that day. As soon as the customer received his report he put in orders to sell 10 shares, each point up to 64, where the last of the 100 shares would have been sold. That was the day that the stock made its unaccountable jump to 65. The man who bought the 100 shares and disposed of it by odd lots made a profit of $524. The brokers do not say so, but it is the customer is just a plain, human being he probably spent the next day telling his friends how unlucky he was that he had not put the selling order on his wheat block at 64.—New York Times.

New York Press Comment.

Sun, There is little doubt that the New York Stock Market is absorbing a considerable volume of American from abroad.

Financial America: The movements in the stock market largely reflect the shifting of floor traders.

Wall Street Journal: Certain interests appear to be willing to take stocks at current levels.

Journal of Commerce: Only the United States has a large supply of cotton, and all nations need cotton.

Commercial Representative: Inside buying of railroad stocks as of very good in character.

Times: The mere technical considerations favouring the railroads include the feeling among traders that some part of the speculative interest which has caused such large advances in the industrials may be expected to extend to the railroads.

A BIG BUSINESS MAN ON THE EFFICIENCY OF NEWSPAPER ADVERTISING

Mr George Brown, president of the General Roofing Manufacturing Company, delivered a most interesting address at the Y M C A Men's Convention, in Chicago, taking newspaper advertising as his subject. In the course of his talk Mr Brown said.

One of the best proofs that advertising has helped our business, and has made us known, lies in the fact that I am invited to talk to this big advertising association. We were so little known when we began advertising that I have become so well known everywhere that there is no doubt in the mind of any of our organization that advertising is doing all for us that we could expect it to do As further proof that this is true, 1914 was the most successful year in the history of our Company, in spite of the general business depression and so far this year we are ahead of the like period in 1914 in every way In one way we are very much ahead.

In mentioning these facts I would not be at all complete in my statement if I did not point out clearly that we see a big distinction between various classes of newspapers let out here We have found these with the best standing in the community those that are known for truthfulness and reliability in every way, are the ones for us to use We find that our business grows when we use a clean, influential paper one that points out the evil in a community, one that seeks to build and tell the truth. We cannot place gains where we use the dictation, methods those that cater to the red flag crowd, and who seek to make everybody believe that the world is come to the bad In short, we believe that this country has more bright sunshiny happy days than any other country on earth and we have no use for the paper seeking to build circulation by trying to destroy just as we have no use for the politician who seeks to gain the vote of the hoodlum element by seeking to destroy business.

By using the daily paper instead of the medium of national circulation, we can tell a special story in any community. If we desire to talk of agriculture in an agricultural community we can do so If we desire to talk to the manufacturer of New England we can do so If we desire to work any field very strongly and not exert as much pressure in other fields as in our power to adopt such a plan. Where there is a medium of national circulation does not permit this flexibility The newspaper does permit a perfect adjustment as near as requirements may vary by varying circumstances However, the medium of national circulation has other advantages, even for us and are using a lot of them Were we to use the local papers exclusively, the people of that community might assume that Certain-Teed Roofing was sold only in that community and that the manufacturer was only a small concern doing business in a limited field When these people see Certain-Teed Roofing advertised in national weeklies and monthlies as well as in their local paper, they begin to sit up and take notice realizing that the manufacturer of this roofing is large enough to cover the entire country.

Telling the story quickly is sometimes of importance to us, and we can decide upon a new story and get it to the readers of newspapers within ten days or fact, to the bulk of them within less than five days. The national medium being printed further in advance and copy being prepared much earlier, the quick action is impossible.

In distribution we regard the newspaper as having the greatest influence in advertising, as we believe it has in various other fields today. We believe that its influence can be increased as I suggested before? We believe that advertising is the up-to-date modern method of selling goods just as the wonderful modern machinery beats the old methods and with the big future ahead for newspaper advertising, we hope to see every improvement possible, to the end that we and other manufacturers may receive the greatest possible aid in having the qualities of our products better known, and in having the consumer, who needs such products and can use them to better advantage than anything else, know all about them We seek to develop the business to the point of the greatest efficiency in selling The cost of advertising is large in fact, it is tremendous, but the work that it can do more than offsets this cost when it is working at its best We expect to be bigger and bigger users of the newspapers in future advertising, as a matter of good business for us, and in order to lower selling costs by building volumes, so that the consumer will continually get more for his money

We think the manager in every big business should understand the big value of advertising and then if he has the courage and the finances to play the game the final development of greatness will be along the lines of educational, truthful advertising in each kind I witness high standards will have to be met and I will all work for our best future progress and help it on each in the world's business

ANTON LANG, PASSION PLAY'S CHRISTUS, NOT CALLED TO WAR

Examiner Special

NEW YORK Sept 1 Some weeks ago the report became current that the leading Passion Play actors of Oberammergau were in the German army and that the play might not be given in 1920 on account of the death of the actors says the current New York Baptist Watchman-Examiner.

It struck the public mind as peculiarly inappropriate that Anton Lang who has been the Christus for twenty years, should be in a role so different from that of the Prince of Peace."

Frau Anton Lang wrote a letter to Dr Gray of the Standard, reports that her husband is not in the army nor are any of the actors in prominent parts except Alois Lang who plays the part of St John.

Fear has kept the custom of the simple peasant people of Oberammergau in the mountains of Germany to present the life and death of Christ once every ten years. Thousands from all parts of the Christian world witness the pageant.

Just Suits My Needs Building Up the System

This is the Way Thousands of Women Are Speaking of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food.

"I want to state that I have never taken anything to do me so much good as Dr. Chase's Nerve Food," writes Mrs. Edson Brack, Temiskaming, Que., "and I am never without it in the house. I was so nervous I could not sleep, but now I sleep soundly at nights and wake up feeling refreshed and ready for the day's work. I used the Nerve Food for months and found that it just suits my needs and has built up the system wonderfully. I know it is Dr Chase's Nerve Food that has brought about the great change in my condition and am thankful for it.

"My husband was a great sufferer from itching piles and has been entirely cured by Dr Chase's Ointment"

We are constantly receiving letters like this in regard to Dr. Chase's Nerve Food. Everywhere it is being used because of its great restorative and reconstructive influence on the nervous system. Men and women who are run down in health, tired, nervous and discouraged, find in this great Food Cure the means of nourishing the exhausted system back to health and vigour.

Headaches, indigestion, sleeplessness, nervous irritability, lack of energy, and vigour all tell of nervous exhaustion, and indicate the need of such treatment as Dr Chase's Nerve Food

Instead of affording mere temporary relief by stimulating the nerves Dr Chase's Nerve Food builds up the system by supplying the ingredients from which Nature forms new rich blood and revitalizes the whole system. Put Dr Chase's Nerve Food to the test when you are run down and discouraged, fill the body with new rich blood and nerve force and you will realize a new joy of good health. 50 cents a box, 6 for $2.50 all dealers or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Limited, Toronto.

THE WEATHER

The warmest day during August was the first day of the month, the thermometer reaching 86 degrees in the shade No high figures have been recorded this summer, none above 86 degrees, which has been reached on several occasions. The lowest temperature was on the 27th, with a temperature of 36 degrees The chief feature of the month was the excessive rainfall which totalled 6.87 inches over the level This is about three times the usual amount for August There were some exceptionally heavy rains on the third 1.36 inches fell, on the 4th 2.10 and on the 7th 1.25 Rain fell on 11 different days. The month proved to be the wettest August on record. The first white frost of the season was on the 25th of the month W P.

HASTINGS SHOWED ENTHUSIASM AT FINE RECRUITING MEETING

Local Committee Formed and a Quota of Recruits for 80th Battalion is Expected From the Village.

LOCAL SPEAKERS PRESENT

A meeting to [illegible] was held in the town hall Hastings [illegible] Speakers: Patriotic [illegible] The meeting at Hastings last night was largely attended and much enthusiasm was manifested during the meeting and after as the meeting progressed. The Hastings Citizens Band played outside the hall prior to the meeting and gave several patriotic selections during its progress. Tipperary, Your King and Country Need You were well sung by local artists, the choruses being taken up continuously by the crowd. The [illegible] appointed speakers were Lieut. Huycke, Mr. M. O'Brien, Separate School Inspector and Rev. J. C. Davidson, were conveyed to Hastings in Mr. R. M. Waddell's motor car. The chair was ably filled by the Reeve of Hastings, Mr. T. Fowler, who in his opening remarks detailed what had already been done by the women of the village, and in recruiting.

Mr. M. O'Brien was the first speaker. In graphic and lucid language he traced the history of the war and the different steps which led to the present situation in Europe and the Empire, and he went on to show the nature of the situation and what was required to effectively deal with it.

Judge Huycke, in a masterly address dealt with different phases of the present critical world situation, and the responsibilities attaching thereto. He referred to the splendid responses made by the different parts of the Empire, the young men of the British Isles, and especially to the example of the Canadian Pacific Railway employees, [illegible] Hastings [illegible] Eastern Ontario Battalion. He [illegible] Rev. J. C. A vote of thanks to the speakers was proposed by Rev. D. A. Thompson and was carried. In presenting the Chairman, spoke with some confidence declared that the community could not fail to be roused by the results of the meeting and in view of the information and knowledge the citizens would be forced to do back better things than they had yet.

Col. Birdsall spoke, dealing with the local situation, and pointed out what was possible in regard to the different militia units.

A representative local committee was appointed to take charge of the work of recruiting and a recruiting sergeant will probably be down to help in the work.

WESTERNERS FEARED GERMANS WOULD SET FIRE TO CROPS

Weather Man Was Not the Only Cause of Fear—Rifles for Rostrom Were Intercepted—Organization Was Formed to Aid Mounted Rifles.

The possibility of disastrous weather during the critical period of the ripening of the western crops was not the only cause of apprehension and uneasiness. There were fears that pro-German settlers would set fire to the crop, and it is related that protective measures were undertaken at several points to meet any disturbances. A lady residing on Stewart street showed The Examiner a letter from her sister in Saskatoon illustrating the tension which existed over the safe harvesting of the crop. Writing on August 20 the writer referred to the wonderful crop and the ideal weather which was adding a finishing touch to the ripening grain. She also mentioned that two piano boxes of rifles destined for Rostrom, Sask., a German settlement, which were intercepted, and also the seizure of dynamite supplies. Incidents of this nature had given rise to an organization of civilians to assist the authorities in the event of trouble. More than two hundred automobiles were ready in Saskatoon to rush reinforcements to the Mounted Police at any point where aid might be required.

BELGIAN ARTISTS HERE IN NOVEMBER

Arrangements are being made for a visit of the Belgian Exposition Company who are coming to United States and Canada in connection with the Panama-Pacific Exposition, San Francisco, 1915. Six of the principal artists from Antwerp Exhibition are to attend, both the company who put on a very fine vaudeville programme. The date will probably be in the middle of November.

The artists' services are free, the only local expense being hall and advertising. All the receipts go directly to the Belgian Relief Fund, the artists will be accounted for later.

Fine Weather For Autumn Months

Such Is the Prediction of Those Who Are Close to the Weather Man

The weather sages announce or at least predict a warm and balmy autumn. This is the first Thursday of the new season and is set down as the trial day. It is supposed to be a sample of the general conditions that should prevail during the next three months. After almost a year of everything but seasonable weather an ideal autumn would remove the peevishness caused by the erratic deliveries of the Weather Man. With the wettest and coolest August in seventy years just departed, one of the so-"nut brown" seasons would be most acceptable. Let us hope that the prophets may have had a glimpse beyond the veil of to-day that their accurate promise may be realized, thereby bringing to them honour even in their own country. Fine weather should also be a strong inducement to entering.

Presentation to Lieut. Widdifield

Members of the Local Law Association Bid Farewell to Departing Member

Members of the Peterborough Law Association assembled yesterday afternoon in the office of Mr. G. N. Gordon for the purpose of bidding farewell to Lieut. C. R. Widdifield who is leaving for Barriefield, where he has been attached to the 59th Battalion. Mr. R. R. Hall, who occupied the chair, voiced his approval of Lieut. Widdifield's actions, which involved many sacrifices. He himself, had lost his own partner, in the person of Major S. T. Medd.

"It is a pleasure, tinged with sadness," observed His Honour Judge Hayden, who referred to Lieut. Widdifield as a son of a personal friend in the person of His Honour Judge Widdifield. He hoped for the departing member a safe return, and was glad that he was going to assist in the cause for which the Allies are fighting.

In acknowledging the presentation which consisted of a club bag, Lieut. Widdifield thanked his fellow members of the bar for their kindly remembrance. He was leaving for active service because he felt it his duty to go.

Highest Possible Service.

Police Magistrate Dumble congratulated Lieut. Widdifield upon being in a position to offer the highest possible service to his country, representing the highest measure of sacrifice. We can't all go, said His Worship. It falls to the lot of the young man to fight for our national existence. He was glad to know of one young man who had laid aside professional ambition in order to assist in the suppression of the German menace. Other speakers were E. V. Peck, Mr. F. D. Kerr, Mr. G. J. Sherry and Mr. G. N. Gordon. The latter expressed regret at the departure of his partner, and paid a high tribute to his sterling worth. He was glad that he had heard the call and hoped that he would soon return to continue the partnership that would be kept open for him.

Letters from Mr. W. F. Johnston, and Crown Attorney G. W. Hatton, expressing regret at their inability to be present, were read by Mr. F. D. Kerr.

May Be a "Joker" in It Says Roosevelt

OYSTER BAY, Sept. 1.—Ex-President Roosevelt when asked today if he would comment on Count von Bernstorff's latest note, gave out the following:

"On its face it appears to be most gratifying, and if the acts of the Germans bear it out, and if suitable amends are made for the lives lost on the Lusitania and the Arabic, and for the Gulflight and Falaba and similar cases, and if there is no provision, express or implied, as to action on our part such as was requested by Germany before as regards England and France, the result will be in every way satisfactory.

"I wish to call attention, however, to one thing. This is in no sense a concession from Germany, as it has been styled in some papers. It is an announcement that she intends to stop the policy of assassination. To stop such a policy establishes no claim to gratitude, and I take it for granted that, of course, there will be the most ample amends, so far as such amends are possible, made not only for the property, but for the 120 lives of Americans who have been assassinated during the four months and over that the policy has been carried out."

The biggest camp is at Kapuskasing, in Northern Ontario, where there are 1,281, while at Sport Lake, Quebec, internments total 1,095. Land is being cleared for experimental farms. There ar 948 prisoners at Brandon, 697 at Amherst and 495 at Vernon.

Are Ready For The Firing Line

Interesting Letter From Lance Corp. Bruce Blanchard of the 2nd Contingent

Mr. C. R. Banks, 314 Maitland Avenue, is in receipt of the following letter from Lance Corp. Bruce Blanchard of the Peterborough detachment of the 21st Battalion, second Canadian contingent, and now located at Sandling Camp, England.

The letter, which is dated August 17th, contains the following: "I have intended to write to you for about six weeks now, but have been pretty busy since coming over here. We have such long hours and hard marching that it is only about one night out of six you feel like writing. I am in the best of condition and do not mind the work at all. I did seventeen miles yesterday and was tired last night, but am feeling fine to-day. We get up at 5.30 in the morning, and sometimes it is 8 o'clock in the evening before we get through. I have joined the bomb throwers now, and am going to try and get on with the Bomb Throwers' Brigade. I was very sorry to hear of your accident, and hope you are nearly better by now.

We will soon be in the firing line now. Everybody is in the pink of condition. Yesterday we were inspected by Major-General Sam Hughes, Major General Steele, Brigadier Col. Turner and Princess Alexandria of Teck."

NO CHANGE GIVEN.

I remember the following incident as well as if it happened yesterday, although it is now twenty years since it occurred. A few ladies and gentlemen had evolved a scheme to raise additional funds for the benefit of a Yorkshire infirmary by the holding of a bazaar for the sale of curious, useful and ornamental articles. A toffish looking young man approached towards a group of young ladies in a seeming nonchalant manner, as if wishful to convey the impression that he was above the common sphere. After attracting the notice of the young ladies by his pompous attitude of assumption and superiority he threw down a sovereign and asked to be supplied with a certain specialty article. The lady saleswoman took up the golden coin, tendered the article required, and smilingly thanked the donor for his liberality. After waiting for several minutes the young man intimated that he was in a hurry and would like his change.

"My dear sir," replied the saleswoman, "we don't give change. Please wear that cart which suits distinctly. No change given."

The pompous one, with drooping mien and crestfallen look, retired penniless.

E.P.

A widow, who intended to succeed her husband as the manager of a country hotel, advertised the fact in the local papers after this manner: "This hotel will be kept by the widow of the former landlord, Mr. Higgins, who died last summer, on a few and approved plans."

WEDDING BELLS

TURNER—GARBUTT

The home of the bride's parents, the parsonage, Nelham, Ont., was the scene of a quiet wedding yesterday, when Miss Lillian Eleanor Garbutt, only daughter of the Reverend and Mrs. H. C. Garbutt, was married to Mr. William Ratcliffe Turner, second eldest son of Mr. and Mrs. W. R. Turner of this city.

The ceremony was performed in the presence of immediate friends and relatives at 12 o'clock yesterday by the bride's father, the Rev. H. C. Garbutt, assisted by the Rev. Mr. Howard of Warkworth. Miss Garbutt wore an attractive travelling suit, and carried a bouquet of roses and sweet peas. She was given away by her father. Miss Mayme Armstrong, of this city, played the wedding march.

After the ceremony dinner was served in the dining room, which was beautifully decorated with flowers. Later the bride and groom motored to Norwood, taking the 3.15 train to Northern Ontario, where they will spend the next two months.

ANNIS—DAVIS.

The wedding took place yesterday at the home of her mother, Mrs. S. A. Davis, 197 Brock street, of Miss Vera Gregg Davis to the Rev. Stanley Ewart Annis, M.A., B.D., of Toronto. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. R. G. Peever, of George street Methodist church, assisted by the Rev. George Dix of Saskatchewan.

The bride entered the drawing room on the arm of her cousin, Mr. S. T. Milburn to the strains of the "Bridal Chorus" from "Lohengrin," played by Miss Gussie Annis of Toronto, sister of the groom. The bride's dress was ivory satin trimmed with lace and pearls, and the bridal veil with large blossoms. The bridal bouquet consisted of white roses and lilies of the valley. The bridesmaid was Miss Ina Sanderson, cousin of the bride, who wore a dress of white point d'esprit over yellow silk and with a black velvet hat. She carried a bouquet of red roses. The little flower girl was Miss Helen Milburn, cousin of the bride. She wore a dress of white lace over pale blue and carried a basket of asters. The groom was supported by his brother, Mr. H. Annis of Toronto.

During the ceremony Miss Dorothy Allan sang "Until," by Wilfrid Sanderson. The groom's gift to the bride was a cameo necklace, while cameo pins were presented to the bridesmaid, the little flower girl, Miss Allan and Miss Annis, sister of the groom, who played the wedding march, also to Mr. H. Annis, brother of the groom. The buffet luncheon was served by the girl friends of the bride.

Mr. and Mrs. Annis left for Hattawa Count, where they will spend a year in training preparatory to their departure for the mission field of West China.

OBITUARY

PATRICK RYAN

While conversing with members of his family in his home on Wednesday afternoon, Patrick Ryan of Douro, aged 72 years, was taken suddenly ill and passed away almost immediately. Acute indigestion was the cause of his death. The deceased was in Peterborough on Tuesday and on the day of his death was apparently in his usual health. Mr. Ryan was one of the old residents of the township.

He leaves his wife and ten children—Michael of Douro, Dennis of York City, N.Y., Thomas of Otonabee, John of Douro, William of Calgary, Mrs. M. Fitzgerald, Mrs. P. Sullivan, Mrs. T. Peachey, and Mrs. J. Heffernan of Otonabee, and Mrs. D. J. McCarthy of Douro. Nine of the children were at their old home last night. Dennis of York City being home every year. William of Calgary was the only one absent.

STUART DELAHAYE

Stuart, the two-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Fred DeShaye, 181 Hunter street, passed away at the family residence on Wednesday afternoon after an illness of two weeks. The funeral will be held on Friday at 2.30 p.m. to the Little Lake cemetery. Rev. R. G. Peever officiating.

The Doctor's Suggestion.

A man who was very vain of his personal appearance went to the doctor one day one said "My hair is perfectly black, but my whiskers are turning white rapidly. Now, how do you account for that?"

"Well," replied the physician, "I don't know unless it is unless you cows have worked a great deal harder than your brains."

TO CHECK A COLD.
It is easy to check a cold if you begin in time. Frequent doses of Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine keep the cough loose, allay the inflammation and so prevent it spreading to the bronchial tubes and lungs. Mrs. S. M. Moore, Shortreed B. C., writes: "I wish to state my gratitude for Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine, for it cured a cold which a friend said would soon put me in the grave."

A Big Victory For the Italians
Germans Halted in Riga District

ROVERETO IS CAPTURED BY ITALIAN TROOPS

Greatest Single Victory in the Italian Advance Upon Trest is Reported--Early Evacuation of Riva is Expected to Follow This Success---Rovereto Has Been Under Bombardment for Months.

Special Cable to The Examiner.

ROME, Sept. 3.—Kovereto has been evacuated by the Austrians in the face of the Italian advance.

The capture of Kovereto marks the greatest single victory in the Italian advance upon Trent, the goal of Gen. Cadorna's forces in the north. Though the Austrians have constructed barricades across the valley between Rovereto and Trent, military men here believe the Italian troops will approach Trent itself before winter halts the military operations.

The City of Rovereto, with a population of 12,000, lying 16 miles north of the Italian frontier has been under long range bombardment for many weeks. The early evacuation of Riva, at the head of Lake Digarda by the Austrians is expected to follow the fall of Rovereto.

Rotterdam On Fire

Big Liner of the Holland and American Line in Distress—Has 174 Passengers and 350 Crew on Board

Special Cable to The Examiner.

AMSTERDAM, Sept. 2.—It is reported here this afternoon that the liner Rotterdam is afire. Over-heated cotton in her holds is said to have caused the blaze.

The liner Rotterdam is next to the largest of the great fleet of passenger carrying vessels of the Holland-American line. She displaces 24,149 tons, is 650 feet long, and has a beam of 77 feet.

The Rotterdam was built in 1908 at Belfast. She is a steel twin screw steamer, with four decks and modernly built throughout. Her captain, as given by Lloyd's shipping register, is G. Stenger. She flew the Dutch flag and was registered at Rotterdam.

Confirmed in London.

London, Sept. 2.—Despatches received here this evening confirmed the report that the Rotterdam is afire, but said her passengers have been discharged at Amsterdam and that efforts are being made to get the flames under control.

NEW YORK, Sept. 2.—The Holland American liner Rotterdam left New York at noon on August 21 with 108 first-class, 75 second, and 91 third-class passengers.

The last message received by the New York offices said that the Rotterdam had arrived at Falmouth, England, last Sunday. Falmouth is 36 hours from Rotterdam and it was supposed here that the liner had reached Rotterdam, though no report of her safe arrival there has ever been received.

Among the passengers on the Rotterdam were Mrs. Harriet Stanton Blatch, the suffragist leader, Monsieure Robinson, and John G. Lamont, U. S. vice-consul at Rotterdam. The liner carried a crew of about 350.

MR. PEGOUD KILLED WHILE IN BATTLE ALONE WITH GERMAN AEROPLANE AT THE FRONT

While Reconnoitring He Meets a German Air Ship Near La Petite Croix, and in Combat That Follows Fires Hundreds of Shots at Enemy Until He Is Struck

Special to The Examiner

PARIS, Sept. 3.—It was while in a fierce battle with a German aeroplane that Adolphe Pegoud, the world's most daring aviator, was killed according to official details concerning the report that perturbed Paris concerning his death.

Thus, after destroying many German aeroplanes and killing or capturing their operators in the most brilliant individual work of the French aerial campaign, Mr. Pegoud met a glorious death fighting the enemy valiantly far above the earth until a bullet ended his life.

Mr. Pegoud whose startling feat of looping the loop time after time and flying upside down proved he knew no fear, was making a reconnaissance unaccompanied, in his aeroplane when he was attacked, gave battle and was killed.

According to the official details Mr. Pegoud had ascended to reconnoitre the enemy's lines near La Petite Croix. While inside the German lines he was attacked by a German aeroplane.

Being without arm and in the aeroplane to fire the machine gun Mr. Pegoud was compelled to operate the aeroplane and at the same time work the machine gun.

That he continued firing the gun at the enemy airman is indicated by the fact that he had run several belts containing hundreds of cartridges through the machine gun before a bullet fired by the German struck and killed him.

It is believed that he could have escaped from the German aeroplane and he declared by experts who studied the operation of the aeroplane after the combat that he had control of it and his motor was working perfectly. Instead he elected to face death high up in the air above the enemy's lines in the trenches, and pay with his life the attacking German aeroplane.

While the official statement fails to mention how many were in the German aeroplane, it was believed here there were at least two, one firing a machine gun and another operating the aeroplane. The Germans seldom sent up a fighting aeroplane with less than two men. As Mr. Pegoud was not engaged in a raid at the time, but merely observing the enemy's lines, he was alone in his air craft.

When the bullet struck Mr. Pegoud he probably was killed instantly. Soldiers in the trenches who had watched the sinewy battle far above them suddenly saw Mr. Pegoud's great yellow machine nose and then roll down to the earth inside the French line.

Soldiers hurried to the wrecked aeroplane and found Mr. Pegoud dead. The bullet in the head and the empty cartridge belts that had been run through the machine gun indicated only too plainly that the daring Frenchman had fought until death and that his aeroplane dropped only when his lifeless hands and feet failed to operate the controlling levers.

Confirmation of the news of Mr. Pegoud's death caused the greatest sensation throughout Paris. He was regarded by the French people as a hero living before he met his brilliant death.

Although only twenty-seven years old he had served five years in the French cavalry, fighting in the Moroccan campaign, before he achieved distinction as an aviator with his daring feat to join the loop and flying upside down.

When the present war began he was easily the leading aviator of France if not of the world. He enlisted as a private in the Aviation Corps and since then has been promoted until at the time of his death he was a captain. He had been credited with bringing down [illegible] German aeroplanes and balloons.

Only [illegible] he was reported to have been decorated with the Legion of Honor for his work in the war. He was [illegible] by the German [illegible] and was [illegible] to the French [illegible]

Italy Takes Summit of Monte Cista

Special to The Examiner

MILAN, Sept. 1.—The Italians have captured the summit of Monte Cista and command the flank of Fort Panarotta. The Austrians held Cima Cista with considerable forces, as the position was extremely important for them. The Alpini reached the summit and held it. This means very important progress in consolidating the positions recently acquired in Val Sugana.

The Italian artillery in Carso has been exceedingly active within the last few days. The hail of shells sent into the Austrian trenches turned these into graves. In one trench, which the Italians occupied, every man had been killed. Their mangled bodies lay in the body of the trench, which had been enfiladed by the Italian guns from two sides.

Fighting for Monte Rombon.

The Italian Alpine troops are reported to be fighting for possession of the last of the Austrian trenches on Monte Rombon. They are fighting with extraordinary bravery capturing the ground almost inch by inch. The Austrians are now driven almost to their very last entrenchments.

As revenge for this loss, the Austrians have begun sending shells into Plezzo, although this town is not yet occupied by the Italian troops.

Bombard Evacuated Town.

The relentless bombardment to which the Austrians subject the towns they have evacuated seems to show they have no hope of regaining them. At Pive di Livinallongo women, children and old men were killed in a hospital in which they had sought refuge.

Borgo, in the Val Sugana which had been evacuated by the Austrians, but not occupied by the Italian troops, who hoped to spare the civil population, has suffered. It is now the turn of Plezzo which is paying the price of the Italian conquest of its heights.

BERLIN (wireless via Sayville) Aug. 31 ½A telegram from Innsbruck states that the last fights in Stelvio Pass ended in a victory for the Austrians. The Italians were compelled to vacate the vicinity.

GREAT GERMAN RUNNER IS KILLED IN BATTLE

The death of George Mickler, who fell in action on the Eastern front against the Russians, closes the career of one of the greatest running men produced by Germany in years. On June 9, 1913 at Berlin he won the German 2,000 metres championship in 5 43 3-5, while at Hanover thirteen days after he set up a world's kilometre (1,093 6 yards) record 2 32 2-10.

Fernando Altimani, the famous Italian walker, who established a world's record for an hour's walk, has been seriously wounded in the face and neck in the fighting with the Austrians.

STREAKED WALLS.

Cold Surfaces Always Catch More Dust Than Hot Ones.

The reason that lath and plaster walls become streaked is explained by John Aitken, in Nature, as due to the tendency of hot air to deposit its dust on cold surfaces, and the colder the surface the weaker the power of resistance. So where the laths protect the plaster from the cold outside the plaster receives less deposit of dust than where it is between the laths.

Wherever a hot steam or water pipe comes through a wall a vertical streak of dust may be seen above it, due to the hot air driving the dust against the cold wall. Rooms that are heated by open grates are much less dusty than those heated by radiators because in the former the furniture is heated principally by radiation, and, being warmer than the air, it repels the particles of dust instead of catching them, while in the latter the air heats the furniture and in so doing deposits its dust on it.

Rooms lighted by electricity keep clean longer than those heated by gas simply because the light is almost cold.

Mr. Aitken sums it up as follows: "Any surface hotter than the air keeps free from dust."

JEFFERSON'S HOME.

Monticello, With Its View of the University of Virginia.

A mansion on Monticello ("little mountain," pronounced "Montechello"), was Jefferson's boyhood dream. He worked at it all his life with an artist's creative zeal.

The road from Charlottesville is winding, hilly and rough. Rows of big stepping stones cross it, lifting pedestrians out of the red mud, but jolting heedless drivers.

Visitors may stay in the grounds twenty minutes, but must bring no luncheons. Jefferson's guests stayed weeks and ate him into poverty.

From the servants' quarters a long sunken way runs under the house to the ice house and other storage beyond. The flat roof of this walk, two feet above ground, is a dry promenade. Over the icehouse is an outlook platform. Icehouse and servants' quarters are half underground, with windows only on the far side. Jefferson looked out over them east toward Washington, west toward the University of Virginia, whose beginnings he watched with his telescope when he could no longer walk.

Students enjoy the most beautiful and inspiring scholastic shades in the new world. Jefferson's university is artistic perfection, reverently preserved. Toward the town the curved walls he designed to save brick and labor for a poor institution still stand. The length of each wave line curve is twenty feet. Its width, forty inches, gives the stability of a three foot wall to one only four inches thick. The effect is pleasing.

Jefferson was a better architect than Washington, and perhaps his equal in landscape gardening and estate planning.

On Jefferson's gravestone at Monticello no mention of the presidency is made, but his authorship of the Declaration and the Virginia statute of religious liberty is recited and that he was the "Father of the University of Virginia."—New York World.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

RED MIKE'S HAUL

How a Burglar Was Trapped by a Girl

By F. A. MITCHEL

I was visiting at the Middletons' country place. It was in the sweet summer time, when one's especial desire is to loll in a hammock or paddle about in a boat or do anything that requires no exertion. Then, too, the warm season is particularly adapted to spooning. Miss Georgia Middleton was apparently not averse to that sort of thing, so I spooned with her. In fact, she began it. I am always distrustful of a girl who doesn't wait for a man to enter upon a flirtation. It is prima facie evidence that she is in for a bit of fun at his expense.

Mr. Middleton owned a ranch in the west and had spent much of his time there. The consequence was that Georgia, who took a liking to ranch life, was with her father in the west more than in the east. She was therefore a mixture of lady and hoyden. Conventionality she spurned. She had spent enough of her life in civilization to become familiar with good manners and enough time in the west to cause her to practice them only when it suited her own sweet will.

The eastern country home of the Middletons was in sizable grounds, covered with virgin timber. Georgia was as much at home on a horse's back as on her feet and scoured the country mounted and alone. When her father suggested her taking her groom with her she replied: "No, thanks. I have no mind to bring sorrow on my dear papa's head by exposing myself to the blandishments of a good looking stableman. I'd rather run the risk of a cowboy." Since it was well known that when any lovemaking was in the wind Miss Georgia was the aggressor this statement was taken for what it was worth.

One day the cook and chambermaid fell out and left the premises short of servants. I came down to breakfast to find Miss Georgia in the kitchen in spotless white, a paper cap on her head, handling the cooking utensils with the handiness of a chef. The costume was very becoming, and I complimented her on her appearance in it.

"That's the reason I put it on," she said. "I've plenty of old clothes that serve the purpose better, but I wouldn't look as well in them."

By such frank speeches Georgia won the confidence of those about her, but there was usually a method in them.

Having prepared an excellent breakfast, it suddenly occurred to this wayward young lady to have a ride on her cob about the grounds in her cook's costume. She usually rode astride; but, not having on her bloomers on this occasion, she used a saddle with a horn. Galloping along through the timber, she saw a man skulking in the distance. Riding toward him, she observed that he was by no means well looking. Indeed, he had the appearance of belonging to the criminal classes.

"Good mornin' to you," he said. "Exercisin' the missis' saddle horse?"

It occurred to Georgia that, being in cook's costume, she had been mistaken for a servant.

"Yes," she replied. "The missis isn't well. If the cob isn't taken out every day he gets fractious."

"You're a nice lookin' girl, too nice lookin' for a cook. You ought to be a lady's maid."

"I am a lady's maid. The cook went away yesterday, and I had to go into the kitchen. But what are you doing here?"

"Well, this lookin' like a fine place I thought there might be some chance for a meal."

"Like enough you're looking for something better than a meal," replied Georgia in a dry tone.

"What's that you're sayin'?"

"I'm on to the likes of you. I've been a partner in such jobs myself."

"What kind o' jobs?"

"Oh, I know you're looking for a crib to crack, and I know the safest way to get the swag out handy and without getting caught is to have a helper among the servants."

The man scrutinized the girl's face, hesitating to trust her.

"How's a man to know you won't give him away?" he said presently.

"He doesn't know it. He's got to go in on faith. If he wants to be treated right he must do the right thing by his helper."

"What d'you call the right thing?"

"Well, he's got to put up something beforehand and agree to divide the profits after the job's done."

"Suppose he hasn't anything to put up?"

"Then I can't see how he can get started on the job."

But finally the supposed lady's maid threw off her demand for a guarantee fund and agreed to turn over her mistress' jewels provided the party of the first part would agree to dispose of the plunder and divide the profits. She told the man where he would find a ladder in an outhouse, how he could climb to a certain window on the second floor, which he would find open; how he could enter a room where there would be a box of jewels on a dresser. When this agreement had been made the man retreated and Georgia rode back to the house to report the interview.

She was reproved by her mother, who did not for a moment suppose that she had the remotest idea of carrying her prank any further, nor did I. Mrs. Middleton proposed that on the night appointed for the robbery the gate should be locked and the police be called to protect the premises. Mr. Middleton was in the city and not expected at home for several days. I, being the only man present, ventured to suggest to Mrs. Middleton that the man would not be so gullible as to trust himself in the hands of a stranger and nothing would come of it, but the lady declared that she believed many robberies were committed by connivance of the servants and this was a case in point.

After the matter had been duly discussed by all except its perpetrator, who had maintained a modest silence, Georgia as soon as she got me alone told me that she believed the man was a jailbird who had escaped or had ended his term and that she had completely deceived him. She asked me to assist her in carrying out her scheme. I told her that the police would be only too glad to be interested in it with a view to capturing the man red handed. I volunteered to sound them and learn what they would prefer to do.

I did so and was told, after giving them Georgia's description of the man, that he was probably Red Mike, who had recently been discharged after doing a term in state prison. They begged me to secure them an opportunity to trap him. I suggested that they put a guard around the Middleton grounds and take him as he entered, but they said that by this course they would have no charge to make against him, whereas if he were permitted to enter the house and was caught there carrying away property he could be sent back to prison for another term.

When I reported these facts to Georgia she asked me to grant the request of the police, but declared that the matter must be kept from her mother. I did not like to be mixed in a matter of dissimulation, but Georgia said it could be managed with her mother's knowledge of it. I finally left her to do as she pleased. She determined to communicate with her father, who, returning from the city, after hearing the story and giving his daughter the usual scolding upon one of her unusual pranks, decided to give the police the opportunity, if it occurred, to get in a criminal who was bent on making a dishonest living.

On the night of the expected burglary we amused ourselves as usual till about 11 o'clock, when we all went to our rooms, agreeing that all lights should be turned off at 12. The robbery was to be committed at 1. I turned off my light at the appointed time and sat in the dark in my clothes. My room overlooked the outhouse where the ladder that the burglar was to use was kept, and the window through which he was to enter was on the same side of the house. Shortly before 1 o'clock I began a watch upon the outhouse, but when ten minutes after the appointed time had elapsed and all was quiet I made up my mind that it was Georgia who had been fooled instead of the criminal.

At seventeen minutes of 2, when I was about to give up the watch and go to bed, I saw a figure stealing to the outhouse. The door had been purposely left ajar by the police, who were in a room overlooking the outhouse. I saw the figure carrying something which I presumed to be the ladder, though it was too dark to discern what it was, and by his motions I knew that he was raising one end against the house. Then I saw him slowly mount the rounds.

I had left my door open so that I could look into the hall and now went to take position at the door. It was not a minute, though it seemed longer, after this change that the electric lights on that floor were turned on, the police sprang from the room they occupied into the hall and thence into the room the burglar had entered. I ran to the door of the room they were in, reaching it just in time to see them seize the man and take from him a box, which one of them opened. It was filled with pebbles.

The household was up and about. No one had gone to bed, and as the burglar was led out through the hall he passed us all. When he came to Georgia I saw him start, for he saw her, not in cook's apparel, but dressed as a lady. He scowled at her, but with a policeman on either side of him and handcuffed he had no opportunity for reproaches. So he uttered no word.

Georgia, having played her prank, now regretted that she had been instrumental in returning a man to prison and began to urge her father to use his influence to prevent the rascal being prosecuted. But Mr. Middleton told her that the matter was not in his hands. The police had caught the robber red handed and had the necessary evidence to convict him.

Nevertheless, Georgia did not give up. She hired a lawyer to defend the man she had trapped, and the thief got off on the ground that he had been persuaded to rob the person who had persuaded him, which was a conspiracy.

Georgia wound up her summer's amusements by bringing me to a declaration and refusing me. I suppose I should have condemned her, but I did not. I pretended that I had also been amusing myself, though I took care to show this by my bearing and not by words. The ruse was successful, and in time I married her.

I am happy to say that since our marriage my wife has behaved herself to my entire satisfaction. She plays no pranks—indeed, she has forgotten those she played in her girlhood. Our daughter, Georgia, is now approaching the age that her mother was when she scooped Red Mike, but her mother does not propose that her daughter shall scoop any one that is, unless he should be a man with a fortune.

Mother — "Now, Bobby, was it you who picked all the white meat off this chicken?" Bobby — "Well, mother, to make a clean breast of it, I did."

AN ONTARIO WITNESS.

Suffered from Rheumatism.

Waterloo, Ont.—"We use Dr. Pierce's medicines in our home and have always found them to be the very best. Some time ago my husband was taken sick with muscular rheumatism. He was very bad for four years—could not do a stroke of work. He took several different kinds of medicine and had several good doctors in that time, but did not get one bit of relief. He began taking "Golden Medical Discovery" and "Pleasant Pellets" and in less than a year he was a well man and he goes to work every day. We all feel very kindly toward Dr. Pierce for his wonderful cure when everything else failed."—MRS. JACOB WOLFE, 8 Queen St.

[redacted] PURE BLOOD [redacted]

The Greatest Blessing Mankind Can Have.

Many Canadian people need this powerful vegetable remedy that puts the stomach, liver and bowels in fine condition; that clears the skin of pimples, rash, blemishes, and eczema; that dissolves boils and carbuncles; that makes nerves stronger and steadier, and gives to pale, weak, run-down people the fullest measure of health and happiness.

Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, free from alcohol or narcotics, does just what is stated above, simply because it banishes from the blood all poison and impure matter. It dissolves the impure deposits and carries them out, as it does all impurities, through the Liver, Bowels, Kidneys and Skin.

If you have a bad cough, bronchial, nasal or other catarrh, unsteady nerves or unsightly skin, get "Golden Medical Discovery" to-day and start at once to replace your impure blood with the kind that puts energy and ambition into you and brings back vigorous action.

All medicine dealers can supply you in either liquid or tablet form or send 50 cents for trial box of tablets to Dr. Pierce, Invalids' Hotel, Buffalo, N. Y.

THE RHYTHM OF FLAVORS

(By Peter McArthur)

A couple of years ago a Japanese scientist-artist-musician-perfumer gave a super-esthetic group of New Yorkers an entertainment that was perhaps unique in the world's history, and yet he might have made it more wonderful than it was. Owing to the versatility of his genius he knew that there are rhythms of form and color as well as of sound, and he perfected a mechanism by which he was able to throw colors and lights in certain forms on a screen to the accompaniment of music. At the same time he released jets of odor in the same rhythmical way. His purpose was to cater delicately to as many senses as possible. But why did he stop with the senses of form, color, sound and perfume? Why didn't he spread a banquet and cater rhythmically to the sense of taste? Our fruits, for instance, from the earliest strawberry to the latest peach give a range of flavors that a master artist might arrange into a symphony. The sense of taste can be catered to just as delicately and effectively as any other, and the housewife with a full fruit cupboard can at any time evolve sonatas of flavor, or tasty lyrics that will appeal to any palate.

Probably no country in the world is more favored with fruit than Canada. As some poet has observed it has a profusion of berries, "huckle, rasp, and straw," besides currants, cherries, peaches, plums, pears, apples, grapes, quinces, and other fruits too numerous to mention. And each of these fruits has a flavor indescribably individual.

By the way, is it possible to describe a flavor in a way that will convey to the person who has not tasted it what it is like? Of course we can give an idea of things as being sweet, sour, salt, or insipid but the penetrating, aromatic flavors—how are they to be described? I know of only two attempts at describing flavors that were at all successful. One was the attempt by David Harum's sister to describe champagne. She said it was like drinking cider and sniffing horseradish at the same time. The other was the answer made by a small boy when asked what vichy tasted like. He said, "It tastes like your foot's asleep." If I could have a heart-to-heart talk with that Japanese scientist-artist-musician-perfumer I would try to get him to prepare something for the annual banquet of the Canadian Fruit Growers and have him add flavors to his entertainment. But perhaps the Fruit Growers would object. They probably agree with the average housewife that the flavors of our Canadian fruits are sufficient in themselves without being added to. They have color, and aroma also, and it is quite sufficient to set them to the music of tinkling glasses and silver spoons. This season when the fruits are so plentiful and so good every fruit cellar in the Dominion should be a symphony of the divine flavors perfected by the sun in the great alembic of a Canadian summer.

WONDERFUL BILIOUS REMEDY ACTUALLY PREVENTS ATTACKS

There are two great causes of biliousness,—they are constipation and defective liver action.

When Dr Hamilton's Pills are taken, they not only correct constipated bowels, but act upon the liver as well.

Quite unlike ordinary medicines, which purge and give temporary relief, Dr. Hamilton's Pills remove the conditions which cause biliousness, and thus permanent cures are effected. No person who occasionally uses Dr. Hamilton's Pills will ever suffer from the headache, bad stomach or bilious complaint. Get a 25c. box today.

Brave Little Denise

Speaking of heroines of the war, in the neighborhood of the Trocadero nobody is better known than little Denise Cartier, one of the first victims of the German aerial raids. She limped along the boulevards, smiling merrily, and proudly raising her skirt to let you see her wonderful artificial leg, which was made to replace the one she had torn away by a German bomb. She does not look like a cripple at all, for the leg is well made, and she has become an expert in the use of it. So it is no wonder she asks every new face she meets: "Would you like to see my artificial leg?"

The other day everyone was surprised to meet her with only one leg and walking by the aid of crutches.

"But what has happened to your leg, Denise?" she was asked.

"Well," she replied, "it is the most wonderful leg in the world, only it does not grow. But I do and so that it is now at the factory being made a little longer. I shall get it back on Saturday, and then I won't limp at all any more."

And her smile was one of perfect happiness as she said these words.

A Real Flesh Builder For Thin People

WHO WOULD INCREASE WEIGHT

Thin men and women who would like to increase their weight with 10 or 15 pounds of healthy stay there fat should try eating a little Sargol with their meals for a while and note results. Here is a good test worth trying. First weigh yourself and measure yourself. Then take Sargol one tablet with every meal for two weeks. Then weigh and measure again. It isn't a question of how you look or feel or what your friends say and think. The scales and the tape measure will tell their own story. Many people having followed these simple directions, report weight increases of from five to eight pounds with contented gains under further treatment.

Sargol does not of itself make fat, but mixing with your food its purpose is to help the digestive organs turns the fats, sugars and starches of what you have eaten into rich, ripe, fat producing nourishment for the tissues and blood prepare it in an easily assimilated form, which the blood can readily accept. A great deal of this nourishment now passes from thin people bodies as waste, and make the fat producing contents of the very same meals you are eating now develop pounds and pounds of healthy flesh between your skin and bones. Sargol is non-injurious, pleasant, efficient and inexpensive. All leading druggists are authorized to sell it in large boxes, forty tablets to a package on a guarantee of weight increase or money back as found in every package.

KIDNEY DISEASE CURED SWORN STATEMENT

Of Mr. Wesley Maxwell, Who Gratefully Gives All Credit to Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills

It is one thing to make big claims for a medicine and quite another thing to produce irrefutable evidence that it actually cures in serious cases.

We prefer to let the cured ones speak for themselves, and that is why you find in almost every newspaper the report of someone who has been cured by the use of Dr. Chase's medicines. To-day we present the sworn statement of Mr. Wesley Maxwell. When a man goes to this trouble in expressing his gratitude there can be no question of the benefit he has received. Mr. Wesley Maxwell, Orangeville, Ont., writes: "I have been using Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills, and I must tell you that before I started using them I could only make water with the greatest difficulty, and had many severe pains in the back. I am completely cured now by the use of these pills. Before that I used a lot of doctors' medicine without any benefit that I could see. I am thankful for being cured, and can recommend Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills very highly."

SWORN STATEMENT.

"This is to certify that I, Wesley Maxwell, of the Township of Caledon, was cured of kidney trouble by taking Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills.

"Wesley Maxwell."

(Sworn before me as correct this 6th day of January, 1915. — Wm. Hawkins, Sen. Justice of the Peace).

This statement is also endorsed by the Rev. Geo. W. Robinson, who is Mr. Maxwell's pastor.

This cure will interest a great many people who are suffering as Mr. Maxwell was with kidney and urinary troubles. It will only cost you a quarter to buy a box of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills and put this medicine to the test. We are sure that you will be thankful to the writer for describing his cure to you. EXAMINER PATTERN SERVICE

SMART DESIGNS FOR STOUT FIGURES.

By Anabel Worthington.

Stout women always need a good model of a plain skirt, and with this at hand they are able to vary it so that other styles can be built upon similar lines. The skirt is equally suitable for other women, as it is made with six gores, and is therefore suitable even for narrow fabrics. The front and back are arranged in panel style, with the edges laid in a tuck and stitched on the outside. The waistline may be made either high or normal, while the lower edge has a slight flare. It measures 2¼ yards of medium size.

Such a skirt as this will show to advantage in the new soft serge, and also in gabardine and other woollens. In poplin it will be especially handsome, and it is appropriate for linen and for gingham of good quality.

The skirt pattern, No. 7199, is cut in sizes 22 to 36 inches waist measure. Medium size requires 3⅝ yards of 36 inch material.

When ordering remember to give your name and address as well as the number and size of pattern required, and age of a child.

Price 15 cents, or 2 for 25c.

Elijah and The Prophets of Baal. 1 Kings 18:16-40.

Golden Text: Jehovah is far from the wicked: but he heareth the prayer of the righteous. Prov. 15:29.

1. Verse 16—What are Ahab and Obadiah chiefly noted for?

2. From whom had Obadiah a message for Ahab, and what was its nature?

3. Verses 17-20—What law, in sinful human nature, did Ahab demonstrate in the way he accosted Elijah when he met him?

4. Why is it that sinners when suffering for their sins generally put the blame on some one else?

5. In what respects was it true that Ahab and his house were the troublers of Israel?

6. Verse 21—What test did Elijah propose to Ahab and his people?

7. Why did not Ahab slay Elijah when he was in his power, seeing he had been hunting him for that purpose?

8. Which is the more harmful condition, to be almost persuaded to be a Christian, or to be definitely decided that we will not, and why?

9. Why had the people of Israel been halting between serving God and Baal?

10. Why could not the people answer the challenge of Elijah?

11. What can you say concerning the wisdom of Elijah's advice to the people?

12. Verse 22—Was Elijah correct in his opinion that he was the only prophet in Israel remaining true to God? (See Chapter 19:18.)

13. In what sense is the proverb always true, that "one man and God are a majority?"

14. Is it always God's plan to give the victory to every man of God, no matter if he is alone and all the people are against him? Give your reasons.

15. Verses 23-25—Was the plan Elijah adopted, with which to prove that Baal was no god, his own, or had it been given to him by God? Why or why not? (See verse 36.)

16. Why would it be wise or otherwise, for any good men to-day, to adopt the same test as Elijah did to prove that those who oppose Christianity are wrong?

17. What is the supreme test today that our God is real, and a present help in trouble, and all other gods are false?

18. Verses 26-29—What reason is there to believe that these prophets of Baal believed in their God?

19. How much value can you get for the truth of any cause, from the fact that its advocates are ready to die for it?

20. Verses 30-40—What proof have we, fully as convincing as this miracle, that our God is almighty and all loving?

Lesson for Sunday, Sept. 12, 1915: Elijah's Flight and Return. 1 Kings 19.

Between the showers. A man who worships landscape beauty gazed from the flagstaff at the Acklandra Park over the channel toge of the Cathkins, and burst out with "Jinks! isn't it wonderful what a difference there is in the atmosphere? It's with all these factory fums stopped reekin'." "Ay, John," said his wife "but dinna forget besides all the mon smokin thick, black clay pipes that's awa' oot o the toon."

His explanation. Why is the blade of a sabre curved?" asked the sergeant, who was instructing some new recruits in swordmanship. "It's curved so as to give more force to the blow," replied one of the men. "Nonsense!" exclaimed the instructor. "The sabre is curved so as to make it fit the scabbard. If it were straight how on earth would you get it in the crooked scabbard, eh?"

PETERBOROUGH, FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 3, 1915

Grodno Has Been Captured By The Germans

General Hughes Talks Of Conditions at Front

Fine Spirit Manifested Among The Allies States Gen. Hughes

Minister of Militia Just Back From the Front Says That Canadians Are Cheerful and Optimistic---Their Work Praised by King Albert of Belgium and the French Minister of War.

GERMANS CLAIM NEW EASTERN SUCCESS

Special Cable to The Examiner.

OTTAWA, Sept. 3.—In the course of an interview Sir Sam Hughes to-day said: "The trip along the entire line from the North Sea through the cities now historic to Rheims will ever live in my memory. The spirit of the Canadian boys is splendid, cheerful, courageous and optimistic. It was the most pleasant visit of my life in meeting my friends amid such stern and stirring circumstances. I spent eight days in France and one in Belgium. I met King Albert, who spoke highly of the conduct of the Canadians in the battle and Ypres. M. Millerand, the War Minister for France, whom I met, spoke in enthusiastic terms of the Canadians, also over the battlefield of the Aisne and Marne travelled. The fields are still strewn with broken guns, German and British, the graves of the British and Germans are scattered along the banks of the rivers up over the hills and everywhere. In fact graves mark the lines of battles.

Speaking of the part that the Allies have up to the present taken in France, Sir Sam Hughes said: "Just as the British and French have been immortalized on the Marne and the Aisne, so Canadians have also been immortalized at Ypres and Festubert. In these battles the work of the Allies is now regarded as a marvellous exhibition of pluck and durance, and successful fighting.

Gen. Sam Hughes paid a tribute to Sir John French and his assistant generals. "As to the French army," the Minister of Militia said, "the Canadians and British are proud to fight with them. There is no doubt of the ultimate issue with such spirit among the Allies."

BERLIN, via wireless, Sept. 3.—Gen. Von Hindenburg's troops have captured Grodno fortress it was officially announced this afternoon.

Following a heavy bombardment, the German troops have captured a strongly fortified bridgehead at Lennewode, northwest of Friedrichstadt around which a violent engagement has been waged for ten days. Cavalry swam the river and aided in the attack.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 3.—America is willing to settle its Lusitania and Arabic reparation claims against Germany at The Hague.

For this statement there was the highest State Department authority to day. This it was explained did not mean the arbitration of the submarine warfare proposition. It relates only to the amount the Kaiser must pay for the lives of Americans who have perished on ships sung by the Kaiser's U boats.

NEW YORK, Sept. 3.—A Tribune cable from London says: "Much discussion has occurred recently regarding whether the phrase 'freedom of the seas' in Sir Edward Grey's letter to the newspapers had any bearing on the possibilities of early peace negotiations." To-day it is authoritatively stated to the Tribune correspondent that: "The phrase had no such meaning. The attitude of Great Britain towards peace is still unchanged since the pronouncement of Asquith and Grey last fall."

SLIGHT HOPE FROM BULGARIA.

PARIS, Sept. 3.—Diplomats here have also abandoned the hope of obtaining Bulgaria's early entrance into the war despite optimistic despatches from Rome and Athens. The tent of Serbia's answer to the Allies' request that she cede Macedonia to Bulgaria has not been made public. Because of the silence in official quarters, it is understood that Serbia refused to make sufficient concessions to induce Bulgaria to depart from her course of neutrality.

PARIS, Sept. 3.—Absolute quiet along the entire battle front, so far as infantry actions were concerned, was reported by The War Office this afternoon. Artillery engagements continued throughout the night, but without important incident.

LONDON, Sept. 3.—Japan is playing her part with the Allies by furnishing rifles and artillery it was learned here to-day. Hundreds of thousands of rifles, manufactured in Japan, have been received by the British Government, and it is understood that the British troops at the Dardanelles are almost entirely equipped with Japanese guns. The Japanese are reliably reported ot have shipped artillery to Russia recently.

PARIS, Sept. An Athens despatch to a news agency to-day stated that a large Turkish force has been surrounded by the Allies at the Dardanelles.

CANADIANS REVIEWED.

LONDON, Sept. 2.—The King, accompanied by Lord Kitchener and his staff, reviewed the Canadians of Shorncliffe district at Beechborough Park to-day. General Steele commanded and others present were General Turner, General Carson, Major Jarvis and Col. Kincaid.

All the battalions belonging to second contingent were represented, the march past being accompanied by the massed Canadian bands. Afterwards the King complimented General Steel on the fine appearance of the officers and men. The Canadians gave hearty cheers for the King.

Major Markham, of the Queen's Canadian Military Hospital, was presented to his Majesty, who afterwards left Shorncliffe station, the road being lined with Canadian troops. Large numbers of the public watched the King's departure.

LONDON, Sept. 3.—While there has been no official corroboration of the Athens despatch that a large force of Turkish troops have been surrounded on the Gallipoli Peninsula, and are likely to surrender shortly, it is believed here that this is very likely the case. Military experts believe that the British have landed immense fresh forces on both sides of the Peninsula, and with the aid of the navy caught the Turks napping with unexpected strategic movement which was thought impossible. There are high hopes to-day that Gen. Ian Hamilton's official report will bear out the rumour that a large portion of the effective Turkish forces have been caught in the British net.

THE BALKAN OUTLOOK.

ROME, Sept. 2.—The outlook in the Balkans to-day appears to be hopeful for the allies owing to Greece's decision not to oppose Serbia's eventual territorial concessions to Bulgaria, even if these concessions extend beyond the right bank of the Vardar River, provided, however, that Serbia retains the regions of Douan and Gheorgheli.

Although the Kavala drama is yet in abeyance, a solution is hoped for later, since the allies have promised Bulgaria a quarter area in Thrace than was offered Turkey for her co-operation and its immediate occupation.

Meanwhile the threatened Austro-German invasion of Serbia and Roumania is most unlikely to be carried out, as the troops concentrated in Transylvania are insufficient for any attempt at extensive operations. Besides there is a lack of reserves.

COBOURG AT ITS OLD GAME

Cobourg is still at its old game of claiming every soldier of the units that have mobilized in that town as a Cobourg man. A despatch to the Globe to-day says that 746 Cobourg men have gone to the front so far. As a matter of fact, these men were from all over the district, Campbellford, Brighton, Colborne and many other villages supplying quotas, while in the 746 are included at least one hundred Peterboro artilleymen who went to the front with the first contingent, or in the heavy battery. And the fun of it the Toronto papers print editorials about Cobourg's fine showing while all Eastern Ontario smiles.

PEACE TALK IS NOW REVIVED IN UNITED STATES

American Opinion Is That All Europe, Particularly Germany, is Heartily Tired of the Great Struggle

GERMANY'S CONCESSIONS

Special to The Examiner:

WASHINGTON, D. C., Sept. 3 — (Special.)— Peace in war ridden Europe, with Uncle Sam as chief mediator, was a prominent topic of discussion here to-day. In spite of the administration's statement that President Wilson could take no steps in the direction of peace parleys until both sides wished it, it was thought here that all Europe, particularly Germany, is heartily tired of the war, with its awful casualty lists and general depression and would welcome some settlement. The great factor for optimism in this connection, it is thought here, is Germany's concession in the matter of submarine warfare, together with the British Foreign Minister Grey's admission that the matter of the freedom of the seas was a negotiable proposition. The representations of His Holiness the Pope, through his official United States emissary, to President Wilson yesterday was also regarded as a hopeful sign. There are many here who prophecy that peace is certain by Christmas.

Socks For Peterborough Soldiers at Barriefield

A special meeting of the 57th Chapter, I.O.D.E., was held at the armouries on Thursday afternoon, the Vice Regent, Mrs. Neill, in the chair.

The treasurer reported a balance of some $125.00 on hand, including a donation of $25.00 from the Cheese Board, for which a hearty vote of thanks was passed.

The Knitting Committee reported 151 pairs of socks on hand. It was decided to send ten pairs to the Peterborough men of the 59th Battalion at Barriefield and 51 pairs for the battery men who are about to leave here. $8.40 has been spent on wool since July.

Letters were read from Gunner B. Sloan in France and from Major Grey at Shorncliffe, thanking the chapter for socks and chocolate received, and much appreciated.

The Visiting Committee reported 15 visits paid since last meeting of the Chapter.

Mrs. Mills announced that one of the members (with her husband) had given a machine gun to the government.

Mr. K. G. Leslie, one time captain of the 57th regiment, has presented the Chapter with a handsome water colour painting to be disposed of for the benefit of the funds. This was gratefully received.

The meeting adjourned until Thursday, Sept. 23rd.

DON'T MISS THE EXAMINER'S NEW SERIAL STORY

The Examiner's new serial story will commence on Tuesday next, and promises to prove one of the most entrancing and meritorious stories ever offered in serial form. "A Fool and His Money" is the title, and George Barr McCutcheon is the author. The name of the latter should be guarantee enough to cause Examiner readers to look forward eagerly to the first instalment of this splendid yarn. If you have enjoyed the other Examiner stories don't miss this one. Watch for Tuesday's Examiner.

GRODNO IS EVACUATED

Two Forts Were Destroyed by Heavy German Guns and the Position Was No Longer Tenable by the Russians

THE EASTERN SITUATION

Special Cable to The Examiner.

LONDON, Sept 2 — Except in the region of Riga, where the Russians are presenting a solid front to Field Marshal von Hindenburg, the Austro-German offensive is again making headway, and, as they have been doing for four months, the Russian troops have resumed their withdrawal movement.

The evacuation of the fortress of Grodno is officially announced in Petrograd. The city was abandoned after two of the forts were destroyed by heavy guns and stormed by German infantry. The Grodno position was no longer tenable after the Germans had crossed the Grodno-Vilna railway, which they did at two points, and had penetrated the forest of Bielovieza, to the south-east of the town.

Vilna, doubtless, will be the next objective of the Austro-Germans on this front.

In the south-east Vienna also reports a series of successes, which have practically driven the Russians out of Galicia, they now hold only a very narrow strip between the Sereth River and Bessarabia. Across the border in the latter province, the Austrians state, the Russians set fire to a number of villages, which might indicate a further retreat. Thus the hopes raised in the allied countries by recent successes that Russia at least was making a stand appear to have dissipated.

Everywhere the Austro-Germans claim to be advancing, but they have not captured of late any great number of men or guns. The Russian guns have been kept well behind the infantry, and are quickly moved back when the rear-guards are unable longer to hold off the invaders. There is some talk of a Teuton advance on Kiev, but the distance to that city is considerable, and the country over which it would have to be made is difficult for the movement of troops.

New Stock of Fall Goods

H. LeBrun and Company Purchased Large Stock of Woollens Before the Unexpected Rise

H. LeBrun and Company, 390 George Street, have just taken stock and have a very extensive and well-selected stock of tall and winter clothing. The stock represents the best assortment, the newest styles and the greatest values. Although the price of woollens has gone up considerably since the outbreak of the war, the company has not taken this advantage to increase the price. In fact they have sought to make a reduction. In connection with this it should be remembered that early buying saves you from twenty to twenty-five per cent. Also the advantages of making early selections are obvious. You will get the very pick of the season's smartest garments. The Company is specializing in the newest of everything for men and boys to wear. Special attention is given to the working man who gives his clothes the hardest wear. A big stock of woollens bought before the unexpected rise should prove especially attractive to prospective purchasers.

O.C. OF 80TH IS SELECTED

Lt.-Col. W. G. Ketcheson, Commanding Officer of the 49th Hastings Regiment is to Command the New Battalion

TO-DAY'S MILITARY NEWS

BELLEVILLE, Sept 2 Col W. G. Ketcheson, commanding officer of the 49th Regiment of Hastings County who has been actively engaged in enlisting recruits for overseas service this morning received a message from Col. Hemming, D.O.C. of Kingston, to proceed at once to that city, to assist in the organization of the 80th Battalion. The Colonel was also informed that he would be required to be at Kingston permanently after Monday next to look after the mobilization of the 59th Battalion and to take command of the same.

KINGSTON Sept 2 The artillery batteries have all been authorized to recruit 50 men over the establishment which is 142 for each battery. This will mean that the depot will require 150 men over the total establishment of 426. Recruiting will continue until these men are secured. It will even take more than this to furnish the required number for the three batteries as there will be many changes owing to the strict requirements in the medical examination, and it is safe to say that fully 200 men will be required in these batteries over the establishment before there will be sufficient to stop recruiting.

Local Boys Selected

Major Sears selected a number of men on the old battery lines today afternoon. The following sergeants have been selected from the R.S.A.—head now at present at Tete du Pont Barracks—Sergeants Sampson, Cavanagh, Anderson, Gimblett, Knapman. A Sergt. Major has also been selected from among the non-coms. of the R.S.A. and his name will be published tomorrow. Sergts. Cavanagh, Anderson and Knapman are Peterborough boys.

Peterborough Non-Coms.

That the Peterborough boys in the 33rd Battery at camp well is shown by the following list of non-coms selected by Major Sears yesterday from the ranks of the Battery. Most of these non-coms are Peterborough boys. Right section, Corp. W. T. Hawkins, Corp. C. A. Thompson, Bomb. A. G. Hazelton, Bomb. A. Bishop, Bomb. Jones, Bomb. F. G. Graham. Left section, Corp. E. J. O'Connor, Corp. J. Hawkins, Bombs. R. Hazelton, T. Simmons, J. O'Dette, G. A. Gee, F. Bedford, Farrier-Sergt. J. R. Hannah (quartermaster-sergt.).

The Kingston Standard says: Lieut. Hayden of the 59th Battalion, Peterborough, has received instructions to proceed to Peterborough and bring back with him twenty four recruits. He has commissioned Major Sears a captain and in view of the fact that much recruiting has been done in Peterborough and that the Lieutenant was not always over successful in getting the best men, the appointment is looked upon as a well deserved one.

Fifteen battalions have already been accepted for the 3rd Battalion Band and a dozen waiting parade there this morning with the result that Bandmaster Hughes was enabled to pick the first picked men of the new organization. Two Lakefield bandsmen passed last night. There is still a chance for good bandsmen, especially cornet players, who are asked to apply at once. Among the new players added since yesterday's list were W. Leader, formerly of the Temple Band, and Walter Dwyer and R. Staples of the 57th Band.

Pte. Wm. Theobald and Percy Smith of the 59th Battalion returned from Lakefield last night after a

A BIG MEETING TO-NIGHT AT KEENE

To-night is the night of the big patriotic meeting at Keene arranged by the people of Otonabee, and in which the local Branch of the Speakers' Patriotic League will take part. It is expected that the entire country side will be represented and a rousing meeting is expected. The band of the 57th Regiment is to provide music for the affair, and will be taken to Keene in motor cars. The members of the band are requested to meet at the armouries not later than 7.15 to-night.

Brig. Rawlings Saying Farewell

Brigadier Rawlings, D.O.C. of the Salvation Army in Eastern Ontario is farewelling in Peterboro this week-end. He will arrive from Lindsay accompanied by Major Walters, and will be at the Temple in all services on Sunday.

Today reports were received in Lakefield that another of the Lakefield boys had already gone to the front and a number more have recently enlisted in the 57th Battalion. The recruiting sergeants were successful in getting seven recruits, three of whom have already been examined and passed. One of them, Pte. Ramsay, who was a sergeant in the 45th Regt. was in charge of the recruits class this morning.

Two more from the surrounding country were examined this morning and both will submit to minor operations in order to be [illegible] service.

Federal Member is Consulting With Military Authorities To-day—Enlistment Has Been Good But Still Greater Response to the Call is Urged.

WHAT WAS PROMISED

Mr. J. H. Burnham, M.P., has gone to Kingston to-day. It is understood that he has gone in connection with the housing of the 80th Battalion here for the winter. It will be remembered that a few weeks ago arrangements were made with Ottawa by which Peterborough was to have 500 men (two companies of 250 each) if they could be housed here. It was agreed that 1,000 or 1,200 could be raised here. Peterborough was to have the benefit of them all for the winter, or until they were drafted as they would be in single companies of 250 men each for use overseas. Since that date recruiting in the County and City, though promising, has hardly justified local expectations. Naturally the Militia Department at Ottawa will not care to leave itself open to being censured for its lack of organization and organizing power here or anywhere else. The Department and its district officers have kept their agreement duly set out by them in black and white.

Col. Ogilvie, the deputy adjutant general, in his orders published last night, said that two companies (500 men) are allotted to Peterborough and he can only be understood unofficially that the whole battalion of 1,000 or 1,200 men will be quartered here for the winter.

Mr. Burnham thinks that the various centres for the district officers should be [illegible] if they were a little suspicious of Peterborough's ability to care for [illegible] progress. The Government on that ticket like a [illegible] he has to explain to remove the new committee to Barriefield for [illegible] are [illegible] whereas preliminary training in Peterborough [illegible] the original [illegible] Mr. Burnham is afraid that everything cannot be moved as rapidly as was thought probable, [illegible] the two months and the [illegible] to [illegible] to all [illegible] the district officers of Peterborough [illegible] not [illegible] make good. FRIDAY, SEPT. 3, 1915

JAM MEANS NOW.

Every school boy knows that jam means now; that it is the Latin word for now. And now is the time for Peterborough housewives to adopt it in their lexicon of activity in preparation for the Red Cross Jam Shower, Sept. 20th-25th. The decks are cleared for action; the committee publishes to-day the days assigned to the several groups of churches. This distribution, segregation, and at the same time concentration of, effort, will conduce to the supply of jam by preventing jam—confusion in the delivery of the jam in an urgent sense; for now is the time for the housewife to "get busy" to the best advantage. There is at present a bountiful supply of fruit, and the conditions for making jam and the allied conserves could not be better. Now let every housewife get down to her knitting—in the way of making jam. All have fair warning, and by beginning early, the product should be plentiful and good. Of course, it won't be anything but good, and nothing can be too good for the poor fellows who are sick and wounded, and longing for some good home, home-made wholesome jam to garnish and give the taste an invalid wants, to dry bread or dry toast. Make your jam a votive offering to our boys. They have been knocked out in dealing and getting hard knocks in fighting our battles. The best we can give them is not good enough for their deserts; but apart from its intrinsic toothsomeness, the jam we send from Peterborough will be all the better for being a free-will offering from home. Housewives lay your plans for meeting the demand for 2,000 jars of jam—if you go a few hundred over no harm will be done; but it will be a woeful pity if there is a jar short of the 2,000.

PERILS OF THE HUNT.

Sad and distressing as is the death of our fellow-citizens and friends in the fierce heat of the battle mood, it is more directly distressing to have our friends or neighbours slain by "accident" in the hunting fields or woods. In the first case, the fields of battle are so far away that our sense of proportion of disaster is subdued or lost in the welter of carnage that every day and every hour yields its toll of death. Then again the death in battle for a great cause, is not mere death; it is sacrifice of the supremest merit, and its victims are heroes. But in the numerous deaths—commonly and incorrectly called "accidents" in hunting and by other misuse of firearms, there is no object gained by the death—it is mere waste of life without any compensating advantage or heroic action set against its gratuitous character.

With the opening of the hunting season the danger of "accident," the death of some good man caused by some "buck fever," novice mistaking him for a deer or other game — of some friend or neighbour—is a directer blow and all the more lamentable because it is, with ordinary care, preventable. Careless handling of weapons is another fruitful cause of accident. Records show that the big toll of deaths from firearms result from weapons, that are "not loaded." A good safe way is not to load the weapon till use for it is immediately imminent. It doesn't take long to slip a shell into the breech; not a millionth time so long as it requires to recover from an accident due to the trigger of a loaded gun catching on some twig or branch and discharging into one's body. The joy of the hunt, the joy of success will be blighted for a life-time if instead of game some member of a hunting party is brought home dead. Nine-tenths of all accidents are due to carelessness, and this applies to gun accidents in the hunting season, as well as on other occasions. At all times hunters should be careful; but especially so this season. There are enough deaths of Canadians, as the price of duty and patriotic facing of danger, without the list being added to by want of care or foolness.

NEW APPEAL TO WOMEN.

The exactions of war time, and the call of duty to every element of our citizenship, has enrolled in the submilitant ranks our women in every conceivable capacity, naturally a part of, and adopted to, the genius of their nature. They have gone into almost everything of a subsidiary character in the fighting way, knitting socks, rolling bandages, etc., and as nurses, have done in the field of action, as heroic work, as strenuous service as any soldier, who has had the Victoria Cross awarded him for exceptional valour in action.

It appears that the field of duty for women is no pent-up Utica. They have done everything almost but don kakhi, and do the goose step. Indeed that is not far distant; the last call is next door to it. An open letter has been issued by the National Service Committee, Miss Adelaide M. Plumtree, secretary. It is reproduced today on this page. It will be noticed that the appeal is to women to make enlisting more easy. Women have sacrificed a good deal of their leisure, of their energies in comparatively smaller matters. Now the call comes to show a larger spirit of sacrifice. We know it is like tearing out heartstrings by the roots to give up a son or husband willingly; and the call to urge them into the ranks, is a supreme test of the sacrifice, that in all the life of home, in her place in society, falls to woman's lot, or is regarded a duty, from her wedding day, to her dying day; from the cradle of her first baby to his manhood.

Yet the call is made. The need for men is urgent; if we can't bring ourselves to the sacrifice of surrendering or of offering, our sons and husbands, to fight to prevent German triumph, we must prepare ourselves to sacrifice everything. We shall in that event, lose our liberties, and we that have sons and husbands will have them dragged into the ranks; all we know of liberty and free conditions will disappear, and in their place we shall have the full application of the curse of German militarism, and the attendant despotism, that doge every step of a German citizen's life under the Prussian system.

The open letter referred to is commended to diligent reading and solemn heed. To gain victory; to secure our liebrties; to prevent the possibility of far more serious sacrifices, we must, make the sacrifice that the time and the hour demand. The Scriptural injunction — "If thy right hand offend thee cut it off" is offered as the price of the soul. A newspaper cartoon, represents the Kaiser, pointing out the waste of Belgium to King Albert with the words: "You have lost everything?" "I have not lost my soul," the sublime reply of the heroic king, showed that he and his people had not sacrificed in vain. The soul of Canada, the soul of our society, the soul of all we prize and that makes life worth while, is at stake in this war. If we win we keep our national soul. If Germany wins we lose our soul and all of good and happiness that it represents.

"FAIR PLAY" DEMANDS FAIR PLAY

To the Editor of the Examiner.

Dear Sir, At a meeting of the Daughters of the Empire the two following cases were reported. A woman with three sons at the front, whose husband was out of work and who spent all but fifty cents on his fare to the West on a harvest train, applied to the Patriotic Fund for assistance and was turned down.

Another woman, whose husband was killed in action, applied to the officer in charge of the local fund, and this is what she got. "Have you given up your house?" "No." "Then give it up, cheat the landlord out of three months' rent and by that time your pension will be here, and you can get married again." Is this the way to get recruits? Is any self-respecting man going to leave his wife, mother, or sister exposed to this? This fund is for those who are left and they should get it, whether in need or not.

Yours truly,
FAIR PLAY.

Without vouching for the truth of the above written by a responsible citizen, if it is correct as to facts and statements there should be amendment. If the government regulations regarding the apportionment of the Patriotic Fund make such things as stated possible, they should be amended. Red tape should not be permitted to strangle the patriotic impulses of citizens who have created the fund, defeat its objects and subject legitimate beneficiaries to hardship and rebuff. Those who compiled the regulations governing the distribution of the Patriotic Fund, acted for the best, these regulations would logically be subject to the test of application, if they prove defective they should be revised. One obstacle to recruiting would be the creation of the feeling that those who had made sacrifices in giving their breadwinners to the cause, had to beg for what is an undoubted right. If the conditions mentioned in the letter of "Fair Play" are correct, or if their correctness is possible, no time should be lost in rectifying what is defective.

CANADIAN WOMEN SHOW HOW THEY CAN PROMOTE RECRUITING ACTIVITY

The following is an open letter to the women of Canada issued by the National Committee of Women for patriotic service. This committee which was organized last autumn, has as its officers, and executive, the presidents of every nationally organized club, society or association of women in Canada. Thus a letter emanating from such a source means that it voices the opinion and attitude of Canada's most representative women.

As such they have felt that a letter be-speaking the Canadian women's responsibility in sending our men to the front should be brought before every woman in the Dominion. If any woman has not regarded the responsibility of patriotism as resting upon her individual shoulders, this letter should make her realize it. It is in no way a rebuke or a reproach. It expresses in concrete form the thoughts we have all had, but have not crystalized by putting them on paper.

Every woman should read it carefully and thoughtfully—not merely glance over it, for it speaks for the best that is in us, and must appeal to every really loyal Canadian woman.

The following is the letter:

An Open Letter.

A year ago the thunderbolt of war fell upon us out of a clear sky! After the first moment of surprise and confusion had passed, we asked "How can we help?"

During the year that has passed, that question has found many answers. The trained nurse quickly proved her value. Other women were called upon to organize and direct Red Cross and St. John Ambulance work or Patriotic Societies, while all gave time or money or personal service in preparing supplies.

To comparatively few came the need for the supreme sacrifice—the sending forth of husband, son or brother to fight. The first appeal for volunteers was limited and did not appear very urgent. All honour to those who heard and obeyed the earliest call of Empire and whose women sent them forth with pride to fight in the front rank of the Canadian forces.

To-day the situation has changed. We have learnt, after a year of war, that our task is harder, our danger more real, than we thought a year ago. We have "given" gladly; now we are called to "give-up," and service must fulfil itself in sacrifice. Most urgent of all to-day is the call to give up ungrudgingly our husbands, sons and brothers. We are called to create in our homes such an atmosphere of self-devotion that our men and boys may feel their resolution to offer themselves in their country's service is simply what we expect of them.

This does not mean that women should be constantly urging their men to enlist, for it is doubtful if the patriotic persistence of a wife or mother would produce anything but a reluctant and resentful recruit. The men of Canada have not shown themselves less patriotic than their women; but it is for us, the women of Canada, to ask ourselves whether our self-sacrifice is falling short of the supreme test.

Are we making it hard or easy for our men to obey their country's call to service?

Why is the call so urgent now?

The answer is simple; it is because our existence as an Empire is at stake.

We went into the war to keep our solemn pledges to our Allies; and this reason still holds good.

But there are now other reasons which did not exist a year ago. Belgium, with her ravaged land and exiled people, cries aloud for justice. What do Canadian women say to the appeals of her outraged women and mutilated children? They have suffered for us; what are we willing to suffer for them?

The women of France and Russia and the United Kingdom have long heard the appeal to give up their men, and have responded nobly. What will Canadian women do?

Beyond the keeping of our pledged word, the woes of Belgium, and the examples of our Allies, there comes to us to-day the knowledge that we are called on to fight our own battle; not to send help to Belgium or France, or even England, but to fight for our own national existence.

We are told by the men who know that we cannot win in this war with out more men.

If we hold back our men we are courting defeat; and defeat means not a vague misfortune to the Empire at large, but the very practical result of a Canada governed by Germans.

Do we want to know what that would mean? Then let us look at Belgium, and learn how the yoke of the conqueror galls the neck of a freedom-loving people. Defeat would mean for us a period of bitterest shame and discontent, and then—another war. Can we risk it? We are risking it if we do not make the path of service easy for our men.

But the most compelling call for sacrifice rings out from the graves of those who on the fields of Flanders, at Langemarck and Ypres, and Festubert, have blazed the trail to glory with their life blood.

Can't we make their self-surrender of no avail by holding back the men who would take up and complete their splendid task?

There is a saying which is losing; it is worth "saving" our men from death if we lose their respect? There is a loss which is gain; even though we learn to fac "Desperate tides of the whole great world's anguish, forced through the channels of a single heart."

We are called to scale the gleaming peaks of self-sacrifice, in the company of our brave sisters of the Allied nations.

What will the women of Canada do?

Stock Markets

The Board of Governors of the New York Stock Exchange denied the petition of the members to close the Exchange on the Saturday before Labour Day.

A committee of Stock Exchange houses at a meeting held in the offices of Messrs. Pouch & Co., considered an arrangement for clearing submarine boat stock. The committee wishes it to be understood, however, that the New York Exchange Clearing House has no official connection with this clearance.

An extra dividend of two per cent. was declared by the Guaranty Trust Company in addition to the regular quarterly dividend of six per cent. The deposits of the company are now more than $309,000,000, as compared with but $120,000,000 in July, 1910.

G. T. Clarkson has been appointed receiver for the Mexican Light and Power Company, the receivership being brought about through the chaotic conditions in Mexico.

Two shares of Winchester Repeating Arms stock were sold at auction for $2,500 a share.

The National Bank circulation for the month decreased $10,814,568.

Aetna Explosives Company has sold $1,000,000 common stock to a syndicate of bankers. There is $7,000,000 authorized common stock, of which $4,800,000 was outstanding prior to this sale.

A Produce Exchange membership was sold for $700, an advance of about $75 over the last previous sale.

Good Furniture Never So Cheap As It Is Now

By Buying You Benefit Yourself and Help Prosperity Along

Prosperity comes to the whole country when the whole country is at work. The whole country is at work when money is kept in motion. Money must be kept moving in the complete circle from buyer to seller, from seller to manufacturer, from manufacturer to the individual worker, who in turn becomes the buyer again—or prosperity will halt on the way. Any stoppage in this circle, any clogging of merchandise or of money, works a hardship on practically all the people of the country.

There is plenty of money to-day. There is plenty of natural wealth in the good crops. There is plenty of merchandise. The one thing needed is that a start should be made to buy the things we need, especially things for the homes which we have let run down.

Good Furniture Was Never So Cheap as it is To-day.

This is a result of a cut in furniture manufacturing costs. There is no need to gloss up over the truth. Many people have stopped buying. They have let their homes run down. The furniture manufacturing business has not been good. Manufacturers are willing to sell at extremely low prices. They must sell at low prices to keep their factories going and their organizations together.

It is an advantageous time for the public to buy furniture, and in buying now they will have the additional satisfaction in knowing that they are helping a great industry to recover itself—that they are giving work to tens of thousands of people—that they are putting money into circulation, which will bring about better times over the country, and that in doing all this they are directly and indirectly aiding themselves.

For Acid Stomachs Use Magnesia

The almost universal use of magnesia by physicians and specialists in the treatment of stomach troubles is due to the fact that it stops sour fermentation and neutralizes the acid, the direct cause of nearly all stomach troubles. Of the many forms of magnesia such as oxide, carbonate, citrate, sulphates, etc., the most suitable and efficient and the one prescribed by leading specialists is bisurated magnesia, a tasteless pill which in a little warm water quickly after eating will instantly neutralize the acid, stop fermentation and thus ensure painless normal digestion. Care should be taken to get bisurated magnesia, as its action is infinitely more effective. It is also, by the way, usually stocked by druggists in convenient compressed tablets as well as in the ordinary powder form. Stomach sufferers and dyspeptics who follow this plan and avoid the use of pepsin, charcoal, soda mints, drugs and medicines are invariably astonished to find that the stomach, relieved of the irritating acid and gas, soon regains its normal tone, and can do its work alone without the doubtful aid of artificial digestants.

ARMY LABORATORIES FIGHT GAS PERIL

Examiner Special:

PARIS, Aug. 31.—A new service has been installed in the French armies, that of travelling laboratories. The new weapons with which the enemy is fighting, asphyxiating gases and poisons in other forms, caused the French authorities to make preparations for combating them in the most effective way.

Much secrecy was observed about the arrangement under which the already numerous army laboratories have been distributed among the armies. In only more than going to and from the front.

Now that the service is complete, the newest is allowed to be published. Two hundred and seven laboratories at present are assisting the French armies.

It has been found that the chief danger attached to the discovery of poisonous gases and the presence of them in water and vegetables in the field and food products generally. On this account there has been placed at the head of each laboratory an expert in chemistry.

Noted Chemists Aid.

Many of France's great scientists have volunteered for the service, and several men of note in the scientific world are engaged in the work.

With them are expert pharmacists who have received special courses of instruction in the work of the laboratories. These men will take the place of the professors, who are now in the field only long enough to get a new set of workers into the city.

Mr. Justin Godart, Assistant Secretary for War, has charge of the department. He has organized a system of control points at Valdahon and Vadelincourt, where leaders in the various branches of chemistry and medicine will give lectures for the benefit of the pharmacists who are to take part in the field work.

The latter will have a responsible role to play, and only those have a right to be accepted for the work.

They will be responsible for the quality of the drinking water and of the foods supplied to the troops. They must be ready to provide remedies against poisoning gases, and to [illegible] products, examine the [illegible] and [illegible] to the interests of the hygiene of the armies.

The material for the work of the laboratories is mostly of a special kind, and will be expected to have a [illegible] quantities of [illegible] and [illegible] to the field laboratories will result in the acquisition of a great amount of scientific knowledge which will be a boon to the nation after the war is ended.

GERMAN SIEGE CANNON TERRIFY THE ENEMY

There are no words between the covers of the dictionary which can convey any adequate idea of what one of the great ancillary actions is like. One hears a roar and beat, as if Babylons of brick and stone collapse as though they were built of cards. Whole towns are razed to the ground and all the citizens would be levelled to a cellar. Trees are snapped off like matches. Gaping holes as large as Piccadilly Circus suddenly appear in the road, and in the sky to pass [illegible] gets over a mile of smoke and earth shoot [illegible] into the air.

The fields are strewn with the shocking remains of what had once been men, bodies without a head or arms or legs, legs and arms and heads without bodies. Dead horses, broken wagons, bent and shattered equipment are everywhere. The noise is beyond all description. It is beyond all conception. It is like a cascade of thunder which is heard at once by a million people. There is continuous rolling thunder, which is broken by the hell of sound that occurs at the military position.

The ground heaves and shudders beneath you as you feel. You can't walk straight to breathe. Your head throbs until you think that it is about to burst. You feel as though your ear-drums had been shattered. The very atmosphere palpitates to the tremendous detonation. The howl of the shell as it is passing overhead rises over the boom that the skies are falling. Combined with the fear of annihilation that Gutenburg must have sounded like the popping of firecrackers.

The inevitably awe-inspiring aspect of war is as a modern attribute of it, only eventually becomes accustomed to it, but I have yet to meet the person who could say with perfect truthfulness that he was indifferent to the fire of the German siege guns. Antwerp, Brest-Litovsk and Dunkirk in early May. I say with all [illegible] that I shall never forget the experience of [illegible] P.W. [illegible]

HAVELOCK HEARD AN APPEAL FOR MORE RECRUITS

Mr. R. R. Hall, Col. Miller and Mr. Sexsmith Spoke in Behalf of the New 80th Battalion

MEETING WELL ATTENDED

Havelock was one of the enbeavours . . representatives of the Speakers' Patriotic League last night when Mr. R. R. Hall and Col. Miller were given a cordial reception in their recruiting appeal for the 80th Battalion. The town hall held a large audience, but it was stated the present results would be more substantial but for the fact that many of the young men are engaged in bringing in the harvest in the neighbouring townships and in the Northwest. The village has already sent quite a few men to various branches of the service, but is apparently quite determined to come to the full score in future contributions.

Dr. Kindred, in moving Havelock, occupied the chair and introduced the Peterborough speakers. Both Col. Miller and Mr. Hall gave rousing addresses emphasizing the necessity of every humble in the Empire setting forth its support as generously as possible. The need of recruits was spoken of in the terms of the possible consequences of victory, the savagery of the enemy and his ruthless attempt to cramp Europe with his militarism was also pointed out. A strong plea was made to help fill up the new 80th Battalion. Mr. T. A. Sexsmith, M.P., closed the meeting with a fine address on the military situation and the present need of men.

A Fine Tribute to A Peterborough Boy

In the report taken from the Halifax Daily Echo of a war recruiting meeting the following reference to Lieut. A. J. Perks, 66th Regiment, Princess Louise Fusiliers, Lieut. Perks will be better known to Peterborough people as Arthur or "Art" Perks, second son of Mr. Perks, Oakhurst Gilmour street. He was with the Bank of Montreal here and was transferred to the Halifax branch where he held the position of Accountant when he enlisted for overseas service and was commissioned a lieutenant. He was placed in charge of the Parade Recruiting Station, Halifax, and the following reference to the value of his services in that capacity will be read with interest by his many friends in Peterborough.

Every day justifies the existence of the Parade Recruiting Station. The Committee, after establishing the station were most fortunate in securing Lieut. Perks, of the 66th Battalion, as recruiting officer. Lieut. Perks is not a speaker, but he can perhaps do more than any other to count his results because of the human touch he uses to his men. A recruiting officer coming in the ordinary association with at times may forget that to many the courageous smile and the seeming indifference these men affect are at the most critical point of their lives. Lt. Perks remembers that as therefore his success as a recruiting officer. In the words of a recent recruit, as he was walking away from the tent "that officer is awfully decent."

American Woman Praises War Detention Camps in Siberia

That German and Austrian prisoners of war in the detention camps of Siberia are well fed and housed in comfortable quarters as the information contained in a letter written by Mrs. Holmes Perry, wife of Mr. Perry, the U. S. special diplomatic agent to Russia, to Mrs. L. R. Gates, Massachusetts Barnstable, Mass. Wednesday, bears out. Barnstable is the home of all prisoners of war that the Russians have captured by the Russians and all are treated alike. Mrs. Perry's letter was written at Vladivostok on July 28, after a six weeks' inspection trip of the Siberian detention camps. It says:

"You will not expect to receive a letter from Siberia, but here goes. We have been travelling here for six weeks and have seen all the German and Austrian prisoners of war camps where [illegible] Austrian and German prisoners are kept. They are not suffering and they were well treated from the start. [illegible] quarters. We expected to go back on the express to-morrow night, but a telegram comes from Petrograd that we must stop at Krasnoark, where there is typhus fever, and also at Irkutsk to see about a German vice consul who seems to have forgotten to get out.

"This means we must travel back by slow trains as the express goes only once a week.

"I have missed my letters, papers and magazines more than anything. The Russian papers do not [illegible] are not very satisfactory.

"We are all as busy as possible here in Petrograd with a lazaret and a sewing club, where we make clothes not only for the soldiers but for their families. I was also dread war would break but I see no present. I hope we may go [illegible] Vienna as I [illegible] could support a Petrograd. Mrs. Baroness Hunnius [illegible] at the front."

No Drop in Bread Prices Here Because They Were Not Raised

Peterboro' Bakers Did Not Adopt the Seven-Cent Loaf Months Ago, Hence Have No Reduction to Make Now.

The recent declines in the price of flour throughout the province have been followed by a general drop in the price of bread from 7 to 6 cents a loaf. But Peterborough bakers did not raise their price when flour was advanced, hence there is no reason now for any decrease in their prices. A prominent baker stated to-day Peterborough was one of the very few towns in Ontario that did not take advantage of the upward movement months ago to secure a seven-cent price. In one day over twenty towns in Western Ontario reported the advance in bread and the movement became general. Now, since flour dropped $1.75 a barrel they have been returning to the six cent loaf. The conditions indicated by the actions of the local bakers give reason for a confidence when the reports from the many other municipalities are considered. It was intimated to the Examiner that if the price of flour warrants by further declines a lower priced bread, Peterborough bakers will reduce the pound and one-half loaf to five cents. Up to the present, however, it is felt that they have given the public every consideration and should be trusted to do so under future conditions.

Mr. McKone Appreciated

Riverdale Pupils Present Him With an Address

The following address of appreciation was given to Mr. J. A. McKone, who is well known to many Peterborough friends:

Dear Mr. McKone,—We the students of the Riverdale Branch of Central Business College on learning that you are soon to depart from us to take up your abode in Peterborough take this opportunity of expressing to you our appreciation of the many kindnesses you have shown while our teacher.

By your kindly manner you have been endeared to all of us, always ready to help us at every opportunity and having a pleasant greeting for all whenever or wherever we met.

We wish you every success in your work in Peterborough, and as a token of our esteem, present you with this club bag, and as often as you carry it may it convey to your mind our good will toward you.

We regret to have to say farewell, but we know that best of friends must part at some time and we shall look forward to the pleasure of seeing you occasionally in the future.

Signed on behalf of students of Riverdale Branch of Central Business College, this 31st day of August, 1915.

Maragret M. Offer.
Wm. J. Leslie.
Clifford Simons.

Mr. McKone has returned to Peterborough and taken over the business of the Peterborough Business College, formerly carried on by Messrs. Torrance and Logan. Mr. McKone's experience as manager of one of Toronto's best Business Colleges, assures pupils of a thorough and practical business preparation. Applications personally or by mail to Mr. McKone will receive his personal attention.

Local Labour Is Registered

There are few men in local municipal circles who take their position more seriously than Ald. G. W. Green. One exception that might be mentioned is City Clerk Armstrong. It is nearly three years since Ald. Green broke into municipal politics and for that length of time has probably given more service to the city than to his own business. Take this morning for example. The West Ward representative was at the city hall almost as soon as the employees, who are expected to be on hand at nine o'clock. From the time of his arrival until twelve o'clock Ald. Green was submerged in a bale of accounts that had to be certified to and properly signed. During the morning he found time to hold a conference with City Engineer Parsons relative to some local work that is going on and also to give a member of the press an involuntary interview in which the labour situation and the question of oiling the streets was discussed. Ald. Green is apparently satisfied at the way in which the last named scheme has been handled. Streets that were watered last year have been treated with a generous application of road oil. This has had the effect of minimizing the dust evil and has contributed much to the well being of the ratepayers.

The Labour Situation.

As regards the labour situation, Ald. Green is of the opinion that the present apparent scarcity of men will not prevail for any length of time. Quite a number of men have registered at the City Engineer's office within the past few days and have been placed on various public works. Men who desire work are obliged to register proof of their citizenship, their social relations, that is to say whether married or single, and the number of children dependent upon them for support. This is to prevent an influx of outside labour.

Ald. Green has had a number of interviews with the paving contractors and has endeavoured to secure for the men a fair standard of wages. As matters stand the majority of men employed on public work earn two dollars a day with a few exceptions, where as low as one dollar and seventy-five cents is paid, the contention being that the work performed by the lower priced men is not worth any more.

BALL GAME CALLED OFF

The ball game which was to have been played to-morrow between the Olympias of Lindsay and the East City team has been called off. Lindsay telegraphed this morning that they could not get a team together.

TRIGGER

The Peterborough Gun Club held their regular weekly shoot on Friday last, and being a fine evening, some good scores were made, as follows:

Scores.	Shot At.	Broke.
W. Darton	50	48
S. Coon	50	44
C. Mills	50	44
H. Cook	50	42
E. Romeril	50	31
C. Graham	50	35
H. Routley	25	19
Dr. Frank	25	17
C. James	25	16
J. Brightman	25	14
W. Evans	25	11

This was the final shoot for the summer prizes and those finishing in the competition at 200 birds were:

1st, S. Coon, 183, Silver Cup, presented by Mr. O. E. McGaw, Toronto.
2nd, C. Mills, 162, Silver Cup, presented by M. O. E. McGow.
3rd, J. Louchs, 158, leather gun case.
4th, Dr. Frank, 155, smoking sett.

$18 NO MORE NO LESS

To-morrow We Offer You The Greatest $18 Worth in Canada

MEN;—you cannot now purchase a suit or overcoat made to your order for less than $18 that will give you the WEARING SERVICE you want, no matter where you try,—but from us to-morrow you can take your unrestricted choice of a grand new display of BRITISH WOOLENS----fall and winter fabrics, brought direct from our big mills to you.

With every order you get an unflinching guarantee of QUALITY, WORKMANSHIP, FIT, and STYLE—we will refund your money without question if your order is not exactly as represented. $18 covers your entire purchase, and there are no added charges for 'extras'.

Our slight increase in price will bring with it a big difference in our product, and we want you to get in on the ground floor the first day, before the best of the fall materials have been snapped up. Doors open sharp at 8 o'clock ; $18 is the price to all for the biggest tailoring value that ever came within your reach, as a comparison with the offerings of any other tailors will prove.

SCOTLAND WOOLEN MILLS CO., Limited
NO MORE $18 NO LESS
Gives You Your Choice of the Biggest Display of British Woollens We Have Ever Offered MADE TO ORDER in Every Instance

TO-MORROW, more orders will be booked at our stores than would have been the case under the old conditions. I have proof of that before me in the form of many letters commenting on our preliminary announcement of the raise in price. There are letters from old customers stating they prefer to pay the difference to get the same value. There are letters from "woollen men" congratulating us on being the first to make the inevitable change. There are letters from out of town men, who never yet patronized the Scotland Woollen Mills Company, asking for samples of the new $18 fabrics, and inquiries at the store from men who have always formerly "passed us up" as too cheap.

A new era has dawned in the tailoring trade of Canada, and although the public will have to pay more for their clothes in the future, they will find it cheapest in the long run to pay enough to purchase QUALITY.

Gideon Miller President
SCOTLAND WOOLEN MILLS COMPANY, Limited

Worsteds, Serges, Cheviots, Vicunas; good weights in fade-proof blacks, blues, and dark greys; overcoatings of rich tweeds in medium fall or extra heavy winter weights---all newly imported direct from our British Mills; $18 to your order.

IN THE WORLD OF SPORT

Peterborq's Athletes Have Responded Well to Call of Their King and Country

Soccer, Baseball, Hockey and Rugby Stars Are Serving in Every Branch of the Service With a Representative Even in the Flying Corps.

SOME HAVE GIVEN LIVES

Peterborough's athletes have responded well to the call of king and country and Peterborough soccer, baseball, hockey and rugby players are in every branch of the service and scattered throughout all the contingents. Some well known players have made the supreme sacrifice and have been killed in action.

Most of the star soccer players have enlisted, in fact so well have the Association men responded, that it is impossible to give a list of them. The local soccer clubs were so badly hit that they have all disbanded. Some of the well known players were Bobby Irwin and Art Pullen with the 21st Battalion, Geo. Harris with the 8th Mounted Rifles, Sam McKinlay with the 2nd Battalion (missing since St. Julien), Walter Packwood with the 9th Battalion at Shorncliffe, Jimmy Bills with the 2nd Battalion, Padgett and Mason with the 8th C.M.R., and many others equally well known, are wearing the khaki.

Among the well known local hockey players who are on active service are Maurice Park and Cyril Giroux, both of whom have captained the Peterborough intermediates. The former is a captain with the 59th Battalion at Barriefield, while the latter is with the machine gun section of the 39th battalion. Of last year's junior players, Harold Morrow is in France with the Canadian Remounts and Harold Knapman with the artillery at Barriefield, as is Ormie Cavanah, another former Peterborough Junior O. H. A. player. Barney Quinn, who played with the Y.M.C.A. City League team is at the front with the 2nd Battalion. Alf Hagerman and Alex. Butcher of last year's Church League champions, St. Luke's, are with the 33rd Battery, and Scotty Rogers of the Boston Exploits, is with the 21st Battalion. Walter Flowers, the former junior and intermediate goal keeper, is in England with one of the drafts from the Mounted Rifles. Harold Matthews, another ex-Peterborough hockey player, is a lieutenant with the 1st Artillery brigade at the front, and Stan Wade still another former local junior, is with the 39th Battalion. Fred Denison, formerly of the Peterborough juniors and intermediates, is with the 35th Battalion. Harold Wallis, formerly of the Chieftains Club is now a lieutenant in the 16th Battalion leaving Canada as a private. Rome ie Stevenson of the Y.M.C.A. City League team is in training at Barriefield. Dickie Boone of the Tool Room team, was killed in action with the 4th Battery.

Baseball has also contributed its quota. Many of those mentioned in the hockey list are also well known baseball players, and in addition there are many others, including "Merry" Huycke of the Thistles, who is a lieutenant with the 33rd Battery, Gordon Matthews of the Thistles, in training with the mechanical transport section of the C.A.S.C., Lieut. Harold Hill of the same club, with the 38th Battalion in Bermuda, and Alan Wade, pitcher of the Empires, with the 39th Battalion in England. Alf Taylor, catcher of the same club, is with the 33rd Battery, as is Jack O'Dette, infielder of the Classics. Shortstop Stan Anderson, of the Classics, is with the 80th Battalion.

Peterborough boys who have starred in rugby are also with the colours in good numbers. Among the best known is Capt. A. W. McPherson, who captained both the Peterborough and Varsity teams. He is with the Canadian Army Service Corps. "Pete" Campbell, another Varsity captain, is a machine gun officer of the 48th Highlanders at the front, and Wilfred Stratton, quarter-back of the Varsity team, is a lieutenant with the 59th Battalion. Lieut. Hill may also be mentioned in the rugby list as he was one of the stars of the Queen's team. Norman Geale, formerly of the Collegiate team, is a lieutenant in the Royal Naval Air Service. Many former Peterborough rugby stars have enlisted, including Bill Crowley with the Canadian Engineers, Geo. Revell of the same corps, killed in action, and Art Noble of the 52nd Battalion, invalided home from the front. Harvey Staunton, another former local rugbyist, went to the front with the 48th Highlanders. Ross Laing, formerly of the Collegiates, and afterwards a McGill star, is with the Divisional Engineers, and Harry Rogers, another Peterborough boy who starred at McGill, is a lieutenant with the 4th C.M.R. Heber Rogers, captain of the Collegiate team the season before the war broke out, is a prisoner in Germany, and Billy Gibson and Geo. Minorgan, who played both for the Collegiate and the Peterborough Junior O.R.F.U. team, were killed at St. Julien. Bill O'Brien, formerly of the Peterborough O. R. F. U. juniors, is with the 25th Battery.

This is by no means a complete list but gives an idea of how well Peterborough athletes are doing their bit.

HE'LL COME BACK AGAIN.

McGRAW'S CLUB BIGGEST FLIVVER OF WEIRD SEASON

Bush-League Pitching Has Blasted Hopes of "Little Napoleon"

NEW YORK, Sept. 3.—If the Giants finish anywhere but first place they will probably go down as the biggest failures of the world's series of 1915. The New York club is admittedly the highest salaried one of the National league, and has the most "paper brought" of any, with the possible exception of the Braves. Everything at the start of the season was in their favour, and Gotham fans settled back for a long season of battling between McGraw's clan and the Braves for the pennant. On dope they were the only one who stood a show of getting in the October classic.

The team are turning into the home stretch today, with the world's series but five weeks away, and most of the dopesters and bettors are scrambling their brains trying to decide which to lay their shackles on Brooklyn or Philadelphia.

The Giants haven't had much hard luck, as hard luck goes, a cripple and such. True, they have had bad luck, but McGraw has won pennants in the face of far heavier odds than he has had to face this season. He had a team of veterans last March that had stood up under the fire and gaff of many gruelling pennant races, and they were all going good. There were few signs of cracks. Matheweson had had one of his best seasons, as had Tesreau. The erratic Marquard had finished a fair season, and according to the way Rube has run since he broke into the big show, he should have been due for a whale of a season in 1915. Backing them up were Stroud, Schupp and Schauer, a trio of mighty likely looking youngsters.

There was a hole at third base, a gaping one left by Tillie Shafer's retirement. McGraw went out and rubbed Hans Lobert, who batted .275 with the weak Phils the year before and was listed as one of the fastest men on the bases in the Texas circuit. Lobert has fallen down woefully with McGraw's team. He is batting around .240 and his name isn't even among the first ten base stealers. His fielding, too, has slumped.

McGraw freely blames his pitchers and it seems he is justified. Marquard, the erratic, has not won half his games. Matty, the steady, hasn't won half his games. Tesreau has barely managed to split fifty-fifty, and the three youngsters have proved so unsteady that McGraw has used them only as relief hurlers.

McGraw, however, has awakened to the fact that it's time to begin house cleaning, and has started by cutting the supports under Fred Snodgrass, long one of his favorites.

McGraw also has a row to pick with the umpires. John never was original.

"The National league has seen some of the rottenest umpiring in its history this season," he said recently. "There is but one competent umpire in the league. Bill Klem. With a fair break in the umpiring the Giants might have finished better."

George Burns is another player who has not delivered. Last year Burns stole 62 bases and batted over .300. This year he is hitting the ball around .250 and has stolen less than 20 bases.

Although Mac had a good pitching staff at the start of the season, he wasn't satisfied.

"If I had just one more good pitcher, I'd be willing to retire," he opined.

So he went out and grabbed Poll Perritt, who had been one of the best pitchers in the league the year before and Poll hasn't won half his games.

WELL KNOWN STARS ARE STILL HEARING THE CALL

TORONTO, Sept. 2.—Jack Gooch of the Victoria Hockey Club, senior O.H.A. champions, has decided to take a sergeant's course in the artillery at the Royal Military College. Gooch started with the Toronto Canoe Club juniors, and ever since he won his championship has been one of Toronto's most popular players.

Jack McCamus, the game little wing player of St. Michael's Hockey Club, is already wearing the King's uniform, and George Bickle, the former Parkdale and Argonaut halfback, has joined the Cycle Corps, and goes to Niagara to-day.

Elmer Chagnon, a Hamilton Tiger football player; Tommy Thomson, a famous trainer of long-distance runners, and "Dune" Campbell, the Queen's University football coach, took the oath at Hamilton yesterday.

Arthur Jubb of Whitby, goalkeeper of the O.H.A. intermediate team, who went to England after the outbreak of the war, has enlisted in the British navy. He headed goal at Whitby for two seasons, and was regarded as one of the best in this part of the Province. For a time he was employed in the Dominion Bank in Toronto, and was well known in sporting circles.

In fact, so many of the old guard of athletes are going to the front that it will be necessary to number all football and hockey players this fall and winter and provide the fans with identification cards.

80th BATTALION SUPPER AND CONCERT SCORED A DECIDED SUCCESS

The supper and concert under the auspices of the men of the 80th Battalion in Victoria Hall last night was a splendid success and the new battalion established a reputation as entertainers equal to that gained last winter by the 39th Battalion and the 57th C.M.R. Nearly 400 people sat down to supper at 7.30 o'clock and the long tables artistically decorated, presented a most attractive appearance. The excellent supper was provided by Messrs. Coleman Bros., who catered for the affair in first class style. The waiters were in khaki or were the red band on their sleeves that signified that they were serving their king and country and in charge of Acting Sergeant Oxley, looked after the wants of the guests in good fashion.

The feature of the gathering was the large number of ladies in attendance. It was a happy, sociable crowd and there was an esprit de corps about the whole affair that made the evening a most enjoyable one. Among the visitors present were Hon. Major Davidson, chaplain of the 57th Regiment, who wore his military uniform, Rev. Jas. Rollins of St. Andrew's church, Mayor Butler and Messrs. J. A. Aylmer and T. A. S. Hay of the Speakers' Patriotic League.

Capt. R. P. Watt of the 80th Battalion made a most efficient chairman during the programme that followed. Major R. T. Hounsell, temporarily in command of the 39th also occupied a chair on the platform.

In his introductory address, Capt. Watt outlined the plans for the 80th Battalion and pointed out that to make the organization a success the cooperation of every citizen was required.

The programme opened with a most enjoyable solo by Mr. Ted Bartlett, who sang "The Boys of the Old Brigade" in splendid voice.

Mr. R. J. Bolen in an eloquent speech directed principally to the ladies in the audience urged the assistance of the women of Peterborough to securing recruits for overseas service. He clearly and emphatically justified Britain's entrance into the war and her fight for freedom and reminded his hearers of the atrocities in Belgium, which might be repeated in our own land if enough men did not come forward.

Miss Ruby Quartermaine's rich voice was heard to great advantage in the solo, "There's a Land" that was thoroughly enjoyed by the audience.

Master Percy Luther, whose brother is at the front with the Peterborough detachment in the 4th Battery brought down the house with the recitation "The Call to the Colours." The little fellow wearing a full service uniform gave the number with splendid clearness and force and the last appeal "Come on lads and do your bit" electrified the crowd. In response to an enthusiastic encore he gave another selection with equal effect. The Speakers' Patriotic League should secure this little star for some of the meetings.

Mrs. Ryerson Ritchie, always a favourite was in splendid voice last evening and her solo with a well executed violin obligato by Mr. Whitehouse, was much enjoyed.

Bandsman Wm. Loader of the 80th Battalion Band contributed a very pleasing concertino solo.

Mr. Geo. Chandler's splendid voice was advantageously displayed in the solo, "The Death of Nelson," which he gave with fine effect.

Mr. Frank Whitehouse's violin solo the overture "Caliph of Bagdad," was executed in masterly style and the applause it drew from the audience was well earned.

Miss Doris Rathbone was heard to advantage in a much appreciated solo and Mr. Bob Hendry's Harry Lauder number, convulsed the audience, and he had to respond to an encore. A recitation by little tot, Addie Wright, brought a splendid programme to a close.

The singing concluded with the singing of the National Anthem.

The success of the event is due to the energetic efforts of the general committee, with Sergt. Watson as chairman, Sergt. Calladine as treasurer, and to Pres. T. Smith, Freeman and Melton of the programme committee. The thanks of the men of the 80th is extended to all who assisted in the success of the evening.

CAMPBELLFORD HAS THE LACROSSE FEVER

The Weston lacrosse club plays the first home-and-home game in the O. A. L. A. intermediate semi-finals in Campbellford today, and it is a sure thing that the entire Trent countryside will gather at the fair grounds. "Pete" Hocking of the Maitlands, Toronto, has been training the Campbellford team for the past week, and the practices have had more rainfords than ever attended a game in Peterborough since the "revival" in this city. It is generally expected that the Weston club will win the round, but there is plenty of Trent money reported in sight. After all it is preferable that these smaller towns should win their districts. Had Peterborough won the Mann Cup they wouldn't have raised a ripple of interest among the public at large.

BASEBALL

UNBIASED.

Guelph Herald: Ottawa showed the fans just why they are the top of the league. They played a grand game, and deserved to win.

THORPE NOW A FOOTBALL COACH.

BLOOMINGTON, Ind., Sept. 2.—Jim Thorpe, famous football star on the Carlisle Indian team, has been secured to assist in coaching the Indiana university football squad this year.

Thorpe, who is now playing baseball with the New York Giants, will come to Bloomington at the close of the National League season.

WOULD OTTAWA STAND FOR IT?

According to Hamilton reports a new International League will blossom into being next year. The scheme is to drop Ottawa and form a circuit composed of Hamilton, London, Brantford and Guelph or St. Thomas in the Canadian League, and Bay City, Grand Rapids and one or two other Michigan State League cities. It is argued that by trimming out Ottawa that the travelling expenses would be considerably curtailed and that there would be more interest with the border clubs in line. There is very little probability however of the proposition going through. Ottawa would not stand for being left out in the cold. The Capital City has practically kept the league on its feet for the last few years and it is by long odds the best paying club in the organization.—Toronto News.

FAMOUS GUIDE KILLED IN BATTLE

Sepp Innerkofler, well known to thousands of American tourists as one of the best guides in the Tyrolean Alps, was killed recently in battle on the Italian front.

"Sepp" as he was familiarly known, came of a family of Alpine guides, descended from Michael Innerkofler. In his long years of service he never met with an accident and there was no climb too difficult for him to make.

When the war with Italy started he enlisted and soon distinguished himself by establishing a telephone on one of the highest peaks near the border, from which he observed the Italian troop movements and telephoned the information to the Austrian commander in the valley below. For this he received a gold medal.

In a hot engagement a few weeks ago he received a bullet in the chest from which he died. There was mourning throughout the whole Tyrolean Alps when the news became known that this man of fine character and beloved by all who knew him was dead. The Vossische Zeitung has published a special tribute to his memory.

EMINENT MUSICIAN AT ST. JOHN'S CHURCH

Mr. Paul Steevens, of London, Eng., a noted violinist of high attainments, has been of late with his family staying at Stoney Lake with Peterborough relatives. On strong persuasion Mr. Steevens has most kindly consented to give a short sacred recital at St. John's on Sunday evening next, beginning about 8.20 p.m. This will enable music lovers of Peterborough generally to share in a musical treat of a high order.

Some years ago this eminent musician then living in the United States, gave a similar recital at St. John's which gave widespread pleasure.

ARRESTED FOR DISORDERLY CONDUCT

A couple of women appeared in Police Court this morning, charged with disorderly conduct. They were remanded until Monday. They created quite a commotion when arrested last evening. The accused originally came from Havelock and have resided in Peterborough for several months. They were only in the city a short time when their actions brought them under the observation of the police. For some weeks past they have resided on Simcoe Street.

OBITUARY

JOHN M. GALBRAITH

After an illness during the past three years Mr. John M. Galbraith, aged, was born in Edinburgh, Scotland forty-one years ago, passed away on Thursday evening at his residence, 106 Antrim Street. The deceased was an employee of the Peterborough Examiner in the Job Department when he was forced to retire from work. He leaves a wife and two children. The late Mr. Galbraith was a skilled printer, had many friends in the city and was a prominent member of the local Typographical Union.

The funeral will be held on Saturday at 2 p.m. from the family residence to the Little Lake Cemetery. Rev. J. R. Webb will officiate and the members of the Typographical Union are asked.

ALASKA CITY OF 5,000 WILDERNESS YEAR AGO

WASHINGTON, Sept. 1.—The new railroad construction terminus at Anchorage, Alaska, a wilderness six months ago, has already grown to a city of 5,000 population.

Commissioner Tallman, of the General Land Office, learns from Chief Field Agent Christensen that in addition to a recent sale of 600 lots on Government domain at Anchorage at a total price of $145,000, Saturday 160 more lots were sold. The site is one of the terminal of the new Government railroad from Seward to Fairbanks.

SUING G. T. R. FOR A $60 INJURY TO HORSE

James Crowley of Dorset was the plaintiff in a Division Court action this morning against the G. T. R. for sixty dollars damages to cover injuries to his horse which broke through the railway fence and, it was claims was permanently injured. Mr. Crowley is a farmer near Nassau and many of his neighbours attended the hearing as witnesses or merely as interested auditors. Daniel Mahoney, Levi Campbell, Stewart Brewin, Robt. Campbell, Warren Campbell, and other Dorset men were called by the plaintiff. The purport of their testimony was that the time when they saw it May 29, the day after the occurrence was hanging loosely where three posts had been broken off close to the ground where they had been formerly rotted.

Dr. Johnston stated that the horse had a deep wound on the back of the leg. It was also cut and bruised about the head. The Doctor doubted that the mare would ever be able to work as formerly. As a brood mare it might be worth $100.

James Vicey valued the mare at $165 before she was injured. It was now worth about $50 he said.

Mr. Wellington, G.T.R. section boss man between Nassau and Lakefield, testified that he had examined the fence about the middle of May and considered that it was in good condition. The fence was built ten or eleven years ago. Mr. Daniel O'Connell appeared for Mr. Crowley and Mr. Pratt, the G.T.R. counsel, represented the Company. The statements of counsel were to be heard this afternoon.

THE CAPTAIN WAS JUSTIFIED

Special to The Examiner:

MONTREAL, Sept. 3.—Captain William Bloomfield of the steamer Manoxania was today by Wreck Commissioner Demmetes, declared justified in beaching his steamer on Scarborough Bluffs, near Toronto, on Aug. 3rd, during a hurricane. All the crew were saved as a result, but the vessel was pounded to pieces. Captain Demmetes found no one to blame for the wreck.

THE FATE OF RIGA HANGS IN THE BALANCE

CONSTANTINOPLE ATTACKED BY AIRMEN

ARE BATTLING NOW TO DECIDE FATE OF RIGA

Russians Have Been Thrown Back Across the Durina River and Enemy Under Cover of Heavy Gun-fire Are Attempting to Cross---Slavs Have However Been Reinforced.

PETROGRAD, Sept. 4.—A decisive battle that will settle the fate of Riga has begun. The War Office admitted early to-day that the Russians have been thrown back across the Dwina about thirty miles southwest of Riga, and that the Germans are attempting to cross the river under cover of heavy artillery fire. Guns are being brought up to support the enemy forces and the Slavs on the right bank of the river are receiving artillery reinforcements. It is admitted here that should the Germans throw a large body across the river the evacuation of Riga and the retirement towards Petrograd would be necessary. The bombardment of the Russian bridgehead at Freidrichstadt under direction of the German Gen. Von Besseler has continued without cessation for three days. The Slav artillery is making an effective reply.

LONDON, Sept. 4.—British statesmen to-day reiterate the statement that no peace will be concluded until Belgium and Russia are freed of Germans.

ATHENS, Sept. 4.—It is believed that the Sofia despatch indicating the sinking of a British transport in the Aegean Sea with great loss of life refers to the Royal Edward sunk August 15.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Sept. 4.—Enemy aeroplanes encircled this city to-day dropping bombs and doing some damage.

ATHENS, Sept. 4.—War fever is increasing throughout the Balkans where the crops are now all in. It is stated Serbia has now conceded to Bulgaria's complete demands. The Austrians are expected to invade Roumania immediately. Greece is negotiating.

LONDON, Sept. 4.—The enveloping movement of the Turkish forces by the British is still in progress. Big captures are expected.

PETROGRAD, Sept. 4.—The battle for possession of Riga has reached a critical stage. Gen Ruskey is holding firm.

PARIS, Sept. 4.—It is estimated that the monthly wastage of the German army is three hundred thousand men.

SOLDIERING IS DECLARED CURE FOR SORE EYES

LONDON, Sept. 2—Soldiering is a cure for sore eyes. When Great Britain first started to recruit her enormous armies for Kitchener large numbers of young men were rejected for trifling defects in vision. Later the bars were let down and the wearing of a pair of eye-glasses was not made cause for rejection.

Then it was learned that many defects of the eyes disappeared in a few months. The answer, of course, is that physical training and outdoor life do more to correct the vision than all the spectacles in the opticians' shops.

Young men who previous to enlistment could not cross a road in safety found that in three months they were able to read fine print without the slightest trouble and without the least ill effect to their eyes.

PEOPLE OF OTONABEE START $10,000 CAMPAIGN

Rousing Meeting at Keene Last Night Was the First Gun ---Splendid Speeches and Music Fired the Enthusiasm of the Audience.

The patriotic meeting held in the Keene Skating Rink last night under the auspices of the people of Otonabee was a rousing success. The primary object, that of inaugurating a campaign to raise $10,000 for patriotic purposes was successfully accomplished and at the same time the need of more and more recruits coming forward was brought forcibly before the gathering which was large, enthusiastic and thoroughly representative. The eloquent, dead-in-earnest addresses of the speakers left no doubt in anyone's mind as to the seriousness of the situation, or as to the need of everyone doing his or her part.

The climax came when Reeve Anderson asked the township council to approve of a vote of $2,000 from the council as a start towards the $10,000. The councillors present were unanimous in their support of the suggestion and the ratepayers by a standing vote heartily endorsed the grant.

Band in Attendance.

The combined bands of the 57th Regiment and the 80th Batalion were present and rendered a number of patriotic airs in excellent style. Unfortunately about half the band including Lieut. Gliddon were delayed by accidents to their transport, but prior to their arrival Bandmaster Hughes of the 80th took charge of the advance guard and later on the full bands comprising about 40 musicians were heard to great advantage.

Warden Kindred, who occupied the chair and made a most efficient chairman, briefly stated the object of the meeting, after which he called upon Lt.-Col T. J. Johnston for an address.

Lt.-Col. Johnston.

Lt.-Col Johnston said that he felt that men and more men were needed, but that until he was sure that he was going overseas himself he would not appeal to others to do so. His application was being considered. Speaking of recruiting generally the speaker was of the opinion that conscription would not be such a bad thing—it would make the service more evenly divided, and one family would not have to give three or four sons and another none at all.

Mr. J. A. Sexsmith, M.P.

Mr J. A. Sexsmith, M.P., made an earnest appeal to the young men to come forward. The Empire was in danger, Canada was in danger, and he was sure that if the young men of Canada realized that fact that there would be a rush to the colours. The call was coming more and more to the native born—72 per cent of the First Contingent had been born in the United Kingdom, men who had responded instantly to the appeal of King and Country. Canadians should realize that they belonged to an Empire that was worth living for, and worth dying for, and that that Empire was in peril.

Mr. F. D. Kerr.

Mr F. D. Kerr in a most effective address placed the question squarely before the people of Otonabee. He was not present, he explained, to ask for recruits, but rather to appeal to the larger part of the audience, who were prevented by age, sex or any reason from going to the front. The need of giving money to help the Red Cross work, the Patriotic Fund and other similar enterprises, of backing up the man at the front by loking after him and his dependents, of caring for him if perchance he came back disabled, was presented to the audience by Mr. Kerr in a manner that must have carried conviction to all hearers. It was not a matter of giving a little, people must give until it hurt. Then they would feel better and happier, and could feel that they were doing something for Canada and the Empire. It was not a question of charity, it should be a proud privilege to everyone. He appealed to Otonabee to show the way to the other townships of Peterborough County in this respect.

Lt.-Col. Birdsall.

Lt.-Col. Birdsall in calling upon the young men to enlist asked if it was fair that the brave boys who had gone to the front should be unsupported. He was ashamed to say that his own township of Asphodel had not done its duty. People did not seem to realize that there was a danger of Canada being made a second Belgium, as Germans in the United States were reported to have been informed by their kinsmen in Germany.

Miss Dorothy Allan, of Peterborough, sang "Your King and Country Want You" in splendid voice, and with an expression that made the effect irresistible. She had to respond to an encore.

His Honour Judge Huycke.

His Honour Judge Huycke followed with a sincere appeal to the young men of military age to play up and play the game. A number of young men had gone from Keene and the Township of Otonabee, and they were calling across the sea for their comrades to come and help them. Judge Huycke in earnest, effective tones, explained the justice of Britain's cause and the danger that lay before the British Empire. Great sacrifices had been made, but even greater would have to be made in the months to come. Of the mothers he pleaded that they give up their sons. It was hard and they would suffer but in spite of that they would be more proud of their boys than they ever were before.

Rev. Jas. Rollins.

Rev. Jas. Rollins was most emphatic in his declaration of the righteousness of Britain's cause. He felt that he would be doing the best thing possible for the Presbyterian Church by going to the front as quickly as he could get. He knew that there were many Presbyterians in Keene, and to the young men among them he said that those who were fit to enlist and did not do so were a disgrace to the Presbyterian Church.

Reeve Anderson.

Reeve Anderson's address was the final one. He explained to the gathering that by careful financing the council had a surplus of $2,000, which he would propose to donate as a subscription to the proposed fund if the council would endorse the plan.

The councillors were unanimously in favour. "That much anyway," said one, and "$2,000 is not too much," remarked another. And then the ratepayers showed their hearty approval by a standing vote.

In his address Reeve Anderson called attention to some of the Otonabee boys who had already gone to the front.

The singing of the National Anthem, and three cheers for the King and the campaign brought the meeting to a successful close.

No Talk of Peace

London Press Endorses Attitude of Government in Regard to Von Bernstoff's Illusionary Offer

PAPERS ARE UNANIMOUS

LONDON, Sept. 4. — The London press to-day, almost without exception, indorsed the attitude of the government that there must be no peace with Germany until the menace of "Prussian militarism" is removed. The morning papers, were unanimous in scouting the idea of an early peace and treated with the greatest scorn the German statement that the freedom of the seas, freedom for the Poles and equal rights for the Jews, were the subjects upon which peace discussion must turn.

"This statement from the German Embassy is comic in its disingenuous futility," said the Daily Express. "Before the war the sea was free for all shipping of the world, and this new Teutonic demand for freedom merely means that Great Britain is to surrender her power that comes from its predominant navy and rob itself of her principal weapon, both of offence and defence." The impudent claim that Germany is fighting for the freedom of the Jews is evidently intended to please the American Jewish financiers. Germany's patronage of the Jew is made the mode ridiculous when it is remembered that until the outbreak of war no Jew was allowed to be an officer in the German army.'

The Daily Chronicle has the following to say: "Count Von Bernstorff is following up his somewhat illusionary offer to the United States in the submarine controversy by making a fresh plunge into peace talk. The manifesto is a somewhat clumsy attempt to exhibit Germany in the light of a universal emancipator. Nothing is said, of course, about emancipating Europe from the menace of her own bloodthirsty aggression or about the evacuation of Belgium. Evidently the sole object of the manifesto is to provide for pro-German propagandists whose cue it will now be to represent that the allies are wicked warmongers."

When I Turned Into a Tommy

I was never cut out to be
An early morning riser
And now I am shaving by candle light
And all because of the Kaiser.

I was always the one to spend
Of money I was no miser,
And now I lived of 5 bob a day
And all because of the Kaiser.

I was never inclined to walk
Riding I thought much wiser,
And now I am marching miles and miles
And miles because of the Kaiser.

I was always fond of a ten course meal
With a cocktail appetizer
And now I am living on bully beef
And all because of the Kaiser.

I was always a kindly man
I wouldn't have harmed a fly -ir,
And now I am thirsting for German blood.
And especially that of the Kaiser

"It would not surprise me if the European war lasted eighteen years," said Prince Alexandre Gagarin of Russia, who is here as a special agent of the Czar, in Philadelphia a few days ago. He added that Russia would not make peace until every German and Austrian soldier had been driven from Russian soil.

A Rome newspaper says that Germany has lost 43,972 officers since the war began, in killed, wounded, and missing. Included in this total are 123 Generals.

How You May Reduce Your Weight

Over-fatness is a very unwelcome condition especially in the present day, when slender figures are so fashionable, and every reader of this paper has noticed the tendency of some people to put on an excessive amount of fat.

If you happen to be one of those whose weight is more than it should be, don't try to starve yourself, eat all you want, but go to your druggist and get oil of orlene capsules (not tablets) and take one with each meal.

Oil of orlene increases the [illegible] carrying power of the blood and dissolves the fatty tissue, in many cases at nearly the rate of one lb. per day. Be sure to get oil of orlene capsules form. It is sold only in original packages. Any good druggist will [illegible] it, or a large size box will be sent on receipt of $1.00. Address: D. J. [illegible] Drug Co., Box 1240, Montreal.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

A Mythical Lover

By MARTHA V. MONROE

My dear, you being my most intimate friend, I write you first of all to announce my engagement. Harry after hanging about me for two years has at last proposed. How much longer he would have continued to do so had I not by my own skillful manipulation brought him to terms I don't know. As it is, I had a hard time landing him and did so only after a number of efforts had failed.

Now, I wish to assure you, my dear, that if you have occasion to bring a man to terms, do not adopt any of the old fashioned methods that are well known—that is, if you are playing a man who is as adept at the game as you. I tried a number of them on Harry, and he was too smart for them all. First I told him that I was intending to study the law and would make a vow of celibacy that I might be wedded only to my professional work. He laughed me to scorn; drew ironical pictures of my arguing a case before a jury; said he would like to be the judge before whom I pleaded a case, and all that.

About the time of this first failure the European war broke out, and I threatened to go abroad and take care of sick and wounded soldiers. He said he was thinking of going to France and enlisting in the Foreign legion. I didn't go as a nurse, and he didn't go as a soldier. He had met my bluff with one of his own.

Then Howard Wentworth came to town, and of all the girls here he seemed to prefer me. Taking advantage of his preference, I encouraged him, especially in presence of Harry. What did the scamp do but devote himself to Agnes Woodruff. I was frightened for fear she would get him away from me and dropped Mr. Wentworth immediately. After I had done so Harry gradually ceased to pay marked attention to Agnes, but I knew that he was still more or less devoted to her, and it worried me.

Having heard that Aunt Caroline had been in her youth skillful at the game of hearts, I confessed my failures and my anxiety to her and asked her to help me.

"The trouble with your expedients," she said to me, "is that they are too palpable. One of those you have tried is excellent, but you did not apply it in the right way. I refer to your attempt to pique your lover by accepting the attentions of another man. You should not have called in the attentions of a real admirer, but an imaginary one."

Not understanding what Aunt Carrie meant, I asked her to explain. She did so and gave me the identical method by which she brought Uncle John to terms twenty years ago. I made up my mind to try it.

My first move was to nerve myself to treat Harry with indifference for a stated period. This being a part of a general plan, I was enabled to play the part pretty well. I was careful not to overact it, in order that he might not see through what I was up to. Having apparently grown more indifferent to him for three or four months, I accepted an invitation from Elinor Trask to make her a visit. I remained away six weeks, and when I came home I talked a great deal to my intimate girl friends about a fascinating fellow I had met, or, rather had not met, during my visit, giving them the impression that I had been much taken up with him. Of course they spread a report that I was either engaged or was likely to be engaged, and it reached Harry's ears.

Nevertheless so confident was he that he could drop me and take me up when he pleased that he placed but little confidence in my preference for him having been diverted to another channel. He came to see me on my return from my visit, twitted me on having lost my heart during my absence and asked for a description of this "Adonis," as he called my mythical lover, who had been so fortunate as to win such a prize as myself. I turned the conversation upon other topics. Harry asked me to go to the theater with him the next evening. I told him so decidedly that I had a previous engagement that he did not ask for another evening.

Harry did not call again for some time. Meanwhile I was talking to my chums about the fascinating man I had met, confident that what I said would reach the man I really loved. The next time he called on me I telephoned to a florist, with whom I had left an order for flowers to be filled on call, to send them at once. Half an hour later the flowers came and were brought into the room to me where I was sitting with Harry. Pretending to be anxious about them, I opened the box containing them. Inside was a little envelope. I seized it and without opening it held it in the palm of my hand.

This was altogether too much for Harry's equanimity. He demanded to see the card of the sender, and I refused to give it to him. He turned very red, then pale, and I saw that an emotional storm was raging within him. I let him go on till he had committed himself, after which he lost all interest as to who sent the flowers, for we were engaged.

I assure you, my dear, I am very happy, and Harry says he is very happy, and, as for my mythical lover, I think it is perfectly honorable for me to have used him, for he can't be a bit disappointed.

WOMEN CAN HARDLY BELIEVE

How Mrs. Hurley Was Restored to Health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Eldon, Mo. — "I was troubled with displacement, inflammation and female weakness. For two years I could not stand on my feet long at a time and I could not walk two blocks without enduring cutting and drawing pains down my right side which increased every month. I have been at that time purple in the face and would walk the floor. I could not lie down or sit still sometimes for a day and a night at a time. I was nervous, and had very little appetite, no ambition, melancholy, and often felt as though I had not a friend in the world. After I had tried most every female remedy without success, my mother-in-law advised me to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I did so and gained in strength every day. I have now no trouble in any way and highly praise your medicine. It advertises itself."—Mrs. S. T. HURLEY, Eldon, Missouri.

Remember, the remedy which did this was Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. For sale everywhere.

It has helped thousands of women who have been troubled with displacements, inflammation, ulceration, tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, that bearing down feeling, indigestion, and nervous prostration, after all other means have failed. Why don't you try it? Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Mass.

BIG NAVAL GUNS.

Death at Times Comes From Merely Serving Them In Battle.

Modern naval engagements demonstrate that the gunners sometimes die after the battle, even when they have not been wounded or injured in any way. Death is caused by disturbance of the circulation due to the strain placed upon the nervous system by the excitement and the tremendous vibrations of modern guns.

Curiously enough, this collapse is quite as likely to affect the most robust members of the gun crew as the ones with poorer physiques and bears no relation to the individual's courage. It is due to a lack of sufficient reserve power of the heart, which is dependent upon the quality of the heart muscles, and there is no known means of estimating this inherent quality exactly.

It is possible, of course, to determine the force and strength of the heart in an individual, but only some test, such as that of actual battle, will determine the quality of the heart muscles.

Thus the veteran gunner who has proved his heart quality in actual battle has become a peculiarly valuable factor in modern naval warfare.—Los Angeles Times.

ADVERTISING FOR THRIFT.

Big Campaign Against Bad Times Is in Prospect.

Advertising, good, big, square-faced advertising, sold Canada's apple crop last fall. Advertising of an indirect sort, by means of daily, insistent and heart-breaking articles in all our newspapers, blundered us safely over the unemployment crisis of last winter. In the present recruiting campaign, more widespread advertising, not only in the newspapers, but on posters and placards, a means so splendidly applied by Kitchener, has brought forward all the recruits asked for by the authorities.

To-day Britain is frankly advertising for thrift. Here newspapers, supported by the advertising of the stores, are harping, day in and day out, on the necessity of shunning the stores. And the merchants, instead of cancelling their ads, are shortening stock, sending their clerks to France, and directing the manufacturers into the making of munitions.

According to five successful manufacturers and merchants interviewed on this question in regard to this country, Canada is due to have just such demands made on it by September. By that month, unless the war is over, Britain, who has thrown herself far over in the direction of munitions, will have to recover her balance in attending the needs of her people at home, and the munitions traffic, already well under way in Canada, will be required to lift off some of the weight on Britain's shoulders.

"Just now," said one manufacturer with a head for statistics, "Britain is under a 100 per cent. pressure of munitions. Canada is under a less than 5 per cent. pressure. The average man does not know, for instance, except on rumor, that Canada is making shells for the guns in Flanders. Vague rumor tells him, thanks to the casual but perfectly effective voluntary censorship of the Canadian newspapers, that certain well-known works, formerly devoted to making wagons or engines, or bath-tubs, are now making shells. He sees no evidences of it around him.

"Presently," concluded this man, Britain will have to swing back to more balanced production—say, to a 60 per cent. munitions pressure. Then Canada will have to come up to at least 20 per cent. munitions pressure. Then there will be advertising of the need of thrift. We will know munitions makers who live on our street. The machinist whom we see with his kiddies in the evenings pass our house will be known to us as an expert fuse-maker, or cap-fitter, or shell assembler. To-day we have the consciousness of helping Britain with men as soldiers. In a month or two we must have the consciousness of helping with our labor."

It was predicted last winter, at the height of the unemployment crisis, that Canada would have to undergo an industrial readjustment, that the builders and all the allied trades would have to be made over into manufacturers, producers, and the allied industries.

All this spring and summer just that readjustment has been under way, quietly and without strain. Indeed, we will not know of its success until next winter. But many thousands of builders, laborers, teamsters, and construction workers have joined the army. Many more thousands of laborers have gone out to the farms or to the gardens, to the army of production. All laborers of the skilled sorts formerly demanded for construction have been adapted as skilled factory men. And the army is still calling and will call for some time for those still "at the loose end," unadjustable or unadjusted.

Cause Found at Last.

The teacher was having an interesting half hour with the children, asking them questions, any one having the privilege to answer. It was a great time to show off. The teacher asked about various things, and one question was about locusts. Several hands were raised, and finally one boy was selected to speak. "A locust is a bug that gives people tuberculocusts," was his answer.—Indianapolis News.

EXAMINER PATTERN SERVICE

THE SMARTNESS OF SIMPLICITY.

By Astrid Worthington.

This plain little waist is certainly a leading favorite at present, and as it may be made of a mere wisp of material and finished in a morning it will tempt many of us into making it.

Front and back are entirely plain, with the closing in front, without a band, and with the neck quite open. Here there is a collar of moderate size of material contrasting with that of the rest of the waist. The same material is used for a cuff when the short sleeve is used.

In this waist we also find the desirable feature of the collar, which may be made open or high by the adjustment of a button or two.

The pattern of this waist, No. 7,192, is cut in sizes 34 to 44 inches bust measure. Medium size requires 2¼ yards of 36 inch material, with ⅝ yard of contrasting goods to trim.

When ordering remember to give your name and address as well as the number and size of pattern required, and age of a child.

Price 15 cents, or 2 for 25c.

GRIEF OF A LAIRD MADE GREAT CORPS

Romantic History of the Scottish Rifles. Graham's "Gray Breeks"—Heroes in Latest War

The 2nd Scottish Rifles won new renown for a grand old regiment early in the war at Neuve Chapelle, and have since bettered it. Of the Neuve Chapelle exploit a writer says: "You who read these lines may never have heard of the Scottish Rifles, as the 2nd Battalion of the Cameronians like to be designated. A fine, proud corps the old 90th Light Foot, the Scottish Rifles. They 'Do not advertise,' as they will tell one in the accent of Lanarkshire or of Aberdeen, but they are 'the only regiment in the British army that can lay claim to three commanders-in-chief and two field marshals,' Lord Hill, Lord Wolseley, and Sir Evelyn Wood, to wit.

In a few hours of martyrdom the 2nd Scottish Rifles at Neuve Chapelle showed that they have lost nothing of the spirit which won them fame at Lucknow and at Spion Kop. All their officers save one were killed or wounded, the colonel, Lieut.-Colonel Bliss, and his adjutant falling side by side, bravely leading the first line. A hundred and fifty odd were all that their sole surviving officer, a second lieutenant of the special reserve, could collect after the German position had been won.

Needed No Leading

But though all their officers were gone, the men remained as steady as on parade, 'moulding themselves,' as one who went through all the fight put it, 'on the glorious example given them by their officers'; and the Scottish Rifles showed the Germans how a Scot can handle a bayonet." Lord Provost Dunlop, of Glasgow, has the letter of a staff officer regarding the conduct of the Rifles at Neuve Chapelle. He says: "The 2nd Scottish Rifles were beyond praise. After all their officers and sergeants had been shot down, they still went on like a pack of hounds."

The story of the origin of this gallant regiment, formerly known as the 90th Perthshire Volunteers, (Light Infantry), now as the 2nd Battalion of the Cameronians (Scottish Rifles), is a romance of love and war. It came into existence because a Perthshire laird lost his beautiful wife, torn from him by death, and this makes it necessary to introduce here a brief sketch of the man, Lord Lynedoch, one of [illegible] who won immortal fame in the Peninsular war.

When His Wife Died

Thomas Graham of Balgowan became in 1766 the heir and representatives of a family that claimed descent from a common ancestor with the Dukes of Montrose. He showed no inclination for soldiering, but was much interested in agriculture. In 1774 the laird of Balgowan married Mary, one of the beautiful daughters of the Earl of Cathcart. Never was there a better match. He—tall, square-shouldered, and erect—with an equable temper and chivalrous nature; she—charming and accomplished. It was an ideally happy wedded life. For sixteen years Mrs. Graham was the fairest ornament of all the Perthshire assemblies. But wealth, medical skill, the love and devotion of husband and friends availed not. The grief of Thomas Graham was no ordinary grief; he was broken-hearted and inconsolable. He was in his forty-second year when his wife died. He resolved to seek relief in the excitement of danger. An expedition was fitting out for the relief of Toulon, and Graham was permitted to go as a volunteer.

It was at Toulon that three men who were destined to lead armies received their "baptism of fire." One of these was Napoleon, who was colonel of artillery; Rowland Hill, then a subaltern, and who twenty-two years later measured his strength with Napoleon; while Graham was in later years to elicit from the Emperor an expression of admiration for "that daring old man." Graham realized that unless he took some decided action he would have little chance of advancement. He undertook, therefore, to raise a new regiment, and came to Perth with this object in view.

Began With Press Gang

Recruiting was done in an astonishing manner in those days. Men were needed and nobody troubled as to the methods by which they were obtained. Within a year he raised a body of men which, from doubtful beginnings, became one of the crack regiments of the British army. In a few months he mustered on the North Inch of Perth fifteen hundred men—broken-down lawyers, preachers, play actors, and pickpockets—the raw material from which he fashioned "the gallant 90th." "Balgowan's Grey Breeks" became a bye-word for all that was wild and wanton. Firm discipline and hard drill, however, gradually reduced the wild mass to order, and time and opportunity proved Graham's men a force to be reckoned with.

PRAISE FOR FRANCE

Soldiers and Women Wonderfully Alert and Economical

There is much that we can learn of France both in the field and in the organization of war, says the London Westminster Gazette. The French army and the French people are quicker to adjust themselves to circumstances than the British. Their ingenious minds more ingenious than the German, for all that is said to the contrary, are all the time at work inventing new devices, new tactics, new methods of economizing their strength and using it to advantage at selected points. They seem to have the right combination of experienced elderly commanders and active student-like young men, and, if all accounts are true, they have not hesitated to take any strong measures that were necessary to bring the competent young men to the top.

Then, behind the fighting lines, we see the whole people seriously setting themselves to the life of economy and frugality which the occasion requires. Here the admirable Frenchwoman comes to her own, performing miracles of management, and taking into her own hands a hundred things which, in other countries, have to be prescribed by government order. Nothing was more impressive than the complete unanimity with which the gay life of the Parisian was put away, and the pleasure-seekers vanished from the scene to reappear as working people. No preaching or scolding has been needed to effect these results. They come of themselves, inevitably, when the invader is on the soil, but nothing could be more admirable than the spirit in which France accepted them and turned them to the advantage of the national cause.

"RUINED IF WE WIN"

Gloomy German View of War-time Financial Situation

M. Maurice Strauss gives the following account in L'Information, of Paris, of statements made to him in Berlin by a financier of the entourage of Herr Beurens, director of the Dresden Bank, during a conversation: "Even if we win, we are ruined. The money which is in circulation is fictitious. I do not mean that the Reichsbank paper money is valueless. But how are you to determine this value? On what basis can you fix it? In England gold circulates; in France it is hidden away by the private citizen. Here in Germany it is the Government which has taken possession of it. Nilly willy, it had to be given up.

"At the beginning of the war the Government gave out that it would pay all its purveyors in gold. It was so. Then those who had received this gold were made to understand that they must pay it into the Reichsbank if they expected a continuance of Government orders. How were they to refuse? They had no option. In these troublous times you must work for the military or not at all. In a word all the gold in the country has gone to swell the war treasure. What has been done with it?"

LOCOMOTOR ATAXIA.

"My nerves were very bad, and I could not sleep at night, nor could I control my arms or legs," writes Mrs. Robt Bustard, Maxwell, N.B. "Dr. Chase's Nerve Food cured me of what I believe was the early stage of locomotor ataxia or paralysis. I cannot describe what I suffered, but now I am entirely cured."

DONKEY'S EARS SHOT OFF

Turkish Owner Reaps Rich Harvest After Bombardment

Somewhat reminiscent of the famous bombardment of Havana during the Hispano-American war when, according to the Spanish accounts, only a mule was killed after a fierce shelling of the Spanish forts—is the story printed in the Kioyili, a small Turkish provincial paper published in Symrna, of the bombardment of Tcheshmeh by an English warship. True, the Kioyili admits two casualties at Tcheshmeh, but the most remarkable shot of the whole action was one which shaved off both the ears of a donkey belonging to Halil Effendi, collector of customs. Never has a donkey more quickly risen to fame. Halil Bey's ass is "the sight of the town," and the collector of customs is making a rich harvest from the townspeople, who pay a small fee to see the effects of the wonderful shot which robbed the donkey of Tcheshmeh of its ears.

Absent-minded King Albert

The villa in which the King and Queen of the Belgians have resided since Brussels fell is close to the high road by which the King's grandfather, Leopold I., enterd Belgium in 1831 when the crown was offered to him. It is at this villa that the King and Queen received General Foch, who commands the armies of France in the north. At lunch the Queen sat at the head of the table, with General Foch on her right and the King on her left. The conversation of their guest so deeply interested the Royal hosts that they very nearly forgot the object for which they had invited him, which was to hand him the insignia of the Order which had just been conferred on him. The General had already taken his leave and was seated in his motor car when King Albert ran out of the villa, jumped on the step of the car, and hurriedly handed over the precious casket with apologies for his absence of mind.

PUCK OF THE COMMONS

Mysterious Mr. Ginnell Bothers All Alike With Questions

"Dead or alive nobody minds Ben Gunn," said the pirates in "Treasure Island" when they were disturbed by what they thought was the Spirit of the worthy buccaneer and the House of Commons takes the same view of Mr. Ginnell, regarding him [illegible] ary correspondent. Exactly what Mr. Ginnell's opinion on men and matters are nobody has discovered. He is the Ishmaelite of the House. He turns his hand impartially against Mr. John Redmond and the Treasury Bench, but he has never explained his standpoint. He has defended cattle-driving, but beyond that the House has no knowledge of his political convictions.

He is also a sort of Parliamentary Puck, and never did Puck assume a stranger disguise. Mr. Ginnell is the mildest-looking individual that ever put a nasty question. A scanty grey beard, spectacles, a frock coat, hands trembling with nervous excitement, and a diffident air go ill with all our preconceived notions of Puck or Ishmael, but there is a certain doggedness about Mr. Ginnell which inspires respect. If not for his patriotism or political sagacity at all events for his determination and his sublime disregard for all rebuffs.

Germany's Thinking Horses

A recent cable despatch from Paris announced the death of the "thinking horses" of Elberfeld. It seems that when the war broke out the Prussian military authorities requisitioned the horses for military service. Dr. Vogel, their owner, protested and was supported in his stand by the Royal Academy of Berlin. A reprieve was thereupon granted. Later the horses were again seized for duty in the artillery and they met their death in Flanders.

BELGIANS VICTORIOUS AT DIXMUDE

ROUMANIA MAY BE ATTACKED AT ONCE

Belgians Held Upper Hand In Bomb Fighting At Dixmude

Belgian Military Authorities Make Announcement---Violent Cannonading in Progress at Various Points on The Western Front May Be Preliminary to General Offensive.

GERMAN CLAIM DENIED BY FRENCH

Special Cable:

LONDON, Sept. 3—Both afternoon and evening communications of the French War Office are confined to descriptions of the intense cannonading in progress at various points of the front. Many writers insist that this sustained bombardment of the German lines in the west means an early move by the entente allies. The critics point to this, the thorough redistribution of the British and French armies, and the shelling of Zeebrugge some days ago as heralding something at least preliminary to a general offensive.

The following statement on the operations of the Belgian army was made public to-day by the Belgian military authorities:

"Last night and this morning were quiet. During the afternoon marked activity was shown by the German artillery. Heavy bomb fighting occurred before Dixmude, in which we held the upper hand."

The Paris War Office did not lose any time in denying the official German version of the fighting in Alsace. The War Office statement reads:

"The Germans pretend to have recaptured the line of Lingekopf-Barrenkopf. In reality they succeeded, after a very violent attack, in capturing some trenches they lost on a front of 300 yards, but the French retapture the bulk of their positions. German papers publishing the French communique of Aug. 29, relating to the check suffered by German aeroplanes in their attempted raid on Paris, falsify it in such a way as to give it an opposite meaning."

WASHINGTON, Sept. 4.—Late fall or early winter may see an American move to restore peace in Europe, this intimation was from a high official source to-day. Pope Benedict's appeal to President Wilson to use his good offices with Europe's belligerents may not bear fruit immediately, but with a lull in the fighting expected upon winter's approach, it is stated on good authority, the President thinks the time may be right for definite action. The Chief Executive will not reply to the Pope's peace plea, it was stated authoratively to-day, the explanation being given that His Holiness' communication requires no answer or even an acknowledgement, having been delivered in person by Cardinal Gibbons, to whom the President gave the necessary reception. Unless the Vatican or Cardinal Gibbons makes public the papal communication, it is said it will not be given out here.

BOMBARDING GERMAN POSITIONS.

LONDON, Sept. 4.—The French official statement this morning indicates that the Allies have begun heavy bombardment of German positions in the western front. Advises from the Dardanelles tell of the resumption of shelling by the Allies on the Turkish forts. The feeling here is that the Allies will shortly begin a new advance. In both these theatres of war thousands of troops, including some large detachments of Canadians, have joined the British forces at Both Flanders and Gallipoli, and there is confidence that there will shortly be a move that will astonish the world. The autumn season throught Britain has opened with a feeling of optimism. That peace is a long way off is a general conclusion here, but the people as a whole have steeled themselves for a long, steady, gruelling war, which they expect this winter. There have been no Zeppelin raids of importance since August 17th, and any semblance of a panic then initiated has completely blown over.

ROME, Sept. 3.—Despatches from Bucharest state that Austria's declaration of war on Roumania is considered imminent. Preparations for war are being rushed at fever heat in Roumania, and the war fever is increasing throughout the kingdom. Volunteers are flocking to the colours in great numbers. The King, in alluding to wholesale arrests and persecutions of Roumanians in Transylvania is uoted as having affirmed that the country is prepared "for any and every sacrifice in a war of redemption."

NEW PHYSICAL DIRECTOR OF "Y"

The new Y.M.C.A. physical director, Mr. G. H. Roper, has arrived and is now meeting men and boys, preparatory to the Fall gymnasium opening. Mr. Roper is married, has one child and is a member of the Congregational denomination. For six years Mr. Roper has been physical director of the Brantford Y.M.C.A. where he has accomplished an excellent work.

The local Y.M.C.A. workers are very fortunate in having secured the services of such a competent successor of former Physical Director Carson.

IT CAN BE DONE

A farmer was asked the other day what he thought of a barn being erected in less than a week. "It can't be done" he said. Yet it has been done and is being done right along. The Metal Shingle and Siding Company, Limited, of Preston, with whom are associated the A. B. Ormsby Company, Limited, of Toronto, have an exhibit at the Toronto exhibition of just such a barn. On account of the simplicity of construction these barns may be erected in short order. The old-fashioned cross pieces and heavy beams are supplanted by steel trusses, which are so arranged that all weight and strain is transmitted straight to the foundation. The walls and roof are made with Acorn Brand interlocking galvanized iron sheets which resist fire and severest weather, giving absolute protection to the harvested crop.

A farmer may have a new barn erected by three or four men and completed within a few days of placing his order, as the steel trusses are shipped ready for erection. This speaks well for the organization of the associated companies, and means a big thing to farmers who may have suffered by fire. A little attention to an exhibit of this kind may save your harvested crop some year, so don't fail to see it. Follow the main aisle through the new live stock building. The exhibit is near the end.

TWO INTERESTING LETTERS FROM LOCAL SOLDIERS

Corp. W. A. Wood of the 57th Detachment in the 2nd Battalion Tells Something of Present Conditions at the Front

MAPLE LEAVES APPRECIATED

Writing to Mr. H. Birhall of the C. G. E., Corp. W. A. Wood of Peterborough, who is at the front with the 57th detachment in the 2nd Battalion, gives some interesting details of life at the front. Corp. Wood, who is a brother of Pte. Harold Wood of the 80th Battalion, writes as follow:

France, Aug. 15, 1915.

Dear Friend,—Just a few lines, which I hope you will get all right, and which I hope will find you and family quite well. We are in the trenches at present and the day is rather wet, but of course we cannot grumble as it is the only wet day we have had this time around, but the month of July, in this country, proved to be a wet one this year. We are getting quite used to the soldiers' life behind the sand bags, and it is not a pleasant occupation at the best of times, but, as you know, unlike the C.G.E., we cannot cluck up this job any time we fell like it, even if we do get fed up with it at times. Oh, no we have to stay right with it and while making the best of things at the same time keep a pleasant face.

The Huns are over the way, entrenched, and it's up to us to see that they keep their place or they may take a notion and come over and take ours, or try to.

We have moved about quite a bit since coming here. That's all in the game you know. I have used Shanks' pony on many occasions, fairly hard pressed at times, I can assure you, but it had to be done. One thing we are always sure of good footgear and clothing—that's something you know, and we don't very often go very short as far as grub is concerned. At the same time I don't say we always get all that is coming to us, but then that is another story altogether of which the opening chapter, etc., may take place after all is over in the way of rifle fire and shell throwing. And we believe we do a lot of that over here. You know it is a dangerous work. Somebody will get badly hurt one of these days, but as long as we can dodge the bullets and shells I don't mind. You know I would very much like to see Peterborough again, whether you all want me back or not. War is a terrible thing. What do you say?

We had a Col. Birchall in command of the 4th Battalion, but poor fellow he got killed early in the battle of Ypres. You may have read the details in the papers. Hope he was no relation of yours. Of course he died on the battlefield, bravely fighting for King and country—something to be proud of, you will agree. None of us know from one day to another who will be next to go. It is a terrible slaughter and no mistake.

I suppose you have turned the old roundabout into a shell-making gig eh? Reminds me of the old wind mills out here, which are numerous and common. As for the country itself I can only say very little, not having travelled over very much of its beauty spots of which I don't doubt there are plenty to be found. We have only seen the ruins of certain places of very little note, our time, six months now, being chiefly spent confined to the trenches or the old barns of the French farms. We get very little information as to our future movements. One thing we all know, that is a reasonable rest away from the firing line would do us no harm and it will be a blessing when we see peace. Please remember me to all the boys and any inquiring friends. Say I am fine and dandy and that it is fairly quiet with us at present.

Pte. Mongour Writes.

Tom Miller With 80th

Millbrook Chief of Police is Wearing The Red "Enlisted" Band on His Arm To-day—91 on Parade This Morning

TO-DAY'S MILITARY NEWS

The 80th Battalion had 91 men on parade this morning and the number of accepted recruits is now over the 100 mark. Among those who enlisted yesterday was Tom Miller, Chief of Police at Millbrook, and son of City Relief Officer Miller. He served through the South African war with the 1st Battalion Scots, going over from Canada to enlist, and finished up with the rank of Sergeant. He will be a most valuable man for the 80th Battalion, and will report for duty on Wednesday. Millbrook has given him leave of absence.

There was no parade of the 80th Battalion this afternoon, but the detachment will attend Church parade at the Salvation Army Temple tomorrow morning. Monday being a holiday the men will be given a day off. They will report at 7 a.m. and be dismissed for the day. Two teams from the Battalion will engage in a tug-of-war contest at the Trades and Labour games at Rivers Park in the afternoon.

Ten recruits for the 33rd Battalion have been accepted in the past couple of days.

Some of the 80th Battalion men had a lively game of football on the parade ground after dinner yesterday. Harold Wood's team won from Will Shaw's aggregation by 7 to 1. The Gold Dust Twins were present but not in action.

The teams lined up as follows:

H. Wood's—P. Smith, R. Wood, T. Smith, Kirk, Norman Sadler, and H. Wood.

R. Wilshaw's—Hardman, Theobald, Leether, Willshaw, White, Leckie, Melton.

Referee—T. E. Hall.

Goals—Kirk 2, Wood 1, Norman 3, T. Smith 1, Willshaw 2, Melton 1, Theobald 1, White 1.

The 80th Battalion Banquet and Concert.

The Executive committee of the above wish to thank Messrs. J. D. Craig, Jordan Bros., R. Denne, Turner & Son, Mayor Butler, Mr. Stewart and Mr. Geo. Duncan, the trustees of the Victoria Hall, and Mr. B. Hope of the 57th Battalion Stretcher Bearer Co., and all others who so ably assisted to make their banquet and concert such a splendid success.

The Executive committee also wish to specially thank Pte. J. Nicholson, the treasurer, and Pte. T. Smith of the Entertaining committee, for the able manner in which they carried out their duties.

ATTRACTIONS IN PETERBORO' FOR THE HOLIDAY

River Outings and Local Big Field Day of the Labour Men, Not Overlooking the Toronto Exhibition

LAST HOLIDAY OF SUMMER

Numerous attractions are scheduled for Labour Day. The Stoney Lake has a special outing to Healey's Falls, leaving the George street wharf at 7.45 o'clock, the Geneva goes to Harwood and Gore's Landing, leaving at 9 o'clock. Several outings are also slated for Stoney Lake. For some however, Monday is the occasion of the annual pay ride to the Toronto Ex. A day's whirl of excitement of the same kind that attract farmers from away back to a circus. Biff bang, away on the early train, a grape fruit at Child's, possibly a side jaunt to some friend's home, and a splash through the big gates out King street stranger, drinks and eats between meals from pop to hot dogs; endless parade through the buildings, down the midway, possibly the afternoon spent quietly with someone down close to the lake front listening to the sad sad waves, really, a wonderful day for tastes not dulled by familiarity with the city.

The chief, and in fact only, attraction in Peterborough, is the Labour Day celebration under the auspices of the Trades and Labour Council. There will be a parade of union men, headed by the 57th Regimental band, at one o'clock to the Riverside park where a programme of sports will be presented, including a baseball match between the East Ends and Jack Pilling's team. A fine list of prizes is offered for the day's events.

Committee Decide Question of Examination of Insane Patients by City Physician

At yesterday's meeting of the Finance committee of the City Council payment of an account presented by Dr. C. H. Vance, Acting Medical Officer of Health, in connection with the examination of persons charged with insanity was discussed. The committee considered that such service constituted a part of the duties incident to the office of city physician now held by Dr. Vance. Such work was assumed by Capt. A. W. McPherson, M.D., M.R.C.O., without extra remuneration.

Asked For Refund.

A letter was read from Mr. James Sutherland, 52 1-2 Water street, asking for a refund of business taxes amounting to $17.21 and based on the losses formerly occupied by Mr. Sutherland at 221 George street. The committee decided that the matter was an issue between Mr. Sutherland and the present occupants of the George street store and did not see its way to take any action in the matter.

The Warning Not General

Passenger Liners Only Will Be Given Warning by Submarines, Enemy Merchant Vessels Taking Their Chances

A SUDDEN CHANGE

WASHINGTON, Sept. 4. The United States seemed likely to-day to accept as fully satisfying its demands for a modification of Germany's submarine warfare, the proposition that passenger liners alone and not belligerent merchant ships be given warnings by submarines. The British condition that the United States should insist on similar treatment for merchant ships probably will be rejected. This was stated on excellent authority as the administration's latest sentative decision as to its future position. It involved a sudden change of opinion in as much as the opposition Friday was that Ancona would mean up the same treatment of passenger carrying freight vessels. Officials were advised that Germany had on the Arabic case would be dispatched from Berlin early next week. Ambassador Gerard has cabled, however, that he has no knowledge of the report from the German submarine commander who sunk the Ancona but it had been received.

REFUTAL OF OVER-SEAS TOBACCO FUND ATTACK

Recent Contemptible Charges in Toronto Paper Replied to in Detail by Mr. L. Benison—Overseas Club Not an Organization of To-day—Established Years Ago.

EVERY CENT FOR TOBACCO

A complete statement of the operations of the Overseas Cigar Tobacco Fund was presented last night at a largely attended meeting of the Peterborough branch of the Overseas Club held in the Bank of Montreal chambers. It was a reassuring reply to the irresponsible and malevolent attack the Club Fund and its representative, Mr. Arthur Privats, in a recent issue of Jack Canuck. The local members responded to these insidious insinuations by proceeding to establish the local fund on a strong foundation and therein existed the most wholehearted enthusiasm from everyone present. Bank managers, office men and mechanics manifested an eagerness to throw every effort in to the work and extensive plans were formulated to project the aims of the Overseas Club Tobacco Fund. It is scarcely necessary to remark that the sentiments received are used for the purpose of tobacco for the soldiers.

Mr. R. L. Stein made a capable chairman. He stated that the Secretary, Mr. V. Crandell, had communicated to Mr. J. Wrench, Honorary Secretary of the Club in Ganada the nature of the Jack Canuck attack, and had asked for a comprehensive statement of the workings of the Overseas League. Lord Mr. Roper had replied that he was forwarding the letter to London, and in the meantime had the desired information.

Ignore the Attack

He read a part of an article made personal attack on Mr. Privats in Jack Canuck but in the opinion of the committee it was unnecessary to pay any attention to it. They believed that the public would not attach any importance to the malevolent attack on the Club. SOCKS FOR SOLDIERS.

It is self-evident that before we can get the enlisted soldier in readiness for a move to the front, we must put him on his feet. This means that he must be hardened physically by marching and military movements, and this involves keeping his feet in good shape, and this, in turn, involves need of socks. Weather is not allowed to interrupt the routine or training; it must go on wet or dry. Men tramping miles and hours through mud and water can't avoid getting wet feet. They need, to insure health, not to speak of comfort, a change of socks; and the Peterborough men now in camp at Barriefield naturally look to the home city to supply the need, which is now urgent. Men in training camps need socks in reasonable supply more than soldiers at the front. They do more marching in the course of training. The duty of those at home is, in part, recognized. The 57th Chapter Daughters of the Empire yesterday forwarded a hundred pairs of socks to Peterborough boys at Barriefield. This is good, but not good enough. We have altogether about 200 Peterborough boys under training in camp at Barriefield. It is, therefore, necessary for the present at least, to forward at once, at least, another hundred pairs of socks. As noted in another place in this issue, an officer has written to a member of The Examiner staff urging the necessity of more socks being provided, and at once, for the Peterborough boys now under training at Barriefield camp. One can't very well urge those who are, and have been for some time, knitting socks so industriously, to ply the kneedles more quickly; but we can very well appeal to others to get into the knitting mood. Many hands not only make light work, but also bring larger results.

INOPPORTUNE PEACE PROPAGANDA.

It is natural that both His Holiness, Pope Benedict XV. and the Kaiser—the height of moral antithesis—should suggest or demand peace. The Kaiser wants peace because he is sick of the game he started; because he is getting the worse of it with the worst yet to come. We expect the Pope to be anxious and even to strive for peace, because it is his duty as vice-general of the Prince of Peace to use his great office in promoting the cause of peace.

Yet the Pope must be subject to the dictum of the inspired preacher, who tells us there is a time for everything under the sun—"a time to kill and a time to heal; a time to break down and a time to build." This is the "time to kill" in order to hasten the "time to break down" the monstrous system and menace of Prussian militarism. To this we have set our hand, and there is no place for lasting peace till we have accomplished our undertaking. A burglar enters our house and spoils our goods, smashes everything he can't carry away. We don't lay down the weapons we bring against him till we have overcome him and put him where he can do no more harm. To show inopportune mercy, to let the burglar go before he has been properly punished, and the power to do evil would be compounding a felony. We should be compounding a national felony. We should be showing mercy to a national robber, if we made terms with him while he still held the spoil he has seized, while he still is immune from the full punishment of the inexpressible outrages he has committed; while his hands are still red with the abundant blood he, and he alone, has been the cause of shedding. We cannot make peace till the arch enemy of the world's peace is beaten; till his power to set nation against nation; his power to shed oceans of blood and inflict inconceivable suffering upon humanity, is broken, and broken to the hilt. To make peace or any other terms, or under any other conditions, would be a crime only less great than the crime with which the evil genius of militarism and the Moloch of despotism have darkened the world. There can be no peace, and should be no talk of peace, till the assurance of lasting peace is accomplished. The world can have no peace, nor wants peace, till the world's enemy is defeated. We want peace, not a truce. We shall not make terms with the devil while he is unchained.

PRACTICAL PATRIOTISM.

We have so many evidences of practical patriotism, that it seems unfair to particularize. But the example of the Imperial Oil Company of Toronto is worthy of attention. This company has issued a circular "to all employees" in the following terms:

> The Directors of The Imperial Oil Company, Limited, have decided to pay all employees who have enlisted, or who may enlist, with the Canadian Contingent for overseas service—in the case of married men—half pay, and—in the case of single men—quarter pay, until the end of the war, and in addition, will hold the positions open.
>
> Should any employee who is serving with the colours, meet with a fatality in the course of the war, the Directors will continue the payment—in the case of a married man—of half pay to his wife or immediate family for six months after his death and—in the case of a single man—one-quarter of his salary to his dependents (if any) for six months after his death.
>
> The above applies to all regular members of the staff who were in the service of the Company for at least six months immediately preceding the Declaration of War.
>
> GEORGE W. MAYER,
> Vice-President.

This is generous indeed, and without detracting, for one moment, from its merit, it may be pointed out that such a liberal and patriotic offer, may be well within the financial capacity of the company to carry out, without any considerable embarassment. But it might not be possible for all employers of labour to show the same patriotic generosity involving the some encouragement to enlisting for active service.

We know the manufacturers of Peterborough have done their share in encouraging their men, but it has not been practically possible to go beyond guaranteeing on their return, the places of the men who enlist. When times are dull the margin of profit is small; when the difficulty of even making ends meet, is not inconsiderable; when, in some cases, from lack of orders, industrial establishments are reluctantly compelled to lay off men ,it is a little too much to expect that they should be in a position to pay any proportion of the wages of men who are not earning any money for them, and when the times make it difficult to maintain the degree of solvency necessary to pay ordinary wages.

Still the example of the Imperial Oil Company is an inspiration, and a very handsome evidence of practical patriotism. They are generous in this regard for two reasons; they have the spirit and the will, and the ability, to be generous. If everybody who is in a position to help the country's cause in a practical way would do as well; if all who could do something tangible, without sacrifice, there would be such an universal distribution of effort, that without such sacrifice as many are making, we should be doing our duty, and individually in much fuller measure.

The man who enlists makes the greatest sacrifice of all — he stakes his all, his life upon the issue of battle; though it is to be doubted whether he himself makes a greater sacrifice than the wife or mother, that surrenders her husband or her son to the cause. There are many of us who are making no sacrifice at all, and unfortunately many of us who are even doing nothing at all, except superciliously regard, or flippantly criticise, those who are doing their bit and their best. This war represents a campaign in which all of us, every citizen should be enlisted; for the interests, the liberties, the well-being of all are at stake.

If everybody who is able should do his or her share in his or her own way as far as possible, we should have the conditions that promote enlistment greatly improved. The man who is able to fight would not feel lonesome when he enlisted, because he would see that all those who cannot, or cannot be expected to enlist, have to the extent of their ability, enlisted in the home work that must be behind and give the fullest effect to enlistment in the ranks.

SIR WILFRID'S STAND.

"I affirm it with all my power, that it is the duty of Canada to give to Great Britain in this war all the assistance that is in the power of Canada. My confidence in the present Government at Ottawa does not ooze from the soles of my boots, but at the outbreak of the war I considered it my duty to support it in its war policy. I have supported it in that policy ever since and I will support it again. The reason is that this war is a contest between German institutions and British institutions. British institutions mean freedom. German institutions mean despotism. That is why we as Canadians have such a vital interest in this war."—Sir Wilfrid Laurier at Sherbrooke.

ALL-ROUND FAILURE IS CLOSING IN ON GERMANY

The Hun has failed. That is the inner meaning of what happened in Berlin during recent days. And that, too, is the deeper secret of the seeming right-about-face or at least the compromise of German policy as regards the rights of neutrals and non-combatants at sea. President Wilson, with his calculated persistence, has on the surface, saved his nation from war, but he was perhaps more the occasion than the cause. The real conflict which lay behind this change of front was not between Washington and Berlin. It was an internal German conflict, which was known to be raging fiercely weeks ago; the conflict between "moderation," as represented by von Bethmann-Hollweg, and "frightfulness," as incarnated in von Tirpitz. Yesterday's report signifies much that is not told in the despatches. It is hinted from German sources that von Bethmann-Hollweg has been given a freer hand, while von Tirpitz, the Hun, is given a diplomatic sea-sickness holiday.

The fact is Germany is beginning to find out that playing the Hun sounds better on the boastful lips of the Kaiser than it proves itself to be even in a half-civilized world. Were there no such thing as morality, were the Prussian doctrine true that "Law is a make-shift, and Force the only reality," were there nothing to be considered except the game and the candle it would still be true that "frightfulness" in Germany's warfare at sea is a hopeless failure. The comparatively insignificant achievements of German's submarine warfare as war, and the growing enfeeblement of the German fleet by reason of the growing efficiency of the British submarine service, have combined to bring home to the soberer minds in Germany the losing game they are playing. It is not so much because of any new virtue, as it is because of stern necessity, that Berlin yield, or seems to yield, a point to Washington.

The alternative, and the only alternative to the more moderate policy of the Imperial Chancellor is the continuance on a still wider scale of the policy of lawlessness and ruthless horror which von Tirpitz accepted as the true programme of Prussianism. The one hope to secure peace on a basis favourable to Germany's demands while she is still free to demand is the only way her before the war, but also dominates for what the war has cost. The other would carry "frightfulness" and "aggression" to the uttermost limits until Germany gained no only ascendancy in Europe but the power of dictation on all the continents and of domination on all the seas. Both programmes are absolutely out of the question for the Allies and for all free nations, unless civilization itself is to go back into the twilight. Peace on the terms of von Bethmann-Hollweg and the moderates would be a denial of justice, possible only if Britain at last renounced the sanctity of "the scrap of paper." Peace on the terms of the Jingoes and the Junkers and the war lords is not possible on any grounds or at any price.

The Hun has not failed, but Germany now begins to recognize the failure. The invasion of Belgium, and the hideousness and brutality which marked and still mark the presence of the German army in that innocent land, branded Germany as an outlaw nation. That brand has been burned in beyond all eradication by the sinking of the Lusitania and the Arabic. That brand, that "damned spot," will not out. No concessions made to the United States in the day of Germany's fear will atone, in the eyes of any people who love righteousness and hate iniquity, for the crimes against humanity, against freedom and against law in the days when Germany deemed it safe to defy the world.

The Hun has failed, but there can be neither peace nor safety in any country unless and until the Hun and all his breed are put in the place where they cannot even try to succeed.—The Globe.

A PROPOSITION IN ETHICS.

The news comes from Milan, an excellent news centre, that the Kaiser is pulling all the wires he can at the Vatican to have the Pope attempt to impose peace on the Allies by moral coercion. The price offered for the rescue of Germany by this instrumentality is the restitution of Belgium. The thief will give up the stolen goods if he be allowed to go unpunished. As a proposition in ethics, we wonder how it will strike Benedict XV.—New York Evening Sun.

KAISER SICK OF WAR?

On the whole, despite the moral difficulty, we are inclined to think the Bourse Gazette's story is true. Germany is heartily sick of the war, but nobody half so sick as the Kaiser. A speedy end has become imperative if total ruin of the empire is to be averted. The only hope of securing any advantage or semblance of advantage from the mad adventure is to divide the Allies, buy off one or more, so that "compensation" may be exacted from the others.—New York Sun.

THEORY AND PRACTICE.

An engineer named Frank Koester has written a book, "Secrets of German Progress," which the publisher advertises as contrasting the American commonwealth with German democracy. It seems that Germany has an infinitely better government, better journalism and art and finance, better schools and industrial methods, better methods of housing and city planning, a superior navy, and that the German Army is the "greatest organization which has ever been perfected by the brain of man." Mr. Koester was born, raised and educated in Germany, but has lived the last twelve years in the United States, and he is not going back to Germany. Why? Doesn't he believe his own stuff?—Collier's.

SIR ROBERT BORDEN'S RETURN

Arrangements which have been made for the reception of Sir Robert Borden in Montreal seem to indicate that it will be carried out in a manner worthy of our guest, worthy of our city, and worthy of the historic occasion. Every citizen can help in making the event a success. We must, of course, see to it that it is not sullied by any tinge of politics, taking that much abused word in its narrower sense. Sir Robert is a good party man, but he is first and foremost a Canadian. He has visited the heart of the Empire not as leader of the Canadian Conservative Party, but as the representative of Canada. In this character he has been received there by his Sovereign and by men of all parties, and we of all parties will greet him on his return.

The message of loyalty to King and Empire which he brought to Britain was no new thing in Canadian history. The phrase of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, "When England is at war Canada is at war," made this clear beyond all cavil or contradiction. But Sir Robert has emphasized this statement under new and stirring conditions. The Empire is engaged in the most dreadful war of all history, and Canada from Atlantic to Pacific, from the Arctic to the Great Lakes, has elected to stand by the Mother Land in her fight for international honour, for justice and for civilization.

Sir Robert Borden comes back to Canada after personal contact with the men who, in the council chambers and in the trenches, are bearing the burden and heat of the day. He is doubtless charged with weighty messages to Canada as to the part which we are to continue to take in the struggle. The reception which we tender him is a guarantee that any new obligations to which we are called will be loyally met, and that Canada, like the rest of the Empire, will never sheathe her sword until the enemy is overthrown and the cause of right and justice celebrate its triumph.—Montreal Herald-Telegraph (Liberal).

Entire Wheat Crop Is Safe

Frost Damage Only Local—Heavy Crop of Oats

WINNIPEG Sept 3 The weekly crop report, which is issued by Dominion to-day up to last Saturday, shows that all through southern and central Saskatchewan, also western Manitoba, from five to ninety per cent of the spring wheat had been cut at that date with practically no frost damage. The crop was too far advanced to be hurt by light frosts prevalent. Threshing general by this time.

In the north, where the crop is very heavy the advance is not so great, but even in very late districts fifty per cent was safe at the end of last week.

Quite as much progress has been made further west in Alberta. Edmonton and Vermilion sub-divisions report wheat mostly all in stook, threshing was about to start, and no damage from light frosts. In Calgary district all fall wheat and most of spring cut last Saturday, threshing in full swing and conditions generally ideal.

Manitoba divisions, except in northern districts, report start on oats. Along the international boundary the crop is heaviest in twenty years.

In northern divisions some damage from frost, where the crop is very late, and heavy damage by frost in Interlake. At Dauphin, Man., about eight degrees of frost on August 25th affected twenty-five per cent. of the wheat and oats. Around Prince Albert a heavy frost on August 24th has done a good deal of damage to crop on the low lands, where perhaps fifty per cent will be affected.

Melfort reports fifteen per cent. loss from frost on August 25th, and at the Swan River sub-division suffered more or less severely, including Ethelbert and Minitonas district. This 9 per cent represents but a trifling percentage of the total crop area and the outstanding feature of the report as a whole is the unanimity with which agents make returns of no frost damage at all.

Generally speaking the entire wheat crop is now safe.

CONSTIPATIENTS
Read This—

It must be remembered that the bowels should move freely once a day to ensure perfect health. When such is not the case the poisonous waste material is absorbed into the system, thus producing a self blood poisoning.

The causes of Constipation are many and varied. Among the more common may be mentioned poor stomach digestion, a deficiency of bile in the intestines, a lack of secretion in the bowels, and a want of the natural muscular contraction of the intestines from above downward.

Abbey's Effervescent Salt, sold everywhere at 25c and 60c, stimulates and restores the stomach digestion, increases the flow of bile into the intestine, causes a flow from the intestinal glands, and restores the natural downward action of the intestines, rendering it easy to secure a free action of the bowels, which is one of the most important requisites to health.

HINTS TO HOUSEKEEPERS

MANY good housekeepers who are good cooks, never think of measuring ingredients when baking, but just put in a handful of this and a pinch of that, and things turn out beautifully. It is well, however, to have some guide on which one can fall back in case of necessity. This is especially true with young and inexperienced housekeepers.

Now that the preserving season is on, it is sometimes difficult to know just how much sugar is required for a certain amount of fruit, and how much boiling is necessary to properly preserve it. The following time-table clipped and pasted into the scrap book may come in handy many times when in doubt:

Cherries	5 mins.	6 ounces
Raspberries	6 mins.	4 ounces
Blackberries	6 mins.	6 ounces
Strawberries	8 mins.	8 ounces
Plums	10 mins.	8 ounces
Pears (whole)	30 mins.	10 ounces
Pears (halved)	20 mins.	8 ounces
Preplant (sliced)	10 mins.	10 ounces
Peaches	8 mins.	6 ounces
Tomatoes	20 mins.	None
Gooseberry	8 mins.	10 ounces
Quince (sliced)	15 mins.	10 ounces

Hamburg With Olives.

Place 1 pound hamburg steak in baking pan, to form a layer about an inch thick. Put through grinder a small onion and 10 or 12 bottle stuffed olives, spread evenly to top of steak and pour over same 1 cup of tomato catchup. Bake in hot oven 15 minutes after adding ¼ cup water. Onion may be omitted if one doesn't care for it. This is a very appetizing dish. Will some one try it and report result?

THE REAL PILLAR OF SOCIETY

IT'S a good rule that works BOTH ways. When the farmer supports the home merchant and the home merchant supports the farmer, you have the real pillar of society. The farmer would have a poor farm if he did not have a good home market. And the merchant can't build up the home market alone. He must have the support of the farmer. Likewise, the merchant has poor business when the SERVICE he gives is not the best possible. The trade must be even. The services must be mutual. So, the picture you are looking at NOW should be true from both ends. If it doesn't quite suit you this way, turn the paper around. NOW you have seen the REAL PILLAR OF SOCIETY. The farmer upholding the merchant and the merchant upholding the farmer.

FARMERS' ICE HOUSES

MORE and more, farmers are building ice houses and installing ice for their own use. It is certainly a great convenience in any home during the hot weather when at times it seems almost impossible to keep things pure and sweet. Those of us who are not lucky enough to have ice, however, need not despair after all as it is possible to readily to have useless refrigerators. This style of refrigerator, we believe, has been described in Farm and Dairy before but many of our readers may not have noticed our description.

One commendable feature about the useless refrigerator is, that it is not necessary to purchase the commercial type as a handy man can construct one at home. The framework of the cupboard is constructed from four posts and the inside is lined with wire netting to make it proof against mice and flies. On the outside of the cupboard, so that it will not touch the wire netting, burlap is tacked. For the top, a galvanized iron tank the exact size of the cupboard can be made by any tinsmith. This tank should be four to six inches deep. The bottom of the tank forms the top of the cupboard.

This tank is kept full of water, the burlap is soaked thoroughly and wool jeg cloths hung around three sides of the tank. These cloths carry water from the tank to the burlap and the evaporation of the water serves to cool the inside of the refrigerator.

ROLL OF HONOUR
SECOND LIST

SEVERAL thousand officers and employees of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company enlisted for active military duty with the Canadian Expeditionary Forces, and the majority of them are now in Europe, bravely battling for Canada and the Empire.

As particulars of Army Reservists are not available, these official lists of those who have given up their lives for their country, or been wounded in action, are necessarily incomplete, and do not therefore indicate fully the extent to which the Company's officers and employees have participated in the great struggle.

Public Charges Are Not Beneficiaries of Life Assurance

A census was taken about a year ago of the inmates of alms houses, of prisons, of asylums for the care of the helpless, in an eastern state. It was found but three of the occupants of these institutions, who numbered altogether over fifteen hundred, had been beneficiaries of life insurance.

It was somebody's neglect that forced the public to pay higher taxes in order to take care of nearly all these people.

Life insurance limits the needs of poorhouses, prisons, old folks' homes. Life insurance, therefore, reduces the needs of the State in maintaining institutions for the care of the needy.

The man who has sufficient insurance to take care of his own future if he reaches old age, and of his dependents, should anything happen to him, is doing his duty, not only to his family, but to his State.

WOULD YOU CONSIDER

a proposition making provision for your family in the event of death, or, if living, provision for old age?

German Regulations Governing Canadian Prisoners of War

Information Furnished to Sir Edward Grey—Each Camp Has Canteen Where Articles May Be Bought—May Write Twice a Month—The Scale of Pay Allowed by the Germans to Men Employed According to the Regulations.

OTTAWA, Sept. 4.—There has been received in Ottawa from the Colonial Office, London, a despatch dated August 5th, ultimo, respecting the treatment of prisoners of war in Germany, which is of special interest for many Canadians. It appears that in January, Sir Edward Grey, Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, transmitted to the United States Ambassador in London, a list of questions relating to the treatment of officers and other ranks of His Majesty's forces now held as prisoners of war in Germany to which the United States Ambassador in London was requested to endeavour to obtain answers through the United States Ambassador in Berlin.

The report by the German military authorities in reply, says:

Where Prisoners Are.

"The prisoners are lodged partly in buildings which already existed, partly in newly-erected huts, in rare cases in double-lly tents adapted to winter use. All rooms, including the tents, can be heated. The cost of heating and lighting is borne by the military authorities. Each prisoner receives a palliasse, and, according to the season and local climate, one to three woollen blankets. Officers have bedsteads as well as some of the men.

"Officers and officials of officer-rank have to pay for their clothing out of their money-allowance. All other prisoners of war return their uniform which, in case of need, is replaced by items of uniform drawn from stocks of booty. Where this does not suffice, prisoners are supplied with the necessary clothes from other sources. These consist of a jacket, necktie, trousers and cap. Besides these, shirts, stockings, pants and boots or shoes are provided. Prisoners of war who wear civilian clothes are fitted out correspondingly. If the prisoners do not possess overcoats these are provided, or blankets in their stead.

May Write Twice Monthly.

"Each prisoner is allowed to write one post card a week and two letters a month with a lead pencil. The length of the letter must not exceed six pages of ordinary letter-paper, in the case of officers; four pages in the case of men. The use of pens or pointed instruments and of ink is prohibited because a large number of cases have proved where, by this means, communications have been made or received, which have escaped the inspection. No limitations are placed on the receipt of letters. All letters despatched can be written in English, these, as well as letters arriving, pass through the censor's office. Prisoners' letters are forwarded as quickly as the work of censoring permits. Particular consideration is shown in this respect, to cases of urgent private affairs.

"Prisoners may have money sent to them unrestrictedly, but are not allowed to keep large sums in their possession. These must be given to the commandant for safe-keeping in the camp treasury, or, if the prisoner wishes it, to a bank; a receipt is given in return. The money is then paid out in instalments as needed.

Presents Permitted.

"Prisoners may receive presents provided that they do not consist of things unsuitable for delivery to prisoners of war, or of objects of luxury, or of alcoholic drink. The following, for instance, tobacco, chocolate, sardines, marmalade, etc., may be sent to them from home. Food may also be sent to them from places in Germany, with a few exceptions, such as bread, chocolate, etc.

"Provision is made for services of the various religious denominations.

"Wounded and sick prisoners receive the same treatment as wounded and sick German soldiers. Convalescents remain in the care of the hospital till they can be transferred to the camp.

"Each camp has a canteen where objects of common use, plain provisions and tobacco can be had at fixed moderate prices.

Scale of Pay.

"Concerning the scale of pay, special proposals have been made to the British and other enemy governments. Officers have to pay for their maintenance out of the pay allowed them by the enemy State. It is required that out of this sum a sufficient and nourishing, and, so far as possible, varied ration should be provided at a price for each man enough to suffice for small daily needs such as washing, etc. No provision for lodging need be made by officers out of their pay. Wine and beer are allowed within moderate limits.

"Men below the rank of officer are employed, in accordance with the principles of Article 6 of the Hague Convention (resolutions of war on land), and receive from the wages they have earned a part varying with their services. When working for the State they receive at the lowest, the same amount as German soldiers receive as supplementary pay for work usually done.

The Daily Menu.

"Prisoners receive the same bread allowance as German troops in billets. Three meals a day are given, namely, in the morning, coffee, tea or soup; at mid-day, an ample meal of meat and vegetables. The meat may be replaced by a correspondingly larger allowance of fish; in the evening a substantial and ample meal.

"In all circumstances, the daily fare must be calculated on a basis to suffice for the prisoners proper nourishment. The commandants who are responsible for seeing this requirement fulfilled, are, therefore, authorized to increase according to need the meat or vegetable factors, and are thus enabled to proportionate the food to the modes of life of the different nationalities.

"At the canteens the men can buy, at fixed low prices, a variety of provisions, objects of personal use, etc. The sending of articles of food to the prisoners from homes as well as from places in Germany, is permitted; likewise the sending of tobacco, cigars, etc.

Pay For Medical Corps.

"Officers and men of the medical corps are attached for professional work in the prisoners' camps and in hospitals which contain prisoners. They receive the following monthly pay. Officers of field officers' rank, 750 marks (about $170); captains, 525 marks; lieutenants, 380 marks (board and lodging not included), sergeants, 80 marks, corporals, 32.50 marks; lance corporals and privates, 17.50 marks, board and lodging included.

Civilian Prisoners.

"British civilian prisoners receive the same treatment as prisoners of war. The prisoners are lodged in huts fitted with steam heating and electric lighting. They have beds or wooden frames with palliasses and a number of woollen blankets for sleeping. Washing, underclothing, etc., are obtainable at the canteens. Clothing is replaced either by clothes sent from home or by purchases made through the camp commandants. The receipt of letters is unrestricted. The despatch of written communications is permitted six times a month, including 2 letters, each of 2 pages. Consignments of money are subject to no restrictions as regards the amount or the number. The receipt of gifts of a useful character is permitted, only luxuries in the way of food or drink are forbidden. Sick persons are taken into hospitals and receive the same treatment as Germans. Persons suffering from any gastrinal ailment are allowed to cater for themselves in the camp buffets.

Not Forced to Work.

"No utilization of the prisoners for labour has till the present taken place, except by voluntary desire. The living is the same as for prisoners of war."

Seized With Paralysis Could Not Walk

Most Extraordinary Cure Effected by the Use of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food

To have the nervous system paralyzed, to be unable to walk and scarcely able to talk, and then to be completely cured, is not a usual experience, but Mr. Hyatt tells in this letter what he passed through. Doctors told him that his case was hopeless, and when they gave up he turned to Dr. Chase's Nerve Food and obtained complete cure.

Mr. Avery Hyatt, blacksmith, St Anns, Lincoln Co., Ont., writes: "I am a blacksmith by trade and ten years ago became afflicted with paralysis. I could not walk or read or write, and could talk with difficulty, so that it was a hard matter to understand anything that I would say. Being only a young man I was nearly discouraged. Two doctors told me it was brought on by overwork, and that my case was hopeless.

"One day my father read about Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, and advised me to try it. I bought 12 boxes, and when the fifth was used I saw that I was getting better. By the time the 12 boxes were used I was cured. I am well and strong and working every day, thanks to Dr. Chase's Nerve Food."

This statement is certified to by Mr. Elmon J. Hodgkins, J.P.

No ailment is more dreaded than paralysis. And yet how few people realize that paralysis of the nerves is only the natural result of neglected nervous troubles.

At first you do not sleep well, have nervous headaches or indigestion, find yourself easily irritated and annoyed, can hear noises which in good health you would never notice. You do not consider yourself sick, and yet you lack the usual energy and vigour and feel out of sorts.

Restore the nerves by using Dr. Chase's Nerve Food. 50c a box, 6 for $2.50. All dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Limited, Toronto.

THE VACATIONIST RETURNS

In Chic Tailored Suit and Princess Frock

HIGH COLLARS AGAIN FAVORED

New York, September 4

The first crisp days of September find our Avenue taking a new sprightliness not that it is ever particularly dull or deserted, but there is a different spirit. Summer visitors have come their various ways, and New Yorkers have returned, ready to take up city life again with its endless activities. The shops are showing the fall and winter fashions, the dressmaking establishments have lost their lazy calm and delivery wagons are loading up and starting off on trips from shop to home with creations of furrier, tailor, modiste and shoemaker.

The Dignity of Tailored Garments.

Soft, fluffy things do very well for warm days, one relaxes and is cool, happy, and delightfully feminine. But with the first days of fall, the tailored dress or suit is donned with a feeling that is almost akin to relief. American women, especially, find the tailored suit or dress becoming and satisfying. There is a trimness of line and a feeling of being well dressed that lends her added dignity.

6607—6521
Smart Suit Lines.

Princess Frock High in Favour.

Strong rivals to the coat and skirt are the Princess frocks of serge, gabardine or whipcord; serge leads. While trim and straight, these do not follow exactly the lines of the Princess of some seasons back; they are usually belted, sometimes panelled and yoked. Belts play an important part this season. Few costumes but show them; on the Princess they are often merely half belts, that is, they extend from side front to side back, separated by a panel at front and back. This flat, smooth appearance in front and back is one of the new notions this season; all pleats and gathers are confined over the hips.

Many of the tailored coat suits have belts of patent or shiny motor leather. These are often ornamented harmoniously with applique designs of coloured suede; the soft, dull harmony of the suede makes effective contrast and lends a distinctive touch to the suit. One sees, also, belts of the same material as suit or dress, piped sometimes with suede, patent leather, or a vivid colour; the effect is smart and attractive. Buttons, too, lend their aid in bringing in the bright touch of contrast that is required this season in our smart dark costumes.

There are some wonderfully attractive buttons of galalith, mother of pearl rimmed with colour, bright green, blue or rose, and numberless other novelties in form and colouring. On an imported suit of tweed displayed recently in one of our smart shops, I noticed some extremely smart buttons of woven leather, with loops of leather for the shanks; they blended beautifully with the dark brown mixture of the tweed and were really the chief attraction of the suit. These, however, are decided novelties and probably cannot be purchased separately as yet. Coloured buttons are used sparingly; one or two at the closing of coat or blouse or one or two on the girdle are sufficient.

THE CANADIAN GOVERNMENT offers Suggestions for fruit preserving

In an advice entitled "Canning Fruit," Canada Food Board, Department of Commerce, suggests methods best for preserving purposes certain kinds of peaches, St. Lawrence Granulated Sugar and 40 pounds Bradstreet Crown Lustrous Red Cling.

To this we can only add that many of the most successful makers of preserves have for years obtained their sugar from their grocer—the St. Lawrence Extra Granulated Sugar (Pure Cane).

It is well known that the sugar of organic purity as sugar will surely crystallize, as in the jam and St. Lawrence Sugar which contains 99.95 per cent. has never failed to give satisfaction everywhere and all refer for their sugar. The best way to buy it is in the original refinery sealed packages 2 or 5 lbs cartons, 10, 25 and 100 lb bags.

BE REFLECTORS

THERE is a wonderful steam engine used in Egypt for irrigation purposes. It is worked by steam yet no fuel but the sun's rays produces the needful heat. Immense radiators concentrate the sunlight on the water. These radiators move automatically as the sun's position changes. They are always gazing into the sun's face and reflecting its radiance. In this manner, the life-giving water is pumped by the steam engine, and goes out to refresh the parched land.

Like these great sun-mirrors of Egypt, it is our privilege and duty to be reflectors of the sunlight of God's love. Those who are striving to gaze upon God's face and reflect His love, are doing much more than they think to encourage others to do likewise. It is a significant fact too that the great Egyptian reflectors keep their faces always turned to the sun while daylight lasts. It is not enough for us to have loved and trusted God in the past, but it is our duty to trust Him every day.

The following lines contain much practical truth, which might well be applied to our thought of letting in the sunlight of God's love, and then reflecting it:

It pays to wear a smiling face,
And laugh our troubles down
For all our troubles wait,
Our laughter or our frown.
Beneath the magic of a smile
Our doubts will fade away,
As melts the frost in early spring
Beneath the sunny ray.

It pays to make a worthy cause,
By helping it, our own,
To give the current of our lives
A true and noble tone.
It pays to comfort heavy hearts
Oppressed with dull despair,
And leave in sorrow-darkened lives
A gleam of brightness there.

It pays to give a helping hand
To eager, earnest youth,
To note with all their waywardness
Their courage and their truth;
To strive with sympathy and love
Their confidence to win.
It pays to open wide the heart
And let the sunshine in.—M.M.R.

CHILDHOOD DANGERS

No symptoms that indicate any of the ailments of childhood should be allowed to pass without prompt attention. The little ailment may soon become a serious one and perhaps a little life passes out. If Baby's Own Tablets are kept in the house minor troubles can be promptly cured and serious ones averted. The Tablets can be given to the new-born babe as well as the growing child. Thousands of mothers use no other medicine for their little ones. They are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

SPENT IN WARS.

According to "The Progress of Glasgow," published some years ago by the Glasgow Chamber of Commerce, rather more than a third of the period between 1141 and 1815 was spent in wars between France and the inhabitants of Britain. In the 23 distinct campaigns, spread over the 674 years, 188 years was spent in struggles between France and England, and after the Union of the Crowns 64 years were occupied in wars between France and Great Britain. The Union thus involved Scotland in 64 years of conflict with her former partner in the "Auld Alliance."

NO NEED FOR SEWAGE ODOURS

Information Should Be of Interest to People Residing in the Vicinity of Peterborough's Proposed Sewage Disposal Plant

Now that Peterborough has embarked upon a scheme of sewerage disposal, the following remarks, as contained in a paper entitled "Modern Methods of Sewage Disposal," and read by Mr. George W. Fuller, consulting sanitary engineer of New York, at the fourth annual congress of the Canadian Public Health Association, held in Toronto yesterday, should prove of local interest.

The particular interest of the paper lay in the forecast of the possibility of odourless sewage disposal under pads 6x7, 2 compressors 6x4, 6 sponges sludge system."

It consists in blowing air through sewage sludge for a month or two until the sludge in the presence of oxygen has developed on its surface certain bacteria which bring about a reduction of soluble organic matters.

Plan a Success.

It was stated that a removal to 95 to 97 per cent. of the bacteria from the sewage was possible by this treatment. At Milwaukee the plan has proved a decided success so far. So long as the sewage reaches the tanks in fresh, raw condition, the bacteria and solid matter can be removed without objectionable odor" said Mr. Fuller.

Mr. Fuller remarked that the problem of odours in regard to sewage disposal was simply one of proper treatment.

He stated that different places required different treatments, and that a plan of disposal successful in one city might fail in another.

Economic Possibilities.

The economic possibilities of sludge removed from sewage by the Dickson process now being installed in Birmingham, England, was discussed. Mr. Fuller stated that as a fertilizer Mr. Fuller stated that as a fertilizer worth at least six dollars a ton.

The treatment consists of mixing the sludge with one half of one per cent. of ordinary yeast. Fermentation follows and the sludge can after 24 hours be separated from the liquor dried and pulverized.

AN OFFICIAL EXPLANATION

To the Editor of The Examiner.

Dear Sir,—I notice a paragraph in last night's Review, headed "Fair Play." If the writer of it will kindly let me have the name and address of the woman referred to, I will look into the matter and give full particulars regarding it.

Two Interesting Letters From Local Soldiers

gour of the 2nd Battalion, who was wounded in June last, and is now in St. John's Convalescent Hospital, Malvern, England. Pte. Mongour, who was a member of the Boys' Department of the Y.M.C.A., says:

Dear Mr. Galley,—Just a few lines in answer to your welcome letter which I received, and thank you very much for the dear old maple leaves you sent me. I have a hard time to hang on to them. When I opened the letter all the fellows rushed to get one, but I managed to keep two of them. I am getting on fine now. My wound has healed up, but I walk very lame, but I must have patience. I hope I am fit again to do some more hopping around in the gym. I missed it very much after I enlisted. It was doing me so much good. It was too bad about Lieut. Ackerman. He is a fine fellow and did his full share at Ypres and the rest of them. We are all willing to go back and help our chums to keep up the name of the dear old Maple Land. Well, Garnet, I would like to tell you some of my experiences, but I think I will have to close now. I will write again soon. Give my best regards to all the boys. Good-bye.

Sincerely yours,
Chas. Mongour.

MR. JAMES CROWLEY WAS AWARDED $60

James Crowley of Dunrs was awarded $60 and costs from the G.T.R. by Judge Hoyle in the Division Court. The suit as detailed yesterday, arose out of an injury to the plaintiff's horse when it broke through the railway fence on the Crowley farm near Nassau on May 28th.

Mr. D. O'Connell appeared for Mr. Crowley.

something for the box in which the tobacco is kept. Collecting lists are paid for out of the Club's funds from headquarters in London, and here I may remark that much of the printing is done absolutely gratis, in view of the patriotic nature of the fund.

Mr. Soden and Mr. W. H. Dunsford stated in connection with the Overseas Club funds that they were both members of the Club and had been members for years, paying a membership entry and regular monthly fee. There were thousands of men through out the Empire who were members, and, naturally, there was a large fund at the headquarters in London.

If paid out of the Tobacco Fund, how does every cent go for the purchase of tobacco for soldiers, as stated on the collecting lists?

Reply—Absolutely all the tobacco and cigarettes now being sent to the Canadian soldiers are bought in Canada. I pledge the Club's word on this, and further refer you to Messrs. Tuckett, Ltd., Hamilton, who have the order.

Who pays Mr. Private's expenses, special trains etc.

Reply—Mr. Private's expenses are paid for by Mr. Wench from the Club's own resources. With regard to the special train this was paid by Mr. Private, himself.

Mr. Benison stated that Mr. Private had to take a special train to Hamilton, or miss an important engagement. The circumstances necessitating this was personal, and it was an expense personally paid.

Mr. Benison provided the following additional information:

The amount of tobacco we are sending for 25 cents is its own answer to the question "How can tobacco be bought cheaper than in retail store?"

The facts are as follows:

(a) That all excise raw leaf and inland revenues are rebated by the Canadian, English and French Governments.

(b) That this tobacco is manufactured and packaged in the first Manufacturing-in-Bond warehouse ever established in Canada, and which was established by the Overseas Club in conjunction with Messrs. Tuckett, for the purpose of getting this tobacco to the soldiers at a minimum price.

(c) Tobacco that we are buying at 38c a pound costs the wholesaler 99c a pound cost, the wholesaler 99c a pound to even place it in his store.

(d) By arrangement with the British War Office all parcels are carried and distributed free by the Army Service Corps, a privilege you may be sure that would not be granted if there was any doubt as to the nature of the fund.

Under Government Supervision.

(e) Tobacco is packed into shipping cases at a bonded warehouse in Cutler Street, London, under the supervision of War Office Clerks, and is by them handed over to the Army Service for delivery; in fact, it is well to point out here, that the tobacco, from the time it enters Canada in raw leaf condition, never leaves Government supervision, either here or in England, until it is delivered into the hands of the soldiers in the trenches.

(f) We do not guarantee delivery to any particular man at the front, neither does any other organization not even the Post Office. You have only to consider how absolutely impossible it is to guarantee delivery of a special package to a special man to realize how futile it would be for the Overseas Club to give any firm promise of this nature. However, we do undertake to deliver parcels to specified individuals and records show that in 95 per cent. of the cases these parcels are actually by the men they are intended for.

(g) The parcelling of the tobacco is done by the manufacturer. The addressing of post cards is done, in the majority of cases, by the organization conducting the fund. For instance, in Peterborough, Mr. Cranfield, we shall ask you and the other members there to undertake this work of addressing post cards. I would like to point out that not a cent of the subscriptions to the Overseas Tobacco fund is touched by Mr. Private or any other individual. All the money is paid into the banks who have positive instructions not to pay out to anybody but to Mr. Wrench in London.

Most Satisfactory Statement.

The members of the local branch of the Club volunteered the statements after the letter was read that they were completely satisfied with the exactness of the arrangements which delivered every twenty-five cents worth of tobacco to the men at the front.

Local Collectors.

Followed the organization for collecting subscriptions.

Mr. Soden stated that Mr. R. W. Travers was out of the city, but he had reported the following arrangements for collections at several factories:

At the Matthews-Blackwell factory Mr. John Seymour will be the collector.

Brinton Carpet Co., Mr. Moule.

Campbell Flour Mills Co., Mr. W. Austin.

Quaker Oats Co., Mr. Ed. Carr.

Peter Hamilton Co., Mr. John Maynard.

Colonial Weaving Co., Mr. Coulthard.

Mr. Soden's personal report was as follows:

Wm. Hamilton Co., Mr. Roy Turner.

E. J. Turner and Sons, Mr. J. J. Turner, Sr.

Peterborough Lock Co., Mr. E. Howson.

He had yet to get in touch with Mr. Wm. Ackerman, Adam Hall, E. R. Wilson, Thos. Kinnear and Rishor's, Ltd. Messrs. White and Ackford agreed to look after the collections at their shop.

Mr. W. R. Morris reported as follows:

Abl McDonald Est., Mr. John Foley.

Peterborough Cereal Co., Mr. Meyers stated that the foreman would look after the details.

G. Walter Green Co.,—Mr. Wood.

Peterborough Fuel and Cartage Co.—Mr. Wedlock.

Baker Planing Mill—Mr. Leighton.

The Peterborough Hardware Co. is to be canvassed by a member of the Club.

Mr. W. H. Dunsford reported:

Auburn Woolen Mills—Mr. Turner.

Bonner-Worth Co.—Mr. Melton.

De Laval Co., Mr. Pitchford.

Perkins Inoe Co., Mr. Mulholland.

Barrie's, Ltd.—Mr. Thos. Barrie.

In addition to these Mr. Killaly, who was present at the meeting, promised to support the Fund, and to detail the duties to one of the staff; Mr. Frank Linton made a similar promise from the Peterborough Lumber Co.

A Publicity Committee.

The following members were appointed a Publicity Committee—W. R. Travers, E. D. Kerr, R. J. Soden, L. J. Killaly, W. H. Dunsford, Frank Linton, E. L. Goodwill.

Mr. Cranfield is secretary of the local branch of the Overseas Club, and Mr. H. Dearle was appointed to assist in the general secretarial duties. Mr. Dearle also agreed to act as the fund collector at the C.G.E. Works. In fact Mr. Soden had only to throw out suggestions and they were immediately and enthusiastically snapped up.

Mr. W. R. Morris suggested that a local treasurer be appointed to receive at regular intervals the various collections throughout the city. This would enable the Club to ascertain the amounts of the contributions. This step will be taken up at the next meeting.

Method of Contributing.

Donations will be altogether voluntary, in lump sums, or preferably as regular offerings. If a business man desires to contribute one dollar a month, more or less, all he has to do is to instruct his banker to debit his account monthly for that month for any period he designates; or an employee in a factory may either give to appointed collector or authorize the office to retain a certain sum out of each "pay."

However, the details of the arrangements will be published more minutely in the near future. At present the Overseas Club desires to impress upon the public the integrity of the Club's fund, its economy and despatch in supplying regular supplies to the soldiers at the front, and the possibility of every person assisting in a laudable movement by small donations.

COULD OUR MILITIA BE ORDERED ABROAD?

Former Premier Says They Can Be Sent to Spain to Defend Canada —Controversy is Waged

Can the Militia of Canada be ordered abroad? This is a question which is being discussed by a great many military and legal men, and it would seem that opinion is divided on the point. Not a few hold that the Constitution of Canada will permit of the Active Militia being transported for service to any part of the Empire, or any part of the world, for that matter, if such action is deemed necessary for the defence of Canada. On the other hand, it is contended that the Canadian Militia may be sent not further than across the borders of its own Dominion.

The whole question appears to be a matter of interpretation of the various clauses, pertaining to the placing of the Militia on active service, in the Militia Act. It is distinctly stated that the Governor in Council may place the Militia, or any part thereof, on active service anywhere in Canada, and also beyond Canada, for the defence thereof, at any time when it appears advisable so to do by reason of emergency. It will be seen that the above is open to the interpretation that the Militia may be ordered to Flanders if it appears advisable by reason of emergency. This viewpoint is somewhat confirmed by the official statement and actions in Great Britain to the effect that the way to prevent an invasion of German troops is to send British soldiers to French and Belgian soil.

Europe Not Thought Of

Sir Wilfrid Laurier has stated that the Constitution of Canada allows of the Canadian Militia being sent "to Spain." There is no doubt that the spirit of the Act dealt with the contingency of border trouble, when it might be expedient to march into adjoining territory, and not to any contemplated necessity to send troops to far-away Europe. At any rate, and no matter what the interpretation of the Militia Act may be, the Constitution demands that when the Canadian Militia, or any part thereof, is placed on active service, a proclamation shall be issued for the meeting of Parliament within fifteen days (if not in session).

Unlikely to Invoke Act

It is not likely that the Canadian Militia would be ordered abroad in the present instance, mainly because a very considerable proportion of the Militia has already responded to the call for overseas volunteers. The shirkers who wear no uniform have frequently been heard to remark when a Militia regiment is on parade: "Why don't these husky fellows go to the front?" It might surprise these shirker-critics to know that the Canadian Militia regiments are constituted of raw men who have had no previous experience, but who desire to get into shape for eventualities most of them ready and willing to go when their business and domestic affairs can be put in order. Therefore it is not at all likely that the important clause in the Militia Act will be a bone of contention, as Canada will be able to provide all the men it would be proper to spare from her own shores.

An artilleryman invalided from the front relates that in one 6 inch German shell there was discovered a brass candlestick whilst another contained a bicycle crank and a quantity of broken glass.

All British guns at the front are periodically examined by experts, and it is said that though some of these weapons have now fired many thousands of rounds they are for all practical purposes as good as when they left the shops.

THE FIRST CANADIAN WOMEN'S HOME GUARD. The initial step in the organization of an all-Canada Women's Home Guard has been taken by some patriotic members of the female sex in Toronto. The picture shows one of the leading ladies in the movements photographed in the Highland uniform of the Black Watch plaid. Only a few have so far appeared in Scotch garb.

GOT THE TRAIN STOPPED.

Two Attempts Were Dismal Failures, but the Third Won.

When the late Robert Bonner purchased Maud S. he sent her to Charter Oak park to be trained. One day a friend of Mr. Bonner left New York to visit him at the park, but found that the train did not stop at that station. The conductor was polite, but said that he could not go against orders.

At New Haven a halt was made and Mr. Bonner's friend tried to bribe the engineer with a ten dollar bill, but in vain. He was then told that Charles P. Clark, the president of the road, was on the train, and he went to him and politely requested that the stop be made.

"Why don't you see the conductor?" asked Mr. Clark.

"I have, but he will not disobey orders."

"Why not then go forward and bribe the engineer?"

"I tried bribery at New Haven, but it would not work."

The absence of evasion was the best policy. Mr. Clark not only gave orders to have the train stopped at Charter Oak, but promised some day to see Maud S. He had witnessed the attempt at bribery, and the frank confession of the offense seemed to please him.

Common sense is the knack of seeing things as they are and doing things as they ought to be done.—Stowe.

CHEF SLEW 35 GERMANS; NOW BACK AT OLD JOB

Examiner Special:

WASHINGTON, D. C., Sept. 2.—Fleury Metz, who boasts that he killed thirty-five Germans in hand to hand conflict, participated in seven engagements, was wounded often by rifle fire and bayonet thrusts, and was for eight months in a hospital severely wounded, has returned to Washington, and is back at his old job as assistant chef of the Shoreham hotel.

He decided to take a vacation in July, 1914, and go back to see his parents in Languedoc. He arrived at Cherbourg July 24, and scarcely had time to reach the Mediterranean shore when the bugles sounded, the call to the defence of the nation. Aug. 6th he was in a railway car with thirty-nine other men and each man wore the uniform of the Three Hundred and Twelfth infantry.

The second day after arriving at St. Mihiel, Fleury Metz began to find out what war was. He thus describes his experiences:

"We were in the midst of a giant tornado. We knew nothing, except that there were Germans everywhere, that the air was blue with choking smoke, that a constant roar dinned in our ears, that officers hurried to and fro, shouting commands nobody could hear, and that Frenchmen were dying all around us.

Long Processions of Dead.

"We saw them carried away, endless processions of them, but where we did not know. We had lost all sense of direction, all sense of everything except that somehow the guns in our hands and the bayonets at the end of them would save us if nothing else could.

"I don't remember anything of my first fight, except that when it was over I noticed that my right hand was covered with blood. There—you see the scar—a Mauser just grazed me. That was my first wound—I have six of them, besides a tooth missing, where a German bayonet struck home. That German's bayonet will do no more damage.

"I fought seven engagements. Often I was wounded by rifle fire, but never seriously. In those days there were no trenches and rifle fire wounds were common. All we had for shelter were mounds of earth we threw up ourselves with spades if we had them, or with our bare hands and bayonets if we did not. But we were always advancing or [illegible]. There would have been no use for trenches then.

"It was in the seventh fight that I got the wound that put me in the hospital for eight months. You want to see it. There!"

Discloses Deep Gash.

Off came the white jacket, revealing a deep gash in the right shoulder newly healed.

"That was by a shell at Vitry le Francoise. We were advancing, I and my squad of twenty-one men—for I am a corporal you know. Suddenly came the scream of an obus, and we all dropped on our faces. Then—but how shall I say it? It burst within a yard and a half of me. You cannot imagine what that is like. I don't know how long I lay there before they picked me up, with my shoulder torn to shreds. But I was lucky. Six of our twenty-two men were killed outright by that shell and all were wounded—some much more than I.

"I was six days at the poste de secours before they could get transportation for me to the base hospital. There were so many wounded that day—out of 2,200 men in our battalion only 1,200 came back whole. And for all that we lost our position, and were chased back by the Germans.

"We have lost many battles, but what does it matter? In the end we shall win. You might think we should be discouraged after seeing so many dead, so many crippled, so many husbands and sons lost to their families. But I tell you it is not so. Not one of my comrades was ever disheartened. The more we were beaten the more we felt we must conquer.

Hundred Villages in Flames.

"Have you ever seen fireworks at night? Ah, but you can't picture a hundred villages in flames. I have seen it, monsieur. Clear out to the horizon on three sides of us one night were nothing but gigantic fires. Those Boches are devils. Some of the fires they set by hand and others with incendiary shells. One could see them—a long trail of sparks, which would suddenly burst into shooting flames, and drop on the roofs of our innocent French peasants. There was wind that night, and every house that caught fire set the torch to a whole village."

"Our battalion was advancing before Verdun one day over ground that we thought the artillery had cleared. But the Germans had machine guns hidden under piles of hay and brush. When we ran up to within fifty yards of them they cut loose.

"There is no way of dodging a machine gun. They spray bullets like a hose. All the men in our first rank were wounded or killed, but the second rank avenged them. That night I carved five notches on the butt of my musket."

ALLEGED SPY WAS OSTRACIZED

Lincoln Not Wanted by Alimony Club of New York Jail.

NEW YORK, Sept. 4.—Ignatius T. Lincoln, wanted in England on the charge of being a German spy, is not wanted in the select circle of the Raymond Street Jail Alimony Club. He was blackballed and remoged to a cell distant from the aristocratic confines of the alimonists.

Pending extradition for alleged forgery, the alleged spy has been lodged in the Raymond street jail. Victims of matrimonial upheavals remembered he had been honoured with a seat in the British Parliament, had held a position on the board of

Trades and Labour Notes

(By the Official Scribe.)

A fair-sized group of delegates was on hand this week when J. J. Hartley called the meeting to order. Probably some of the delegates helped to swell the record gate on Empire Day at the Toronto Exhibition, and did not return in time for local labourite deliberation.

Hon. Mr. Crothers, Minister of Labour sent regrets at his inability to secure a machine gun for exhibition at Riverside Park on Labour Day. He had interviewed General Dundonald, who had informed him (the minister) that even Toronto's simular request had to be turned down owing to the absence of the engine of death at headquarters. Could not even send a motor ambulance. All that are made are on the job. No specimens.

There was a report made the Council regarding a factory of the city which, having secured a contract for the manufacture of ammunition cases, was paying its help 17c per hour. Discussion waxed warm over this, it being pointed out that as there was a wood-workers' charter in the city, it was up to that union to see after it. Anyway the Minister of Labour, likewise the newly knighted Minister of Militia is to be communicated with. It only remains that it action is taken by the Department of Labour that those complaining of treatment will stand pat. Some while ago the Trades and Labour Council took up the cudgels on behalf of certain female employees working in a local factory twelve hours per night, six nights a week, for about two or three dollars; and this on Government work. Well when it came to a show down, the kickers, apparently afraid of losing the little they did get, preferred to suffer in silence. Anyway the agitation proved fruitful because wages were advanced, the same probably as the city pavement workers who are now doing a little better than when these notes were last published. Alderman Green reporting at the Board of Works meeting that larger pay than 17c per hour was being now handed out by the Warren Paving Company; also the nine-hour day.

The sports programme for Monday next was presented by the sports committee. It made good reading. No faults of theirs if the sport lovers do not have their fill on Monday next.

Mayor Buller is to be one of the judges of Young Canada.

Union men in the garb of the nation's defenders will be admitted free.

Prizes on view in R. J. Soden's window.

It's up to all labour men to swell the ranks of their parade which leaves the Central Park at 1:30.

The booth on the grounds will be run by local ladies for patriotic purposes.

The Bartenders' and Brewery Workers' excursion is not part and parcel of the Council's programme. It is a counter attraction. Let's hope that fine weather will give both a crowd.

Next meeting September 16th.

THE MAYOR WARNS GREEDY LANDLORDS

Will Not Be Allowed to Add to the Distress of Soldiers' Dependents.

HAMILTON, Sept. 4.—Landlords and agents who are distressing the families of soldiers, refusing to wait until the dependents receive their government money, were given a severe warning by Mayor Walters. The wives of volunteers have been distressed on several occasions. Mayor Walters threatened all parties that the next case he would send down the police and have the furniture restored to the house.

No doubt that is just what her mother and grandmother did, too, for Redpath has been Canada's favorite sugar for three generations. Absolutely pure, and always the same, it has for sixty years proved the most dependable for preserving, canning and jelly-making.

HOUSE FLY'S DIARY

If a female housefly could and would keep a diary, it would, according to Dr. M. P. Ravenel, formerly of the University of Wisconsin, run something like this:

Nov. 2, 1913. Went into winter quarters.

April 20, 1914—Barely lived through the winter. Came out of winter quarters and laid my first batch of eggs—120 in number—in a manure heap.

April 21, 1914—My first 120 eggs have hatched.

April 22, 1914—Larvae have undergone first molt.

April 23, 1914—Larvae have undergone second molt.

April 25, 1914—Larvae transformed into pupae.

May 1, 1914—One hundred and twenty full grown flies, 60 of which are females.

May 3, 1914—Laid my second batch—120 eggs—this time in the filth of an uncared for privy.

May 13, 1914—One hundred and twenty flies came from my second batch of eggs. Laid my third batch in a kind of neighbor's garbage can.

May 21, 1914—Left alone and unhindered, by September 10 my descendants will be "too numerous to mention."

THE PREACHER'S FRUIT

(By Peter McArthur)

Once upon a time—you see I know how to begin a story in the right way—a barefoot boy danced by the roadside and shouted gleefully. It was in Canada, back in the nineteenth century, in the pioneer days. The little boy was healthy and freckled and what he lacked in clothes he made up in the kind of body one would have inside of clothes. And he was very, very happy. In fact he was so happy that a passing friend stopped to ask him the cause of it all.

"Hurray!" shouted he of the freckles.

"Why so happy?" asked the friend.

"The preacher is coming to dinner!"

"I didn't know you were so fond of him."

"I ain't, but whenever the preacher comes to dinner we always have peach preserves."

It really is not much of a story and I am giving it on account of its archeological interest and not because it is so very funny. It dates back to the days when people merely knew that peaches are the best of fruits and had not discovered that Canada is the best place to raise the very best of them. The woman who was fortunate enough to get some from a sheltered orchard or from a lone tree that was so fortunately situated that it escaped the frost put up a few to have for such special occasions as the visit of the preacher. In those days the minister was a much more welcome visitor on the farm than the agent of get-rich-quick concerns and mining promoters and there is a moral to that if I only had time to work it out. Because peaches were saved for such extra special occasions a tradition has grown up about them in many parts of the country. Some housewives, otherwise very bright, and a credit to the Farmer's Institutes to which they belong, consider it an extravagance to preserve peaches unless they get them at sacrifice prices. Yet these same women will pay from ten to fifteen cents a quart for currants and berries that need far more sugar to do them up than the already sweet peaches. As peaches usually come in eleven-quart baskets you will find if you divide the price by eleven that peaches cost less per quart than any other fruit. But because they were once so great a luxury house-wives are slow to realize that they should have more of them than of any kind of fruit, for they are both the cheapest and the best. There is no reason why every farmer's wife in the districts where peaches cannot be grown should not buy them as freely as they do other fruits and have them not only when the preacher comes to dinner but when the boys and girls come home from the city and at all other times when they want to have something luxurious on the table.

Also it should be remembered that for eating from the hand the peach is the best fruit of all, but you should use for this purpose only the peaches that you buy in the full light of day. Once upon a time, or perhaps I should say "Once upon another time," a newly arrived Irishman went out with a friend to steal peaches. It was dark and Pat had been told to grope along the branches for the fruit. Presently he whispered, "Moike!" His friend answered "Phwat!" "Has pitches got legs?" "Naw." "Then begobs I've swallowed a straddle bug."

Recent buying of Chesapeake and Ohio stock has been of high character. Owing to industrial activity bituminous coal is moving more freely. As the greater part of the traffic hauled by the Chesapeake consists of soft coal, earnings are naturally showing gratifying increase, with reasonable assurances of further increases. The company is also beginning to show the beneficial effects of the policy inaugurated by the bankers more than a year ago that from $2,000,000 to $3,000,000 a year for the next five years be ploughed back into the property before payment of dividends.

Interests identified with the Western Maryland feel assured that the corner has been turned. Earnings are now showing material increase. Traffic has shown substantial growth owing to the operation of the Connellsville extension which connects the Western Maryland with the New York Central. Income has also grown as a result of the improvement in the coal business, the company owning considerable coal property. Miscellaneous income has expanded and the statement of earnings for August is expected to be very favourable.

The insurance companies of Great Britain have been called upon to pay out large sums in respect of losses during the war. The industrial life insurance companies of Great Britain and Ireland alone have already disbursed approximately $3,750,000 to the beneficiaries of about 12,000 soldiers and sailors who have been killed.

A reliable authority estimates war loss cost life insurance offices all over the Empire $27,500,000.

Crucible Steel's Contract.

Crucible Steel's Co.'s new order for high explosive shells, valued at more than $10,500,000, calls for 159,500 shells.

The most important feature of the contract is the supplying of 11,000 15-inch lyddite shells for the British navy. Each of those shells is worth $500. The 11,000 consequently will cost $5,500,000.

In addition the Crucible Steel Co. will supply 75,000 5-inch lyddite shells, each shell costing $20; 55,000 6-inch shells, costing $25 each; 10,000 9-inch shells, worth $50 each, and 3,500 12-inch shells worth $280.

The company is vigorously carrying out plans to make the Harrison plant the greatest torpedo manufacturing establishment in the country. The company has a new design torpedo, its own patent. Each torpedo costs between $10,000 and $11,000.

The capacity of the plant is being rushed on that line of work, the output going largely to Great Britain.

General Electric Dividend.

Canadian General Electric directors have declared the regular quarterly common dividend of 1 3-4 per cent., and the regular half-yearly of 3 1-2 per cent. on the preferred. Both are payable October 1.

Not Worried by Exchange.

American manufacturers who have taken war contracts do not seem worried over the exchange situation. They are confident that there will be a satisfactory adjustment within the next two weeks. A representative of one company that has taken upwards of $5,000,000 of business said the other day in New York:

"A great fuss is being made by Wall Street over the exchange situation which is hardly warranted. Did any banker with knowledge of the situation believe that exchange could be held up with the balance of trade running in our favour at the rate of $2,000,000 or more each week. The situation will be satisfactorily adjusted. It is not a question of can they do it. They simply have to do it. We must give Great Britain a little time and credit to work on. We do not need to worry about being paid. England can pay her debts if the war lasts five years or why worry after only one year of war. Germany is the country that has the big financial problem to solve. Europe must buy our goods and he will find a way to pay for them.

ORIGIN OF THE PEACH

(By Peter McArthur)

It is sometimes a mistake to consult the Encyclopædia before writing an article. The misinformation in the world is much more picturesque than the facts. Facts have a tendency to make one prosy and commonplace.

I am moved to make these observations because for some time past I had been meditating a little essay on the peach, and I remembered a story I had heard or read somewhere about the origin of this most delicious fruit. According to the best of my information and belief up to fifteen minutes ago the peach originated in Spain after the Moorish invasion. The African conquerors brought with them bitter almonds with which to poison their arrows and planted the pits in the newly conquered country so that they might have an unfailing supply of this method of spreading Moorish Kultur. As they had no Hague Tribunal in those days there were no international agreements against using poisoned weapons—and it probably wouldn't have mattered much if there had been.

But to resume. According to the pretty tale I remembered, the bitter almond developed in the salubrious climate of Spain and lost its ancient character, ceased to be poisonous and became a peach. With this as a text I had proposed to show that the peach is the one really good thing to the world has ever derived from war, but alas, I needed a few more facts and I consulted the Encyclopædia where I found no mention of my pretty Spanish tale. I found both Greek and Latin references to the peach and a learned discussion as to whether the fruit had been first developed to perfection in Persia or in China. The only reference to the bitter almond was a note to the effect that Darwin regarded the peach as a relation of the almond. It seems that in China they not only raise peaches of excellent quality but also of unusual shapes. They have a flat peach in which the ends of the pit are merely covered by the skin while the sides have a thick layer of fruit pulp. They also have another kind which is long and crooked and as nearly as I could learn from the dictionary all kinds of peaches are good eating. It is pleasing to know that even the Encyclopædia gives Canada the credit for raising the best peaches of all, and now they are at their best.

FULL VALUE FRUIT

(By Peter McArthur)

The war is developing in many people a higher ideal of citizenship—a clearer conception of the fair play that should prevail in all the business of the country. Even our government is preaching honesty, thrift and economy work that was usually left to the pulpits. In addition to this, business organizations are adopting a more public spirited attitude and giving more attention to the service they should render for the money they receive.

A notable example of this new spirit is being shown in the fruit industry of the country, which has now reached so large a proportion. The organizations having charge of the marketing of tender fruits (berries, currants, plums, peaches, etc.) are particularly anxious to place the work of marketing and distribution on a plane of patriotic public service. It is their aim to distribute their products so widely that there will be no waste and at the same time to place them on the market in such a way that the consumers shall have full value for their money. During the past few months I have had an opportunity of investigating the business of marketing plums and peaches. I have interviewed growers, dealers and retailers and have no hesitation in saying that except in a few centres where there are local ordinances that interfere with the business of marketing outside products it should be possible for consumers to get better service than they have ever had in the past. They should get good canned peaches and plums at a fair price and in order that they may be able to do so I am going to make them an unusual offer.

If you feel that you are being overcharged for peaches, plums or tender fruits kindly send the facts to me, stating price paid and date of making the purchase and the district from which fruit was secured. This will enable me to learn exactly what the price of fruit should have been where you bought at that particular time. If you have been overcharged I shall write and let you know so that we may expose anyone who is trying to make [illegible] this year when every [illegible] doing his part for the good of [illegible] country.

Funeral of The Late Mrs. Green

The funeral of the late Mrs. George Green took place from the family residence, 284 Rogers street, Rev. W. H. White of St. Luke's church, officiated. Service was conducted in St. Luke's church, also at Little Lake cemetery. The floral tributes which were profuse evidenced the high esteem in which the deceased was held in the community.

Voice of The People

Editor Examiner:

Dear Sir, I am glad to see "Fair Play's" letter in last night's paper and to know that the unfairness of things is being made known to the public. How a woman with three sons at the front doing their "bit" and husband out of work cannot get help. While a man whose wife says she would sooner be German than English, gets steady work all the time.

Thanking you, Mr. Editor for your valuable space.

Yours truly,
English-Canadian.

Campbellford Crowd Stopped The Game

CAMPBELLFORD, Sept. 3.—The first of the home-and-home games in the simcoal intermediate O. A. L. A. between Campbellford and Weston played here this afternoon, resulted in a score of 13 to 6 in favor of Weston. The crowd was the largest that ever witnessed a lacrosse match in Campbellford.

The game was called before time was up as the crowd surged on the field, and therefore Mr. Ernie Doyle had to stop the play with the score standing as above. Campbellford objected to Mr. Doyle as referee from the very first, but in spite of that he was here to act, and his conduct of the game was such as to rouse almost the whole crowd to indignation which rose to such an extent that they rushed on the field in protest in the last quarter and the game had to be stopped.

WEDDING BELLS

MACEACHERN—BRANDON.

Tuesday afternoon at two o'clock a very pretty wedding took place at St. Andrew's Church, Fenelon Falls, when Miss Fannie Clarke Brandon, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Brandon, was united in marriage to Dr. M. T. MacEachern, superintendent of Vancouver General Hospital. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Mr. Lord. The church was beautifully decorated with flowers. The graceful bride, who was given away by her father, wore white satin draped with Limerick lace, court train trimmed with seed pearls, and the usual veil and coronet of orange blossoms. She carried a shower bouquet of roses and lily of the valley. She wore the groom's gift, a diamond ring of diamonds set in platinum. The bridesmaid was Miss Elizabeth Spratt of Lindsay, who wore a pretty dress of hand painted mauve chiffon over yellow satin, leghorn hat trimmed with black velvet and mauve flowers, and carried a bouquet of sunset roses. The maid of honour was Miss MacEachern, the groom's sister, of Toronto, who wore a pink satin dress trimmed with cream lace, and a large leghorn hat with a pink mount. Dr. Faid, Toronto, was groomsman. The ushers were Col. Fee of Lindsay and Mr. Fred Warne, Fenelon Falls. The wedding march was played by Mrs. Harry Mann, of Ottawa, and during the signing of the register Miss Alice Hand sang "Perfect Love."

After the ceremony the bridal party and guests drove to the residence of the bride's parents, Brandonhurst, where a reception was held, after which the guests sat down to a wedding dinner. The happy couple amid showers of rice and confetti, left on the five o'clock train for points west. The bride's going-away gown was Belgian blue silk poplin, with a smart black and white hat.

Congratulatory telegrams were received from the staff of the Vancouver General Hospital, Sir Sam Hughes and W. N. Campbell, Winnipeg.

Among the out-of-town guests were Lady Hughes, Mrs. Byron Green, Lindsay; Miss Nora Tomlinson, Brantford; Mr. R. C. Brandon and Mr. Charles Junkin, Camington; Mrs. Kiteley, Toronto; Miss Baxter, Buffalo; Mrs. W. H. Robertson and Miss M. B. Robertson, of Peterborough; Mr. Edward Clarke, Buffalo, and Mr. and Mrs. McKinnon, Woodville.

Dr. and Mrs. MacEachern will reside in Vancouver.

SLAIN PASTOR A GERMAN SPY

Rev. Kayser, of Gary, Had Wired Bernstorff in Code.

GARY, Ind., Sept. 3.—That the Rev. Edmund Kayser, shot dead in his home here a week ago before his death was in communication with Count von Bernstorff, the German Ambassador to the United States, was asserted by investigating officials. This development overshadowed announcement of Chief of Police Heintz that he knew the names of the murderers and that he expected to arrest them within 24 hours.

Evidence of Kayser's connection with the German Ambassador, which has convinced the police here that he was an important cog in the German secret service in this country, was given by a telegraph operator who said he had often talked with Kayser about the war. His name is withheld.

FRENCH AVIATION COMPASS HAS MANY NEW FEATURES

For aerial navigation purposes a special compass has been developed in France which is much more easily read by an airman than is the ordinary instrument and which accurately indicates any variation from a predetermined line of flight, instead of merely pointing northward. Properly it consists of a common compass set in an enclosed case which is surmounted by a cylinder holding two vertical dials and an indicator. The card, or inner of these dials, and the pointer, move together, and the deviation of the latter from the zero mark on the outer dial shows the extent to which an aeroplane is being driven off its proper course. The outer dial is adjustable, and at the beginning of a voyage its zero point is turned to correspond with the contemplated line of flight. When the indicator and card coincide with the zero, the machine is headed in the correct direction. A connection between the horizontal compass and the axis of the vertical pointer and card actuates the two latter members.—Popular Mechanics Magazine.

WIRELESS IN BRUSSELS BAFFLING TO GERMANS

BRUSSELS, Sept. 2.—The German authorities here have offered a reward of $500 to any one who will give them information regarding a mysterious wireless telegraph station, which is known to be working in some private house in Brussels. For nine months the police have searched in vain for the apparatus, which is believed to have revealed to people in Brussels a lot of important war news.

Y. M. C. A. NOTES

Saturday afternoon, September 11, at 2 o'clock, the members of the Boys' Department will meet at the Y.M.C.A. for the purpose of distributing flowers to the sick of the city. Last year the boys carried one hundred and forty bouquets of flowers to the sick and aged, and they feel that they were well repaid for their time. The boys would like the citizens to cooperate with them in this good work of bringing cheer to the sick and sad by sending in to the Y.M.C.A. the names of any who are sick, also a bouquet of flowers.

Every member is asked to report at the building not later than 1.45 Saturday afternoon to help to distribute the flowers. Will the parents of the boys kindly co-operate with the staff in making flower day a success?

The Bible study certificates awarded by the National Council of the Y.M.C.A. have arrived and can be had by those who were successful in passing their examinations.

The Boys' Gymnasium and Bible Classes will commence Monday, September 20th. Mr. Roper, the new physical director, has arrived, and is anxious to have the boys come and make his acquaintance and receive information about the work for this season.

VIOLENT CANNONADING ON WESTERN FRONT

Great Damage Done By French Aviators

Forty Birdmen Participate in Raid on Saarbrucken Military Works Doing Much Execution---Sixteen Canadians Have Been Decorated for Gallant Conduct at Festubert and Givenchy.

PARIS Sept. 7.—Forty French airmen bombarded Saarbrucken military works and did tremendous damage.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 6.—The Baltimore American and other papers referring to the Hesperian sinking says Germany has broken every phase of her promises less than a week after they were made.

BERLIN, Sept. 6.—All Roumanians in Switzerland have been ordered to report to the colours.

PETROGRAD, Sept. 6.—The President of the Duma to-day declared that even though Petrograd and Moscow were taken by the Germans, Russia will fight till the last enemy is off Russian soil.

PARIS (French Official) Sept. 6.—Violent artillery fighting continues. French aeroplanes have bombarded several German barracks with success.

LONDON, Sept. 6.—The Turks made heavy assaults on British positions in Gallipoli, but all were repulsed with terrific losses.

PETROGRAD, Sept. 7.—Germans are again seriously menacing Riga by land and sea.

LONDON, Sept. 7.—Sixteen Canadians were decorated for gallant conduct at Festubert and Givenchy.

PARIS, Sept. 7.—Violent cannonading continues along the entire western front.

BERLIN, Sept. 7.—Germany is experimenting with new giant biplane to replace Zeppelins.

ATHENS, Sept. 7.—A big Turkish destroyer has been sunk by an Allied submarine.

PETROGRAD, via London, (Official) Sept. 7.—Near the Village of Linden on Thursday night our troops recrossed to the left banks of the Dwina and drove the Germans back from the river, a desperate fight ensuing.

There is no change in the Riga district.

On the front between Vilna and the Niemen position remains unchanged. Near Grodno fierce fighting was resumed Friday morning.

Our troops entered the town and captured eight machine guns, took 150 prisoners. This success enables the neighbouring troops to fall back unmolested.

Little Progress Now Against the Russians

The Driving Power of Austro Germans Against Slavs is Nearly Exhausted or Else the German Leaders Are Preparing to Dig Themselves in for the Winter.

LONDON, Sept. 5, 9:50 p.m.—Either the driving power of the Austro-German offensive against Rpssia is nearly exhausted or the German generals have decided that their armies have penetrated the Russian Emperor's dominions as far as is considered safe and are preparing to dig themselves in for the winter. This is the opinion expressed by military writers here.

Certainly very little progress is now being made, and at many points the German offensive against Russia is nearly exhausted of the German generRussians. From the Gulf of Riga to Grodno, Field Marshal Von Hindenburg's armies are at a standstill, having apparently made no attempt to cross the Dwina after carrying the bridgeheads at Linnewada and Friedrichstadt.

To the north, southwest and south of Vilna, the fall of which has been predicted for some days, the Germans are faced by very strong Russian forces who, by their offensive, have made it dangerous for the Germans to push their way westward, or to the south of them.

OBJECT NOT OBVIOUS.

The Germans, on the other hand are massed between Grodno and Karin on the Brest-Pinsk Railway. Their immediate object is not obvious unless they are looking for a good offensive position in which to hold the Russans throughout the winter.

Further south the Russians are offering fresh resistance, as they are firmly established in a fortified area of which Rovno and Dubno are centres; while in Galicia they still hold the line of the Sereth River.

With the rainy season a few weeks off, the opposing armies, especially in the marshy region of the centre, cannot hope to carry on the operations much longer, and some German inspired reports state that the Germans and Austrians are already weakening their armies in Russia by moving troops to the Serbian, Roumanian and western fronts.

In the western zone the heavy artillery of the allies is still bombarding the German lines, doing all the damage possible and trying to break the morale of the German troops, but so far there is no indication of a general offensive.

PETROGRAD, Sept. 5.—(Via London, 11.10 p.m.)—The War Office to-day made public the following official communication concerning the warfare on the Black Sea and in the Caucasus:

"A Russian motorboat has captured two Turkish sailing vessels laden with provisions, and made prisoners of their armed crews in the region of Melasguerd.

"Encounters took place between our scouts and Turkish cavalry near the villages of Alkhisa and Khoulika."

ATTACK FAILURE

French Official Statement Says Night Attempt by the Turks Came to Naught

LONDON, Sept. 7.—Paris reports that the Turks have delivered an unsuccessful night attack against the British positions near the Anzac region, but beyond that no news has been received of the operations in the near east.

To-night's official French statement says:

"In the Dardanelles, since the end of August, quiet has prevailed on the southern zone of the peninsula. In the north zone several engagements of quite a spirited nature have enabled the British troops to realize some progress.

"There has been renewal of the reports from Athens of cessation between the Turks and Germans at Constantinople and of depression among the Turks as the result of heavy losses in Gallipoli. No evidence of this however is to be found among the Turkish troops, who are reported to be fighting with all their old stubbornness."

PROLOGUE.

"Who is she?"

"How did she get there?"

These are the questions the Fool asked of the caretaker of the venerable castle of that high handed old robber baron, the first of the Rothhoefens.

And these are the questions the interested reader starts to ask and keeps on asking while Author McCutcheon develops one of the most mysterious, humorous and sprightly stories that ever came from his pen.

"Who is she?"

"How did she get there?"

Read on and you will find much entertainment as well as the answer to these pertinent queries.

CHAPTER I.

I Make No Effort to Defend Myself.

I AM quite sure it was my Uncle Rilas who said that I was a fool. If memory serves me well he relieved himself of that conviction in the presence of my mother—whose brother he was—at a time when I was least competent to acknowledge his wisdom and most arrogant in asserting my own. I was a freshman in college, a fact—or condition perhaps—which should serve as an excuse for both of us. I possessed another uncle, incidentally, and while I am now convinced that he must have felt as Uncle Rilas did about it, he was one of those who suffer in silence.

I assume, therefore, that it was Uncle Rilas who orally convicted me, an assumption justified to some extent by putting two and two together, after the poor old gentleman was laid away for his long sleep. He had been very emphatic in his belief that a fool and his money are soon parted. Up to the time of his death I had been in no way qualified to dispute this ancient theory. In theory, no doubt, I was the kind of fool he referred to, but in practice I was quite an untried novice. It is very hard for even a fool to part with something he hasn't got. Not until Uncle Rilas died and left me all of his money was I able to demonstrate that dead men and fools part with it.

In any event Uncle Rilas did not leave me his money until my freshmen days were far behind me, wherein lies the solace that he may have outgrown an opinion while I was going through the same process. At twenty-three I confessed that all freshmen were insufferable and immediately afterward took my degree and went out into the world to convince it that seniors are by no means adolescent.

My uncle's original estimate of me—as a freshman, of course—was uttered when I at the age of eighteen picked out my walk in life, so to speak. After considering everything I decided to be a literary man—a novelist or a playwright, I hadn't much of a choice between the two, or perhaps a journalist. Being a journalist, of course, was preliminary, a sort of makeshift. At any rate I was going to be a writer. My Uncle Rilas, a hard headed customer, who had read Scott as a boy and the Wall Street News as a man without being misled by either, was scornful. He said that I would outgrow it; there was some consolation in that. He even admitted that when he was seventeen he wanted to be an actor. There you are! said he.

I argued that novelists make a great deal of money and playwrights, too, for that matter. He said in reply that an ordinarily vigorous washerwoman could make more money than the average novelist, and she always had a stocking without a hole to keep it in, which was more to the point.

Now that I come to think of it, it was Uncle Rilas who oracularly prejudged me and not Uncle John, who was by way of being a sort of literary chap himself and therefore lamentably unqualified to guide me in any course whatsoever, especially as he had all he could do to keep his own wolf at bay without encouraging mine and who besides teaching good English loved it wisely and too well.

My mother felt in her heart that I ought to be a doctor or a preacher, but she wasn't mean. She was positive I could succeed as a writer if I set my mind to it. She was also sure that I could be president of the United States or perhaps even a bishop. We were Episcopalians.

When I was twenty-seven my first short story appeared in a magazine of considerable weight, due to its advertising pages, but my Uncle Rilas didn't read it until I had convinced him that the honorarium amounted to $300. Even then I was obliged to promise him a glimpse of the check when I got it.

In course of time my first novel appeared. It was a love story. Uncle Rilas read the first five chapters and then skipped over to the last page. Then he began it all over again and sat up nearly all night to finish it. The next day he called it "trash," but invited me to have luncheon with him at the Metropolitan club and rather noisily introduced me to a few old cronies of his.

A month later he died. He left me a fortune, which was all the more staggering in view of the circumstance that had seen me named for my Uncle John and not for him.

It was not long afterward that I made a perfect fool of myself by falling in love. It turned out very badly. I can't imagine what got into me to want to commit bigamy after I had already proclaimed myself to be irrevocably wedded to my profession. Nevertheless I deliberately coveted the experience and would have attained to it no doubt had it not been for the young woman in the case. She would have none of me, but, with considerable independence of spirit and, I must say, noteworthy acumen, elected to wed a splendid looking young fellow who clerked in a jeweler's shop in Fifth avenue. They had been engaged for several years, it seems, and my swollen fortune failed to disturb her sense of fidelity. Perhaps you will be interested enough in a girl who could refuse to share a fortune of something like $300,000 (not counting me, of course) to let me tell you briefly who and what she was. She was my typist—that is to say, she did piecework for me as I happened to provide substance for her active fingers to work upon when she wasn't typing law briefs in the regular sort of grind. Not only was she an able typist, but she was an exceedingly wholesome, handsome and worthy young woman.

Somehow I was able to attribute the fiasco to an inborn sense of abyssmal that had always made me faint hearted, dilatory and unaggressive. No doubt if I had gone about it roughshod and fiery I could have played hob with the excellent jeweler's peace of mind, to say the least.

Still, some men, no matter how shy and procrastinating they may be—or reluctant, for that matter—are doomed to have love affairs thrust upon them, as you will perceive if you follow the course of this narrative to the bitter end.

In order that you may know me when you see me struggling through these pages, as one might struggle through a morass on a dark night, I shall take the liberty of describing myself in the best light possible under the circumstances.

I am a tallish sort of person, modestly homely and not quite thirty-five. I am strong, but not athletic. Whatever physical development I possess was acquired through the ancient and honorable game of golf and in swimming. In both of these sports I am quite proficient. My nose is rather long and inquisitive, and my chin is considered to be singularly firm for one who has no ambition to become a hero. My thatch is abundant and quite black. So there you are. Not quite what you would call a lady killer or even a lady's man, I fancy you'll say.

You will be surprised to learn, however, that secretly I am of a rather romantic, imaginative turn of mind. Since earliest childhood I have consorted with princesses and ladies of high degree—mentally, of course—and my bosom companions have been knights of valor and longevity.

At thirty-five I am still unattached and, so far as I can tell, unloved. For the past year I have done little or no work. My books are few and far between. My best work is done when the madding crowd is far from me.

A month ago, in Vienna, I felt the plot breaking out on me, very much as the measles do, at a most inopportune time for everybody concerned, and my secretary, more wide awake than you'd imagine by looking at him, urged me to coddle the muse while she was willing.

It was especially annoying coming, as it did, just as I was about to set off for a fortnight's motorboat trip up the Danube with Elsie Hazzard and her stupid husband, the doctor.

The fourth day of our delectable excursion brought us to an ancient town whose name you would recall if I were fool enough to mention it and where we were to put up for the night. On the crest of a stupendous crag overhanging the river, almost opposite the town, which isn't far from Krems, stood the venerable but unveneratedcastle of that high handed old robber baron the first of the Rothhoefens.

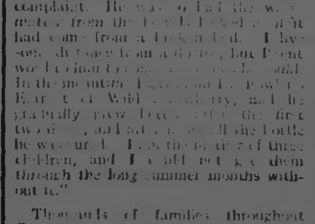
We picked up a little of its history while in the town and the next morning crossed over to visit the place. Its antiquity was considerably enhanced by the presence of a caretaker who would never see eighty again and whose wife was even older. Their two sons lived with them in the capacity of loafers and, as things go in these rapid times of ours, appeared to be even older and more sere than their parents.

It is a winding and tortuous road that leads up to the portals of this huge old pile. Halfway up the hill we paused to rest, and I quite clearly remember growling that if the confounded thing belonged to me I'd build a funicular or install an elevator without delay.

The next day instead of continuing our delightful trip down the river we three were scurrying to Saulsburg, urged by a sudden and stupendous whim on my part and filled with a new interest in life.

I had made up my mind to buy the castle!

At the end of three days I was the sole owner and proprietor of a feudal stronghold on the Danube, and the joyous Austrian who had owned it was a little farther on his way to the dogs, a journey he had been negotiating with great ardor ever since coming into possession of an estate once valued at several millions.



The Venerable Castle of That High Handed Old Robber Baron, the First of the Rothhoefens.

They Like Fat Girls In Tunis.

A Tunisian girl has no chance of marriage unless she tips the scale at 200 pounds, and to that end she commences to fatten when she is fifteen years old. She takes medicine and eats a great deal of sweet stuff and leads a sedentary life to hasten the process. Up to fifteen she is very handsome, but at twenty what an immense, unwieldy mass of fat she becomes! She waddles, or, rather, undulates, along the street. Her costume is very picturesque, especially if she be of the richer class. She is clothed in fine silks of resplendent hues of a bright red, yellow or green and wears a sort of conical shaped headdress, from which depends a loose white drapery. Turkish trousers and dainty slippers, the heels of which barely reach the middle of the feet, complete the costume.

CARDINAL GIBBONS ON CHURCH UNITY

Review of Strong Plea for a United Christendom.

Two Masterful Discourses Compared —Many Points of Likeness as Well as of Difference—One Shepherd, One Flock—One Head, One Body—One Heavenly Bridegroom, One Heavenly Bride—Children of the Church—One Holy Catholic and Apostolic Church.

[The matter under this heading is supplied by the Pastor Russell Lecture Bureau, who conduct the Brooklyn Tabernacle (unsectarian) Bible Studies, and who have arranged for its publication.]

New York City, Sept. 5.—Pastor Russell, at the New York City Temple, W. 63rd St., near Broadway), preached a strong sermon on the subject of Church Unity. He took for his text Matthew 23: 8—"One is your Master, even Christ; and all ye are brethren." He said in part:

Some time ago, in the Cathedral at Baltimore, Cardinal Gibbons delivered a remarkable discourse advocating a united Christendom. His strong plea contains many good thoughts, some of which I will now read:

"It was manifestly the desire of Christ that all His disciples should be united in the profession of one faith. In His admirable prayer before His passion He says: 'I pray for them also who through their word shall believe in Me, that they all be one, as Thou, Father, art in Me, and I in Thee, that they also may be one in Us; that the world may believe that Thou hast sent Me'; because the unity of the Church is the most luminous evidence of the Divine mission of Christ.

"Unity of government is not less essential to the Church of Christ than unity of doctrine. Our Divine Saviour never speaks of His churches, but His Church. He does not say, 'Upon this rock will I build My churches,' from which words we must conclude that it never was His intention to establish or to sanction various conflicting denominations, but one corporate body, with all the members united under one visible head; for as the Church is a visible body, it must have a visible head.

Unity of Faith and Government.

"Our Saviour calls His Church a sheep-fold. 'And there shall be one fold and one Shepherd.' What more beautiful or fitting illustration of unity can we have than that which is suggested by a sheepfold? All the sheep of a flock cling together. If momentarily separated, they are impatient till reunited. They follow in the same path. They feed on the same pastures. They obey the same shepherd, and fly from the voice of strangers. So did our Lord intend that all the sheep of His fold should be nourished by the same sacraments and the same bread of life; that they should follow the same rule of faith as their guide to Heaven; that they should listen to the voice of one Chief Pastor, and that they should carefully shun false teachers.

"His Church is compared to a human body. 'As in one body we have many members, but all the members have not the same office; so we, being many, are one body in Christ, and every one members one of the other.' In one body there are many members, all inseparably connected with the head. The head commands; and the foot instantly moves, the hand is raised, and the lips open. Even so our Lord ordained that His Church, composed of many members, should be all united in one supreme visible head, whom they are bound to obey.

"The Church is compared to a vine, all of whose branches, though spreading far and wide, are necessarily connected with the main stem, and from its sap they are nourished. In like manner our Saviour will have all the saplings of His vineyard connected with the main stem, all draw their nourishment from the parent stock. In fact, our common sense alone, apart from the revelation, is sufficient to convince us that God could not be the Author of various opposing systems of religion. God is essentially One. He is Truth itself. 'God is not the God of dissension, but of peace.'

"I see perfect harmony in the laws which govern the physical world we inhabit. I see a marvelous unity in our planetary system. Each planet moves in its own sphere, and all are controlled by the central sun. Why should there not also be harmony and concord in that spiritual world, the Church of God, the grandest conception of His omnipotence, and the most bounteous manifestation of His goodness and love for mankind?

"Hence, it is clear that Jesus Christ intended that His Church should have one common doctrine, which all Christians are bound to believe, and one uniform government, to which all should be loyally attached. Where, then, shall we find this essential unity of faith and government? I answer, confidently, Nowhere save in the Catholic Church."

Pastor Russell Agrees With Cardinal.

I am pleased to say that I can agree most heartily with Cardinal Gibbons' presentation in almost every particular. Unquestionably sectarianism is wholly out of accord with the teachings of the Scriptures. St. Paul declares that it is a proof of carnality, of a fleshly mind, of an unspiritual state. (1 Corinthians 3:3-7.) All Christians—both Catholic and Protestant—are coming to realize this fact, although but a few years ago some claimed that sectarianism led to a greater zeal and energy in the Divine service.

All conversant with history will understand what I mean when I say that God has been pleased to permit an illustration—first, a united Christendom, and second, a divided Christendom. For long centuries there was in Europe practically but the one Church—Roman Catholic. The results were not all that could be desired. That unity brought neither secular nor religious education, nor did it bring to the world the Millennium. Rather, throughout that long period ignorance and superstition held sway. During the last few centuries we have had the division of Christendom into various sects and parties. While the results are not satisfactory, not what the Word of God prompts us to desire and expect, nevertheless this divided condition has certainly tended toward greater freedom of thought, greater liberty from ignorance and superstition.

Which is the True Church?

Agreeing with all the Scriptural promises laid down by Cardinal Gibbons, we must, nevertheless, dispute his conclusion that this one Church, which Christ declared He would build upon the rock of Truth, and which would grow to a glorious Temple composed of living stones, of which St. Peter was one, is the Roman Church. Equally we disagree with our Baptist, Presbyterian, Methodist, Lutheran, and Congregational systems when they each profess to be the one Church. Our contention is that all who turn their backs upon sin, accept the Lord Jesus as their Saviour, approach the Heavenly Father in full consecration through Jesus and who receive the begetting of the Holy Spirit of God—all such are sons of God, whether or not they join the Roman Catholic, the Congregational, the Methodist, the Presbyterian, or other human systems.

Furthermore, our contention is that not one of these human systems, Catholic or Protestant, is recognized of God. They are all human institutions—originated by men and maintained by men. Sometimes good men and sometimes bad men have had to do with their organization and maintenance. Indeed, we hold that each consecrated believer is a child of God wherever he may be—inside or outside of all denominational walls or creeds.

In the Scriptures the true Church of Christ is described as "the Church of the First-borns, written in Heaven." (Hebrews 12:23.) Will our Protestant friends claim that their church roll corresponds to "the Lamb's Book of Life"? (Revelation 21:27.) Would Christians of any denomination dare to make such a claim? Most assuredly, No! We all realize that at the very most the various sects and parties of Christendom are composed of wheat and tares; and that, so far as human judgment can discern, the tares are vastly in the majority.

Christian Union Never Lost.

From this standpoint we perceive that the great masses, Catholic and Protestant, never were the Church of Christ. They have been children of this world, not spirit-begotten New Creatures in Christ, not living stones in the Temple, not branches of the True Vine, not members of the "little flock." They have been worldly people with religious sentiments and good desires, who misunderstood the Bible teaching that only the sanctified are in Christ Jesus, called to be saints. (1 Corinthians 1:2.) What these large numbers of well-meaning but mistaken people have done in the way of organizing churches, lodges, banks, etc., has had nothing whatever to do with the great organization which God effected eighteen centuries ago and which has persisted as a unit ever since.

The True Church has never been divided. Each member is united with the Lord, the Head, and through Him to every other member of His Body, which is the Church. In this one Church there has always been maintained one Lord Jesus, one faith—His Word of Promise—and one baptism—consecration into His death.—2 Timothy 2:11, 12; Ephesians 4: 4-6.

Does some one say, "Where is the history of this Church?" We answer, in the words of the Apostle, "The world knoweth us not, even as it knew Him not." (1 John 3:1.) The world of Jesus' day were the professed religionists. Yet they knew not the great Redeemer whom God sent, and many crucified Him. Similarly, all down the Gospel Age, the great religious teachers of the various systems have not recognized the members of the Body of Christ.

This is the very point which St. Paul emphasizes. He declares that the fact (and the philosophy of the fact) that the Church are members of Christ is to the world—both the religious world and the irreligious world—a hidden Mystery. It is outside of their theory, their understanding. Hence it is that the most saintly characters, both Catholic and Protestant, have been martyrs, as Jesus was, as St. Stephen was, as all the Apostles were, as all the faithful were during the intermediate centuries; and as some yet may be if an outward union be effected such as once prevailed—in the Dark Ages.

Counterfeiting the True Church.

If we now declare that to a certain extent the True Church has been counterfeited by both Catholics and Protestants, let no one suppose that we wish to speak unkindly. We do not charge that these counterfeits of the True Church were made intentionally, but merely that the Church, coming under the control of brilliant minds not spirit-begotten, followed their misrepresentations of God's Word.

For instance, the average Roman Catholic does not know that he is not a member of the Church. But Cardinal Gibbons will not deny the fact, neither will any other ecclesiastic. Their teaching, most explicitly, is that the Pope and the other religious instructors compose the Church, and that the people are the children of the Church. Thus the Catholic Church appropriates the words of Jesus respecting the "little flock," etc., and applies them to the clergy, not to the congregation. This is the secret of Papacy's great mistake. In their ecclesiastical system they have a counterfeit of the True Church. Because the Scriptures declare that the Lord's faithful "little flock," "the Church of the living God," will reign with Christ, therefore Papacy claims the right to reign with Heavenly authority over the kingdoms of earth. Papacy's endeavor to carry out this erroneous reasoning has led to many grievous persecutions and wars.

If Papacy has the counterfeit of the True Church and the True Reign of Christ, what does the Bible teach respecting the genuine? This: That the experiences of the unknown, despised, saintly followers in the footsteps of Jesus constitute their preparation for a share in the Kingdom with their Lord. When the full number of the elect Church, predestined of the Father, shall have been gathered out of the world and glorified, then God's Kingdom shall be established on earth, and they shall be joint heirs with the King of kings—Jesus Christ. His Kingdom will rule the world, not by guns and swords, not by burnings at the stake and inquisitionary torments, but by Heavenly power.

What our Catholic friends have is merely a foreshadowing of the Truth respecting the Church as a mother. The Scriptures teach that when Christ shall institute His Millennial Kingdom for the uplifting of mankind, He shall have a Bride—the Church (Revelation 19:9)—and shall figuratively beget children. That during the thousand years of His [illegible] shall be the Everlasting Father of everlasting life on the earthly plane, to Adam and all of his children who will accept it on the Divine terms. Then the Church will be the mother, the caretaker, of all mankind, to bring the willing and obedient up to full human perfection and life everlasting. All who refuse this grace of God will be destroyed in the Second Death.

Are There Protestant Counterfeits?

Although Protestants repudiate the Catholic idea that the clergy alone constitute the Church, nevertheless in many denominations we see this insidious error in a slightly different form. This is notably true in the Episcopal Church, which puts the government into the hands of the clergy and treats the laity to a considerable extent as children. The Methodist Episcopal Church follows closely the same line of procedure. The Presbyterian and Lutheran systems also differentiate the clergy from the laity even though the laity be given some recognition on the ecclesiastical board, usually for the purpose of securing financial or legal advice.

Congregationalists, Baptists, and Disciples most nearly recognize an equality between clergy and laity—that the entire Church of God is a Royal Priesthood. Yet even with these congregational bodies an attempt is made to separate clergy from laity and to hold all the spiritual power and authority in the hands of the clergy. In the Congregational Church this is done along financial lines through the Congregational Union. In the Baptist Church the Baptist Ministers' Association holds reins over the people and tells them whom they may call for a pastor—whom the Association will ordain and whom refuse. Thus the same spirit is manifested in all these earthly systems and distinctly differentiates them all from the One True Church and her Scriptural regulations, which declare, "All ye are brethren; One is your Master, even Christ"; and One is your Pope, or Father, even God.

We ask Cardinal Gibbons to consider with us the Scriptural teachings which we have presented; namely, that the Royal Priesthood is composed exclusively of saints, whether clergy or laity; that this One Church is indivisible; that the Heavenly Father, the Husbandman of this True Vine, permits none to remain as branches, members of the True Church, unless they bring forth the true fruit of the Vine. We ask the Cardinal to consider the Scriptural teaching that this saintly class is now the Espoused Virgin mentioned by St. Paul (2 Corinthians 11:2); and that these are now awaiting the completion of their number, when the Heavenly Bridegroom, at His Second Coming, will receive them to Himself. By the power of the First Resurrection they will be changed in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, to be like their Lord. Then, as the Scriptures declare, will come the Marriage of the Lamb. (Revelation 19:7.) Shortly after that event will come the Millennial Kingdom and the regeneration of Adam's race—the giving to them of new life from the Life-Giver.

As for the great human institutions which more or less counterfeit Christ's Kingdom, these are also called vines in Scripture. The vine of the earth, in contrast with the Vine of the Father's right hand planting. It is not for us to determine how much good and how much harm these earthly churches, vines of the earth, have accomplished. This our Lord will declare in His own season. But He tells us that the grape borne by these vines are of wine, hatred, envy, strife, evil speaking, etc., will overflow the Winepress of the Wrath of God in the near future, and bring

Docotr Said Sciatica--- Rheumatism--Lumbago

But He Could Not Help Me, and Endorsed the Use of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills

Mr. Wm. Parker, 105 Cayuga street, Brantford, Ont., tells in the following letter of his remarkable experience with Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills: "My doctor treated me for some time for Sciatica, Rheumatism, Lumbago, but to no purpose, for I had to lay off work. The visiting officer of Sick Benefit called to see me and advised the use of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills, stating that he had been cured of the same trouble by their use. I asked the druggist about them and he recommended them highly. Not being satisfied with this, I went back to my doctor, and when he said they were good I began their use. The promptness with which they enlivened the action of the kidneys and bowels was wonderful, and it was not long before I was rid of all my trouble.

"I was so bad that I could only walk by hanging on to a chair or the wall. My wife had to lace my shoes. Only those who have had this ailment can realize the way I suffered. I am writing this letter to let people who have my trouble know of these pills. You are at liberty to use this letter, and if anyone interested will call or write to me I will give every detail."

Write to Mr. Parker, enclosing stamp for reply, and he will verify this statement. He will do this out of the gratitude he feels for his cure and because he realizes how difficult it is to obtain the cure of these dreadfully painful ailments.

There are so many treatments recommended for rheumatism that you naturally doubt them all. Here is an opportunity for you to verify the cure and put this great medicine to the test. It will only cost you a quarter to try Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills. They get at the very foundation of rheumatism, and by removing the poisons from the system take away the cause of pains and aches.

Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills, one pill a dose, 25 cents a box, all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Limited, Toronto.

By "original work" is meant work from life, or from the object. It does not follow that because a prize is offered for any particular article that it must be awarded, unless the exhibit is really of sufficient merit to warrant the award being made. The Judges are particularly requested to note this fact.

EXAMINER PATTERN SERVICE

FOR REMODELLING OR NEW MATERIALS.

By Anabel Worthington.

This is one of the skirts which suggest themselves when we are studying last year's skirts. Of course, it is designed for new materials, but it is so perfect for making over purposes that it is impossible not to dwell upon this feature. The yoke and front gore and the yoke and back gore are each in one piece. As the yoke is wider than the panel front and the back the spaces at the sides are filled in with godets or gores which taper from the hip to a much greater width at the hem. The flap of material turned up at the top of each godet may be omitted if found difficult to handle.

The advantage of this skirt when remodelling is that it is now a custom to combine two materials in skirts of this character and the godets may be of silk of the same shade as the gown, or of black or of stripes, plaids, checks, &c.

Of course, if one has new material the effect is equally good if one fabric only is used, but a touch of novelty is obtained by the introduction of a second fabric. Voile has come so largely into vogue that it can be used for the entire skirt, with a lining of some other color and godets to match the lining. Plaids are also extremely effective when used in this manner, more so, perhaps, than a plain color would be.

The skirt pattern, No. 7227, is cut in sizes 22 to 32 inches waist measure. Medium size requires 3½ yards of 44 inch material.

When ordering remember to give your name and address as well as the number and size of pattern required, and age of a child.

Price 15 cents, or 2 for 25c.

BLACK, MIXED OR GREEN

JAPANESE UMBRELLA TRICK.

It Was a Street Incident That Led Up to the Clever Feat.

Feats with an umbrella—of the Japanese kind—are very common. The juggler throws up a ball, catches it on the top of an open umbrella and, by twisting the handle rapidly, causes the ball to run round the edge of the umbrella. A similar feat is performed with curtain rings and with coins. The smaller and lighter the coin the more difficult the feat.

All these feats were originated by a street performer in Japan. One day while passing under the walls of a castle a small audience collected on the top of the wall and playfully dropped some tangerines on to the comedian of the company of struggling jugglers. (No such company is complete without a comedian.) The next day the comedian was treated in the same manner, and so he put up a paper umbrella to shield himself. The shower of tangerines broke through the umbrella.

Then the leading juggler of the company saw his opportunity. He took the umbrella, twisted it quickly and by making it revolve caused the tangerines to fly off. While he was doing this he was helped by a lucky accident. One of the tangerines rolled round the umbrella once before dropping on the ground. The juggler picked up the tangerine and caught it once more on his revolving umbrella, and thus the feat was invented.

The hardest feat of all with the umbrella is done with a Japanese coin which is lighter than an American cent. —London Strand Magazine.

HE WAS HUNGRY.

Under the Circumstances His Jumble of Words Was Excusable.

Professor Sigmond Freud, the eminent German scholar, has made a study of lingual blunders, spoken and printed, and has embodied the result in his book, "Psychopathology." As an example of blundering speech caused by subconscious cerebration he gives the following:

"A wealthy but not very generous American host invited his friends to an evening party. Everything went well until about midnight, when there was an intermission for supper. To the disappointment of many of the guests there was no real supper. Instead they were regaled with thin sandwiches and lemonade.

"As it was during the presidential campaign, the conversation turned upon the different candidates, and as the discussion grew warmer one of the guests, an ardent Progressive, remarked to the host:

"'You may say what you please about Roosevelt, but there is one thing he can always be relied upon to do—he always gives you a square meal.'

"He meant, of course, to say a 'square deal.' The assembled guests burst into a roar of laughter, to the great embarrassment both of the speaker and of the host.

A PROMINENT NURSE SPEAKS.

Many Nurses in Canada and Elsewhere Say the Same.

Chatham, Ont.—"Being a nurse I have had occasion to use Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription quite a lot. I always recommend it to my patients and it has been a wonderful help to many of them. I never knew of a case where it failed. I have a patient who is using it now and she is doing fine since taking it. I have taken it myself and got the very best results. I consider it the best medicine there is to-day for women who are ailing." —Miss. EDITH MOORE, 30 Degge St., Chatham, Ont.

THAT WEAK BACK

Accompanied by pain here and there—extreme nervousness—sleeplessness—maybe faint spells, chills or spasms—all are signals of distress for a woman. She may be growing from girlhood into womanhood—passing from womanhood to motherhood—or later suffering during middle life, which leaves so many wrecks of women. At any or all of these periods of a woman's life she should take a tonic and nervine prescribed for just such cases by a physician of vast experience in the diseases from which women suffer.

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription has successfully treated more cases in the past 50 years than any other known remedy. It can now be had in sugar-coated tablet form as well as in the liquid. Sold by medicine dealers or trial box by mail on receipt of 50 cents in stamps. Dr Pierce, Invalids' Hotel, Buffalo, N. Y.

CONTAGIOUS DISEASES.

Air and Sunshine Are Better Disinfectants Than Fumigation.

A knowledge of how contagious diseases are transmitted from one person to another makes the futility of such disinfecting processes as fumigation evident. The Scientific American gives a succinct and accurate description of the way in which such diseases are "caught."

"Yellow fever is contracted only through the bite of the stegomyia mosquito, malaria only through that of the anopheles, typhus fever only through that of the body louse. Cholera and typhoid fever are not contracted through miasms, but solely by swallowing the essential germs of those diseases in food and drink thus contaminated. Diphtheria is probably not communicable through the air, but by direct contact with the sick, as in kissing, or by contact of one's nasal passages or throat with the diphtheria germs as contained in the handkerchiefs, dishes, and the like used by patients.

"The safest place in the world as to diphtheria is the properly conducted, well aired ward of a diphtheria hospital. Hospital doctors, nurses, and others, careful in their ablutions, are in constant attendance the year round on diphtheria, scarlet fever, and measles patients without contracting those diseases or being in any fear of them. The surest place not to contract consumption is a well managed tuberculosis sanitarium.

"Nor are scarlet fever and measles transmitted through the 'peeling' or the skin eruptions in those diseases. And measles is infectious anyway only during the first several days of the disease, generally before it is recognized, and from the germ-laden discharges from the noses and throats of sufferers."

Disinfection certainly destroys the germs of these diseases when it reaches them, but most germs perish almost as soon as they leave the patient's body. The best disinfectants ever invented are pure air and sunshine. A sickroom well ventilated after the close of a case, the bedding, carpets, rugs, and so on exposed to the blessed sunshine, plenty of soap and water for scrubbing up—these factors will for most infectious diseases be all the disinfection necessary."

An Approach to Perpetual Motion.

A clock is to be seen at Brussels which comes about as near being a perpetual motion machine as can be invented, for the sun does the winding. The following is the method by which it works. A shaft exposed to the solar rays causes an up draft of air, which sets the fan in motion. The fan actuates mechanism which raises the weight of the clock until it reaches the top and then puts a brake on the fan till the weight has gone down a little, when the fan is again liberated and proceeds to act as before. As long as the sun shines frequently enough and the machinery does not wear out the clock will keep in motion.—Pearson's Weekly.

Hearding the Lion.

In his volume "The New France" W. S. Lilly notes that Fouche was the only man who had the courage to stand up to his imperial master.

Napoleon, who, perhaps, was less of a gentleman than any man that has ever achieved greatness, took pleasure in brutally reminding him of his vote for the murder of Louis XVI. "Yes, sire," Fouche imperturbably replied, "that was the first service which I had the happiness of rendering to your majesty." On another occasion, "Duke of Otranto," the sovereign said, "I ought to have you beheaded." "Sire, that is not my opinion," was the minister's calm reply.

The Bold Major.

It was the custom 100 years ago to purchase British army commissions for newly born babies, their rank progressing as opportunity occurred. One of these fortunate infants was the son of Sir William Honeyman. One day a caller heard Lady Honeyman shout from her bedroom door. "Jean, what's the matter? What's all that crying in the nursery?" And Jean answered "Oh, my ledy, there's nae-thing the matter. It's only the major (still an infant) crying for his garrison."—London Tatler.

MORE DEVELOPMENTS IN HESPERIAN CASE

INFANTRY ACTIONS ON WESTERN FRONT

UNCLE SAM HOPES TO FIND LOOP-HOLE ON THIS OCCASION

Increased Doubt Expressed of the Accuracy of the Statement That Liner Was Torpedoed--"May Have Struck a Mine" Some Officials Say--British Admiralty State That Vessel Was an Ordinary Passenger Liner.

INFANTRY ACTION REPORTED AT SOUCHEZ

WASHINGTON, Sept. 7.—The Administration still awaited reports to day concerning the Hesperian case.

From German sources came intimations that the Foreign Office, as soon as advised, would send all possible information.

An official statement from the British Admiralty was expected. An independent report based on investigations by American authorities in England was sought from Ambassador Page.

Increasing doubt was expressed of the accuracy of the version that the liner was torpedoed. Many believed it struck a mine.

There were intimations that Germany might pursue the course she took in the Arabic case, send formal or informal assurances, through Ambassador Bernstorff, repudiating the sinking of the Hesperian without warning if it should develop that asubmarine did the work.

There was no indication that the Government intends asking Germany for an explanation of the Hesperian incident, at least until the facts are more clearly developed.

PARIS (French Official Communique) Sept. 7.—German aviators bombarded Gerard-Mer early to-day killing several civilians. Bloody infantry struggles around Souchez cemetery have been resumed after the opposing troops had lain idle in their trenches for nearly a fortnight. No general offensive has been begun on either side. The fighting is between small detachments, seeking to gain small trenches, portions at a time. A French company creeps forward one night and hurs itself suddenly upon the German trenches opposite. Next night the death combat is repeated, but thus far there have been no material gains on either side. This afternoon's communique reported several such struggles with petards and hand grenades near Souchez, and also around Neuville during last night and the early hours of to-day. French batteries south of Arras directed heavy bombardment at the German works on Quennevieres and Nouvron plateaus yesterday, the enemy replying. In the Champagne region there was another violent exchange of artillery. Elsewhere the front was quiet throughout the night.

LONDON, Sept. 7.—The Allan liner Hesperian was not under convoy when she was torpedoed while en route to Montreal Saturday evening, it was stated on authority to-day.

No patrol ships, so far as is known, were within many miles of her, and her officers considered her out of the submarine zone.

Captain Main's report was laid before the Admiralty to-day. When it has been thoroughly digested it was promised, a brief statement will be given out, making it known officially whether the Hesperian was attacked without warning, whether she attempted to escape, or to ram the U-boat, and covering any other material points about which any controversies might arise.

The Hesperian's commander was quoted as telling a shipping agent that he had absolutely no warning of the U-boat's approach.

Officers of the Allan Line to-day expressed the hope that further checking over of the lists of survivors will reduce the casualty estimates, now placed at 26, including twelve passengers.

TOOK NO CHANCES.

LIVERPOOL, Sept. 7.—White Star liner Cymric, sister ship of the ill-fated Arabic, took no chances with German submarines on her trip from New York that ended here to-day.

The Cymric was informed by wireless that Germany had promised to torpedo no more liners without warning, but double lookouts were maintained, and life-belts and life-boat drills practiced each day. The Cymric brought 191 passengers including several Americans.

LONDON, Sept. 7.—Brigadier-General Paul A. Kenna, several times mentioned in official despatches and decorated for bravery, died of wounds received at the Dardanelles, it was announced this afternoon. Kenna won the Victoria Cross in the Boer War.

PARIS, Sept. 7.—In a message to President Poincare of France, Emperor Nicholas announces that he has placed himself in command of all the Russian armies. Poincare has expressed the gratification of France and her Allies at the Czar's action. It is thought this means the superceding of the Grand Duke Nicholas by a new general staff.

PARIS, Sept. 7.—The French liner Bordeaux, 4,500 tons, has been torpedoed and sunk off the west coast of France. The crew were saved.

ROME, Sept 7.—Plans for close co-operation of the Allied armies in a Grand scheme of offensive operations against the Austro-Germans and the Turks, brought Gen. Joffre, French Commander-in-Chief to the Italian front, it was reported here to-day.

While Joffre was preparing to depart, a Japanese military mission arrived in Rome and proceeded to the front.

In both movements the Italian press to-day saw considerable significance.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 7.—Ambassador Page to day advised the State Department that the British Admiralty refutes a German charge that the Hesperian was a warship.

"The Admiralty states," page reported, "that the Hesperian was sailing as an ordinary passenger liner, and has never been in the Government service. No troops were aboard xecept some wounded and invalided Canadian soldiers travelling on individual tickets, as passengers."

SAY CRUISER WAS SUNK

BERLIN, via London, Eng., Sept. 7.—The German submarine U-27 torpedoed and sank a small British cruiser west of Hemrides Islands on August 10, and is believed to have herself been sunk several days later, the German Admiralty announced to-day.

LONDON, Eng., Sept 7.—The Harrison liner Dictator, from Liverpool, was sunk by a German submarine. Her crew of 12 landed to-day.

She displaced 4,116 tons, was built in 1891, and was 365 feet long, with a 45 ft. beam.

ROME, Sept 7.—Austrian aeroplanes bombarded Venice yesterday for the fifth time since war began. Two enemy aviators participated in the raid dropping bombs along the Lagoon and in the vicinity of the Italian forts.

An aeroplane was shot down by Italian anti-aircrift guns and fell into the Lagoon. Its two occupants were captufed

BERLIN (Official) Sept. 7.—No important progress in the fighting for Riga was reported in this afternoon's official statement. The War Office mentioned only the advance of German cavalry upon the village of Daudeewad, southeast of Friedrichstadt, where the Germans are held to the south bank of the Dwina by Russian artillery.

FATHER AT THE FRONT MOTHER DIED ON SUNDAY

Mrs. Michael Allen, Townsend St, In This Country Only Four Years, Leaves Only Daughter

FUNERAL HELD TO-DAY

While being removed to St. Joseph's Hospital, on Sunday, Mrs. Michael Allen, 297 Townsend Street, passed away after a week's illness. A year ago the Allen home was partially disrupted when the husband, a soldier of long experience, went away with the 1st contingent. Mrs. Allen's death leaves an only daughter of about eighteen years alone. When a reporter called at the house at noon to-day the blinds were drawn and the doors locked. It was only a few hours after the funeral, which was held this morning to the Sacred Heart Church and thence to St. Peter's cemetery. Mr. and Mrs. Allen were born in the Old Country, the former of Irish parentage, in Wales, and the deceased in Ireland. They have resided in Peterborough about four years.

Mr. Allen saw extensive service in the Boer War and in India. In the latter country his wife was affected by the hot climate and it was stated that her death was due to a heart attack and the recent warm weather. The daughter, Miss Minnie Allen, wrote to her father on Sunday, conveying the sad news to him. For personal reasons she did not cable. He is now with Major Mills. Neighbours stated that the daughter is today with Mrs. F. Christopher, Parnell Street. The family, it was stated, have no relatives in Canada.

ALL THAT CAN COME ARE NEEDED WRITES BOMBARDIER CLANCY

Former Peterboro' Firemen Says Men Are Wanted at Once "If Local Young Men Could See and Hear Something of the Conditions They Could Not Resist the Call to the Colours.

The following letter from Bombardier M. J. Clancy of Peterborough, formerly of the local fire department, should bring home the need of men promptly to Peterborough citizens. Bombardier Clancy, who enlisted here with the 26th Battery, was one of the draft chosen from that battery and is now in the 3rd Battery, Reserves Brigade, at Shorncliffe. He writes to Chief Howard as follows:

Shorncliffe Camp,
August 17th, 1915.

Chief W. A. Howard, Peterborough, Ontario.

Dear Chief:—No doubt by this time you have thought that I had forgotten you and the boys of the old brigade, but I have not, and I have thought of you and them many times and often liked to see you all again, but I will have to wait a bit. That pleasure for some time to come, as things are getting very serious over here and if enlistment does not improve soon you may look for serious reverses, for we want more men, ammunition very badly and need it as soon as possible.

Heartrending Incidents.

I could not tell or write to any one with a heart to feel or see and hear what I have seen in this here, but they could not be, see the call to the colours, as it is heartrending to see Belgian women and children suffering the tortures of hell from the hands of I cannot call them men, but devils. One case in particular of a Belgian woman and her two daughters, one 16 and the other 20 years of age, as pretty as pictures, about to become mothers soon. The women's story is a most sad one, for in one of the villages they committed no other crimes on her and the girls. The younger girl is raving mad and the mother not far off either. There are not a few similar cases that I have seen, a boy of about 14 years of age I saw with a bayonet stuck through his body. When I was there and read about the atrocities in the papers I used to think that was all in the story but they could tell all for it would be too horrible to relate to the public, and of the truth was brought out it would shock the world. I think I saw more cases of the starving people of Belgium than I could shake a stick at, and I could not move them. I would say that they had no heart or feeling for their mother, sister or wife. I have seen children's hands that have been caught in pedals of the guns while I have been and heard and I am glad that I was not [illegible] to the atrocities.

We Can Hear Big Guns.

We are just now [illegible] and can hear the big guns of several thousand Canadian troops here who are [illegible] the front next month, and if we have no ammunition I think they will hold these devils up or make them quit, but they are not going to quit without a struggle and a great one at that. I hope that enlistment will go at rapidly now as the barrier that stopped a lot from coming is done away with and almost anybody can get going now, and we need them if we are going to win this great fight.

In Great Shape

Well, Chief, I hope you and Mr. Howard are in the best of health as I am at present, and, without boasting, I never felt better in my life than at present. The training that I am receiving will not only benefit me physically and mentally, but will enable me to perform my duties when I return, if it is God's will that I should. I have a feeling that I shall return safely some time after we leave you and the boys again. Tell the boys that I would like to send them a letter, but I cannot as yet, but I will as soon as possible. I hope that the same can be said of you, and that you are in the best of health and doing well in the old home town.

Tell George Crocker and Jack Jamieson that I think that they would get on fine in Lord's cricketers that come out here, they would end the war sure.

I could keep on writing, but I am not a [illegible] to go to the front, but I will be long now, for we are [illegible] shape [illegible] and I am anxious to get to the front as the rest of the [illegible]

80TH OFFICERS HAVE REPORTED FOR DUTY

Lt.-Col. Johnston and Lieuts Stewart and Munro on Duty To-day One Hundred Men on Parade This Morning at the Armouries.

TO-DAY'S MILITARY NEWS

There was more activity at the Armouries this morning than at any time since the new Battalion was commenced. Lt.-Col. L. J. Johnston, Commanding Officer of the 3rd Prince of Wales Dragoons, who is to be second in command of the 80th, arrived on duty to-day, and two subalterns, Lieut. Stewart, of the 46th, and Lieut. J. R. Munro, of the 57th, also reported for duty. Lieut. W. W. Stratton and C. R. Widdifield, of the 57th, are also expected to be on duty in a short time. Capt. R. P. Watt, of the 57th, has been on duty for over a week.

This morning the 80th had 100 men on parade, and they were drilled in squad in charge of Lieuts. Stewart and Munro and Acting Sergts. Collins, Otley and Fenton. The new arrivals started at work under the direction of Sergeant Walter Hughes. A number of recruits have been added since Saturday, and enlistment is going on steadily and satisfactorily.

The detachment attended church parade at the Salvation Army Temple on Sunday morning. The band made a first public appearance, and made a fine showing. It is expected by to-night the band will have a membership of over twenty.

Lieut. Gordon Matthew Vincent went to Hazlett Eastwood, 3rd Sergeant of the 57th Regiment, who have been taking qualifying [illegible] at Bramshott Camps, have returned to Peterborough.

Lieut. Gordon Reid left on Saturday to join the 57th Battalion, now in training at Bramshott Camp. Lieut. Reid has been appointed to the 80th Battalion, and will be stationed in Peterborough.

Lieut. Sam Clancy has been appointed to the 80th Battalion, and will be stationed in Peterborough.

LABOUR AND WAR.

No higher tribute to the indispensable importance of labour in the world economy can be paid than the consideration of what would come of the world if labour day were every day. Yesterday, throughout Canada there was a general cessation of work. If this could possibly continue throughout the year, and throughout the world, the world would come to an end. This serves to emphasize the rather hackneyed saying that everything comes from labour—all wealth and all that represents wealth. In actual work labour is paying a great part in this war; but what it is doing in making munitions and the materials of war is as nothing to what it has done. The millions that are spent every day in prosecuting this unprecedented war, are as much the product of labour as are the shells that are being put together these days in thousands of workshops. If labour had not created the wealth of the nations they would not have the money to waste in creating the waste of war. One of the great evils of war is not only its waste of the products of labour, but its diversion of labour from the arts and crafts that contribute to the welfare of the world and the happiness of humanity.

TORONTO EXHIBITION AS A TOUCHSTONE.

In the tremendous struggle in which we and the world are agonizing, notwithstanding the fierceness of the fight, notwithstanding the apparently slow progress towards ultimate victory, nothwithstanding the intensity of our application in a multitude of ways to the support of our cause, there is evidence that the war has not touched Canada in a vital part; has not lessened our courage; has not absorbed all our energies, or made us insensible to the demands of the everyday duties that confront us in the routine of peaceful life. It seems that everything is going forward as usual, that the watchword production as usual animates our people.

It looks as if Canada's National Exhibition now being held in Toronto would this year be the greatest of the series of thirty-seven, that have successively and successfully been held. The exhibits are pronounced superior to other years in number and quality; and the attendance is greater, so far, than any precedent year. This shows that Canada has great resources, and that in spite of the disturbance of the times, the people as a whole are prosperous, have money to spend. This is remarkable when we remember how much burden of contribution to war or war relief purposes, the people have borne. Either a very few have made such contribution, or the people at large are so prosperous that they have been able to give of their abundance and have still a reserve that justifies the expenditure, implied in an unprecedentedly liberal patronage of our National Exhibition.

This tribute to our soundness financially, to our general prosperity, is one of the reasons why we should not be, and are not, discouraged nor down-hearted, but have still the spirit of courage to manfully envisage the future, strong in the hope of the triumph of our cause. This feeling is justified; the Entente Allies are hopeful. France does not, any more, fear invasion; she feels so sure that she has abolished throughout the republic, outside of Paris, the martial law it was thought necessary to declare when the country was threatened with successful invasion. The possibility of that has passed away in the minds of the rulers of France.

The same spirit of optimism is felt, or lived up to in Canada, and is fully justified as far as we are concerned. We are able to count upon unimpaired material resources, and if we only live up to our capacity and responsibilities in other directions, we shall be able to continue to materially contribute to the victory that is sure to come. As a nation, and in regard to material matters, we have not reached the stage of sacrifice for the cause. What we have contributed in money, nad in kind, has by no means exhausted our resources. We cannot have felt our giving when we have so much money available for recreation purposes as witness the receipts of the Toronto Exhibition. Nor have we exhausted our resources in regard to fighting men. Considering the number of available men still at home we could send as many more as we have already done to the front, and then not exhaust our enlisting capacity.

There is cause for thankfulness as well as justification for hopefulness. Canada in spite of all she has done, has been touched lightly as a country. While the nations of Europe have been laid waste, the fields devastated, the crops destroyed, the homesteads swept away, the harvest fields of Canada have never yielded so plentiful a harvest. The people have not had the happy routine of their lives, or their accustomed prosperity sensibly lessened by the war and the conditions it creates.

ARE THESE REASONS?

Until recently high explosives were not regarded as necessary to the warfare of land forces.

In the war it has been demonstrated that without high explosives only slight advances can be made.

Germany has large quantities of high explosives, for two reasons. Her plan of warfare was aggression, and she knew that there were forts to be demolished, and that only guns of tremendous calibre would accomplish that end. Therefore, she made guns that could be used on land to destroy forts. These guns have played a great part in trench warfare, although it may be doubted if even the most astute general foresaw the new condition.

Then Germany has a navy carefully locked up in Kiel. It can devote its attends to the manufacture of high explosives for the army, and permit the fleet to await the time, if ever, when the supremacy of Britain is to be challenged.

On the other hand, Britain never knows when her fleet will require enormous quantities of high explosives. The British arsenals must turn out an enormous number of shells for the great guns of the greatest fleet.

Those knowing critics who assail Kitchener might do well to rest their egotistic splutterings and to reason out the why and wherefores of the British ammunition shortage. If Britain had a fleet that could be stowed away safely and used at will, the British army might have adequate high explosives today.

Was Torpedoed Without Warning

QUEENSTOWN, Sept 5—Major J. S Barnes, a Canadian officer, who was returning home to recuperate from wounds said

The Hesperian was torpedoed without warning. The deadly missile was discharged at the steamer while she was shrouded in darkness. That there was not an appalling loss of life was no fault of the commander of the German submarine. The torpedo struck in a vital part of the engine room."

Major Barnes assisted the engineers in closing the bulkheads thereby the inflow of water to the first and second forward compartment was checked. By this time the steamer which was in imminent danger of foundering, was kept afloat.

According to statements made by some of those who were landed here the captain of the Hesperian and about twenty of his crew never left the steamer, and although the Captain appealed to many of his men who had taken to the boats to return they did not respond.

Two Americans Saved.

So far as has been ascertained by the American Consul, who has been making inquiries, there were only two Americans aboard. Both were saved. They were ship stewards. One of them, named Dolan, of Pittsburg, said that no submarine was sighted. The only evidence that a submarine was near was a tremendous explosion which threw up such a mass of water that it swept clean over the forepart of the vessel.

Among those who had to swim for it were several Canadians. They were good swimmers and not only managed to keep afloat until picked up, but helped to save some of the women and children. A choppy sea added to the darkness intensified the misery of those in the boats, many of whom were scantily clad.

Thought They Were Safe.

Another Canadian officer who remained on board the Hesperian until the rescue steamers arrived said the liner was struck by the torpedo at half-past 8 in the evening, when she was well out of sight of the Irish coast and everybody on board thought they were out of the danger zone.

With other officers the Canadian says he went below to assist in closing the bulkheads, which was quickly accomplished. The torpedo, he says, hit the liner on the starboard side somewhere near the second bulkhead and the ship went down by the bow to about 35 feet. As the water was more or less confined to the forward part of the steamer, Capt. Main was hopeful that he could bring the Hesperian to port.

Repaired the Wireless.

The wireless, according to the officer, was put out of action as the result of the explosion, but a temporary office was established. The most valuable of the mail matter was saved, and all the passengers, including those landed here, were transferred before the ship

The Trail of Prussian Barbarity Over All The Outraged Regions

We have heard much, though not too much, of German outrages in Belgium. We have heard less of the outrages committed in the eastern regions. Professor Reiss, of the University of Lusanne, Switzerland, was invited, as a criminologist, to visit Serbia, and form a judgment on the conduct of the Austro-Hungarian troops. Professor Reiss says that he was sceptical in regard to the charges made against the soldiers, but deemed it his duty to accept the invitation of the Serbian government and investigate. This neutral witness and investigator found that explosive bullets were used by the Austrian and Hungarian troops. He found that open, undefended towns were bombarded, houses destroyed, and even hospitals struck. Prisoners and wounded soldiers were massacred. Civilians were murdered. The bayonet was used in one case "to economize on ammunition." A Hungarian captain gave orders that all should be killed, from children of five to the oldest man. Soldiers spat in the faces of women, and struck them with the butts of rifles. Men and women were ordered to shout "Long Live the Emperor Joseph" and "Long Live the Austrian Army." Those who refused were shot. Women were outraged and their bodies mutilated in a beastly manner. In its general features, the story is much the same as that of Belgium. It is told with evident care, and in a spirit of sober inquiry. Illustrations and diagrams are given.

Now, what was the cause? Why did Hungarian soldiers behave as German soldiers behaved? We believe the cause will be found in the cry which the soldiers tried to force their victims to utter, "Long Live the Brave Austrian Army" and "Long Live the Emperor Francis Joseph." The army and the Emperor were all-important. The common people counted for nothing. An archduke had been assassinated. What shocked the rulers of Austria-Hungary was not the murder, but the sacrilege, the violation of the sacred person of a member of the royal family. At all costs this sacrilege must be punished. The lives of Serbian peasants counted for nothing. The death of a hundred thousand would be as dust in the balance compared with the death of an archduke.

This is the real source of the European evil. The talk of the militarism of democracies is nonsense. Democracies can, of course, be excited, and led into war either for right causes or for wrong. But the democracy of one country has no cause for enmity with the democracy of another. Democracies have no such selfish ambition as are nursed in royal houses. The European evil can be clearly traced to the royal houses of Europe, and to the idolatrous worship of royalty.—Toronto Star.

American Comment on Hesperian Incident

NEW YORK, Sept. 5—The New York papers comment as follows on the German submarine attack on the Allan liner Hesperian:

The Tribune: "Germany has to disavow the action of the officer who destroyed the Arabic. She is bound to disavow the action of the officer who torpedoed the Hesperian, unless later facts put a new face on the incident. It is in these cases primarily a duty of the German authorities to demonstrate their good faith by disciplining agents who fail to carry out instructions. So long as we accept the assurances of Count von Bernstorff at their face value (and there is no good reason for questioning their sanctity or validity) we must regard individual deviations from the new submarine policy less as offences against us than as offences by its own servants against the dignity, authority and good name of the German Government.

"Berlin has even more reason than Washington has for moving to end this sorry exhibition of perversity and inefficiency in the execution of a programme to which Germany has solemnly pledged her honour. Blunders like the sinking of the Arabic and the Hesperian are a humiliating reflection on Germany's administrative competency, even if they cannot be held to sully her international good faith."

What of Assurances?

The World says: "Last Wednesday Ambassador von Bernstorff gave the American Government solemn assurance that Atlantic liners making no effort to escape and offering no resistance would not be torpedoed by German submarines without warning or without providing for the safety of non combatants. On Saturday the steamship Hesperian, bound from Liverpool to Montreal with many passengers, was attacked by a submersible, it is said, without notice.

"No doubt, in this instance, as in others, we shall have the usual explanations, excuses and theories from Berlin. It will be charged that the ship attempted to escape. It will be intimated that she may have been the victim of a British mine. Possibly it will be said that not all of the commanders of German submarines are yet acquainted with the recent decision of their Government to observe the laws of nations and the dictates of humanity."

Bring It Home

The Herald: "It would seem that the torpedoing of the Hesperian of the Allan Steamship Line leaves the German Ambassador where he must do one of three things disavow the Government which he represents, show that the Hesperian torpedoed herself or prove that she was a war transport. His word that no more 'liners' would be torpedoed without warning and measures taken for safety of passengers and crew, unless they tried to escape or resisted, lies on the desk of the Secretary of State at Washington. Was the Hesperian 'warned.' The hope that she was is none the less sincere because built on uncertain ground. If she was truly a transport, then we will have little to say. If she mounted a 4.7 inch gun all, we will have nothing to say.

"But it brings home to the President and every citizen the great question of preparedness. This country is not to have any sense of security until this war is over. If it have security, when it is over it will only be because in the interim it has placed the army and navy in a state of readiness. The necessity for preparedness increases each day.

MANITOBA'S NEW LEADER.

Sir "Jam" Aikins Is a Knight With a Record.

Sir James Albert Manning Aikins, M.A., K.C.M.G., the new leader of the Conservative party in Manitoba, is more familiarly known to the people of the Western Provinces as "Jam" Aikins, because of the sequence of his initials, than he is by his more high sounding title. This is only natural, for he has only been a knight since June of last year, while he has been "Jam" since boyhood. He is expected to do great things by the Manitoba Conservatives.

Like so many others of the West's public men, Sir James was Ontario born and educated. He first saw daylight at Brahamsville, in the County of Peel, Upper Canada, 64 years ago, and is the son of the late Senator James C. Aikins, who was from 1882 to 1885 Lieutenant Governor of Manitoba. He received his education at Upper Canada College and the University of Toronto. He was graduated in arts in 1875, and was called to the Bar of Ontario in 1878. One year later he went to Manitoba, being called to the Bar there in that year. He was appointed counsel for the Department of Justice after taking up residence in Winnipeg, and in 1880 was appointed by the Dominion Government as one of the Royal Commissioners to investigate the administration of justice in the North-West Territories.

In 1884 the honor of Queen's Counsel was conferred upon him. From 1881 to 1911 he was counsel for the C. P. R., which position he relinquished on his decision to retire from public and business life. In the same year, however, he responded to the call from the Conservatives of Brandon to represent them in the Dominion election, and was successful in the contest. At present he represents that constituency in the Dominion House, but will have to resign his seat at Ottawa to lead the Provincial organization.

Sir James took a great part in the drafting of the Macdonald liquor bill of 1900, which bill will be included in the Conservatives' platform to be brought down at the forthcoming election. He has also taken a live and active interest in education matters, and represented Canada at the International Congress on Moral Education held at The Hague in 1912. He was also a member of the Royal Commission concerning agricultural education in 1902, and chairman of the Royal Commission concerning Manitoba University in 1907.

The new leader has been a member of the Manitoba Law Society since 1880, and has served as its secretary-treasurer and president. To-day Sir James is president of the Canadian Bar Association.

Sir James took a deep interest in the militia, and holds the ranks of Honorary Lieutenant Colonel of the 90th Rifles and Honorary Colonel of the 99th Manitoba Rangers.

Sir James has figured largely in the business life of the community, being the senior member of the legal firm of Aikins, Fullerton, Foley & Newcombe, and of Aikins, Loftus & Aikins, Winnipeg. He is also president of the General Assets and Agency Corporation, and is on the directorate of the following companies: Northern Trusts, Canadian Fire Insurance, and Canadian Indemnity, while he is Canadian director of the Gresham Life Assurance Society.

When Time Didn't Fly.

Little Helen during the three years of her life had never been separated from her elder sister night or day for more than a few minutes at a time, but at last the time came when the sister went away for a whole day. The child tried every game and occupation that she knew of and a new one or two suggested by her mother, but they all palled.

Finally she gave up and stood and looked sadly out of the window; then she sighed deeply and said:

"It's still the same old day, isn't it, mother?"

Cool in summer—warm in winter

The General Says:

Neither the hot winds of summer nor the cold blasts of winter can penetrate our roofing or wall board. Roofs covered with wood shingles, slate, or tile, need one or more layers of our insulating materials under them to keep the building cool in summer and warm in winter.

The use of wall board as an improvement over lath and plaster is becoming universal. Being a non-conductor of heat, it saves fuel in cold weather and keeps out the hot winds and heat of the summer. The great service and very low cost of our materials have led to their enormous use everywhere.

PRECIOUS ORES FOUND

Western Canada Has Had an Epidemic of Strikes.

Smaller Forms of the Famous Ninety-Eight" Are Under Way in Various Parts of the Western Section of the Dominion—Saskatchewan Leads in the Reports of Deposits of Valuable Metals.

Even war time is opportune for gold strikes, and out West we have been varying the slow and uncertain excitement of held nights in Europe by occasional flurries of old-time mining fever, to say nothing at all of oil strikes. It would be a very good time to find a yellow paystreak, west, north, or anywhere, for several thousand people are greatly desiring something of that substantial kind since town lots dropped to nothing. There are those who would be willing even to repeat the trail of '98, and, as a matter of fact, an abridged edition of that historic gold hunt is now under way, says Aubrey Fullerton in Toronto Star Weekly.

Everybody knows that there is gold somewhere in this Western North. So, too, there are silver, nickel, copper, and perhaps a dozen other minerals; but the thing is to get at them.

Last fall there was a renewal of the gold washing industry on the Saskatchewan River, at Edmonton. For several years a little work of this kind has been done, from which enough gold has be produced to supply the local souvenir jewelry trade, and sometimes to turn in fairly good-sized bricks to the banks. How the gold got there is, of course, a question for geologists to answer, but according to the most likely theories it came down from the gold-bearing mountains of the far West before the Rockies were reared to block the way. At any rate, it is there in the river now, in such minute particles of well-worn dust that to get an ounce of it one must dig up and wash a great many yards of gravel. Yet a gravel company paid its running expenses a few years ago with the gold that was collected in its dredge merely as a side-line.

It therefore seemed quite feasible, when the hard times began to settle down, to put some of the out-of-works on the river at gold washing. Demonstrations in the handling of the "grizzly," the machine in which the washing is done, were given by some of the old-timers, and a goodly number of otherwise unemployed took the hint and turned to gold hunting in the gravel beds of the Saskatchewan. No one struck it rich, but some made wages at it. Then winter came, and the grizzlies were laid by. A few of them have now come out again, and their patient operators are still courting favor with fortune in terms of gravel.

But a much more pretentious strike was noised abroad through the winter, and it is as a result of that that there has been this spring a repetition on a small scale of the famous Klondike stampede. Only it's silver, instead of gold. Silver is good though, in these barren days, and men to whom wheat-growing does not greatly appeal have gone in quest of it. The find was made away up in the northland, at the eastern end of Lake Athabasca, which the map shows to be within the bounds of Saskatchewan. The trail thereto, however, is via Edmonton, like that of '98.

Lake Athabasca is in a region that nature loaded with underground wealth. Its potentialities have been prophesied many times, and are constantly being added to. Twenty years ago, when J. B. Tyrrell made a map of the district, he said that it was a most interesting field for a mining man and that in due time rich discoveries would be made thereabouts. He was well within the mark. The discovery that has led to the present interest was made by some British Columbia prospectors, and later investigations have shown their find to be a real one, and one that is likely to hasten the industrial development of the country.

Fond du Lac is the name of this newest silver camp. It is on the north shore of the lake, where it begins to narrow down from the proportions of an inland sea to those of an elongated waterway, and from Edmonton, by way of the Athabasca River, the distance is very nearly seven hundred miles. The ore that was found there is a combination of silver and nickel, of a grade that mining experts declare "looks good." The general appearance of the country is not unlike that of northern Ontario, and the strike is expected to be a second Cobalt. Geologically the rock is pre-Cambrian strata, with its mineral ore right on the surface.

The first prospector to return from his winter's visit to Fond du Lac reported that two hundred claims had already been staked in April, and on his way down, while the northland was still in the grip of winter, he met some eighteen or twenty parties going in. It is not unlikely that by next fall there will be a thousand men in the silver camps of Lake Athabasca. The Hudson's Bay Company, awake to the opportunity, is putting on a steamboat service by the Peace River route that is intended to cater especially to the prospectors and miners who want to get to Fond du Lac. All this does not quite make a stampede, but it approximates sufficiently near to that point to develop into full maturity at almost any moment.

Luminous Mushrooms.

A traveler in Australia found a very large mushroom weighing five pounds. He took it to the house in which he was for the time being residing and hung it up to dry in the sitting-room. Entering after dark, he was amazed to see a beautiful soft light emanating from the fungus. It continued to give out light for many nights, gradually decreasing until it was wholly dry. Many kinds of fungi have this peculiarity. Humboldt describes some he saw in the mines. The glow in rotten wood is caused by its containing the threads of light giving fungi.

Who Defended the Works?

By F. A. MITCHEL

When the Germans were besieging Paris in 1871 one part of the force came to the very outskirts of the city and encountered a portion of the defenses, something like a revolutionary barricade blocking a street. There was only room for a single company, and its captain before making an attack stood off and, raising a pair of binoculars, examined the works.

They were composed of paving stones, pieces of timber and such other articles as had been brought together for an improvised fortification. But the captain could not see a single man on the parapet. This he did not like. There was the look of a trap about it. If he moved his troops forward he must do so over a distance of some 500 or 600 yards between two walls not thirty feet apart and straight as an arrow. He could not deploy his men by the flank, and as for scattering along the street they would be one behind another, and a shot would bring down every man in line.

Moreover, the captain noticed a dark spot in the works, which indicated that a single stone had been removed in the very center of the fortification. He assumed at once that the aperture was for the muzzle of a cannon, which would sweep the street, doubtless, with the scattering projectiles of the period. That meant that before a force of eighty men—the number under the captain's command—could reach the barricade a large proportion of them would be killed or wounded.

The captain called his first lieutenant, handed him his glass, directed him to take a look at the breastworks and then asked him what he thought about an attempt to carry them. The lieutenant examined the works, then, lowering his glass, remarked:

"What are the orders, captain?"

"The orders are to move forward."

"Then we must move forward, but those who live will have moved backward."

The captain's only response was an order to advance.

Shoulder to shoulder, the men marched on—for, as has been said, they could not scatter—till about a third of the distance had been traversed. Then a puff of smoke issued from the dark spot in the center of the works, and a storm of missiles broke upon the advancing line of Germans. A third of the company fell, and another dozen limped or staggered to the rear.

The rest pressed on, but a few minutes were lost in reforming, or, rather, closing, the gaps that had been made. With steady step they marched till they had covered half the distance between their starting point and the fort. There was light where the dark spot had been, and they knew that the piece had been retired to be reloaded. This gave them courage. It was an old fashioned muzzle loader, and time must be spent after every discharge in reloading. The captain gave the order to double quick, but before they had covered a dozen yards there came another hailstorm, and another twenty men were put out of the fight.

This was terrible slaughter, and the force recoiled. Some stood ready to retrace their steps; others started back. The second lieutenant stood in rear and, striking some of the fugitives with his sword, drove them back toward the enemy. The captain was among the wounded and lay in a pool of his own blood. The first lieutenant cried at the top of his voice "Forward, men!" and started at the head of some thirty soldiers to make the rest of the distance and storm the fort, though the move was now a forlorn hope, for he expected that on reaching it he would find it defended by double the number of those who were making the attack.

When within fifty yards of the barricade there came another storm of missiles. Half the Germans were laid on the stones of the street, while the other half broke and fled. The lieutenant called to them in vain. Preferring death to following them in flight, he turned and ran forward to the fort, expecting every moment to be shot down. He reached the barricade and, with a pistol in one hand, his sword in the other, climbed to the summit. There he stood, bewildered by the sight that met his view.

Not a man was behind the stones. The gun which the recoil from the last shot had driven backward a few feet was there, a thin film of smoke issuing from its vent. Leaning against it was a girl about twenty years old. She looked up at the lieutenant as though expecting instant death. Involuntarily he uncovered.

"Mademoiselle," he stammered in broken French, "where are the men who have been defending this barricade?"

"I have been defending this barricade, monsieur," was the reply.

"You—alone?"

"I—alone. Through a blunder the force that was to have held this work was ordered elsewhere."

"Mein Gott! Has a whole company been driven back by a—a girl?"

At this moment a company of French soldiers came around a corner at double quick. The lieutenant succeeded in making good a retreat, hearing cheers behind him.

"Vive mademoiselle!"

Having joined his commander, he led them again to the attack and finally captured the barricade. He looked for the girl who had defended it alone, but she was not there.

PURITY

More and more housewives want to know how the things which they buy are made—of what materials, under what conditions, under whose guarantee.

To make Crisco truly the ideal cooking fat has been the aim of its manufacturers from the very beginning, and every possible precaution has been taken to insure its purity.

CRISCO

The highest grade of vegetable oil, hardened to the proper consistency by a special process, is used in the manufacture of Crisco.

The Crisco is packed by machinery, all of which is nickeled or enameled. The cans are new and bright, but just before being used are passed through a powerful vacuum cleaner.

No hand touches Crisco at any time in its preparation. The vast room in which it is packed is floored with terrazzo and walled with glass; ceiling and storage boxes are of spotless tiling.

A more beautiful and satisfying place for the manufacture of a food product hardly can be imagined.

MONUMENT TO VICTIMS.

Salvationists to Erect Memorial to Those Lost on Empress.

The Salvation Army is to erect a very fine monument in Mount Pleasant Cemetery, Toronto, to the Army victims in the Empress of Ireland disaster. It is to be cut out of red granite, and will stand 13 feet high. The base of it, which will be embedded in granite rock, will be five feet square.

The clay model shows the design chosen as most suitable, considering the manner in which so many of the followers met their death. On the base of the monument, which will be about three feet in height, will be the names of the officers who were drowned, and also the total number belonging to the Army who were lost. The stone above the base will be cut like the waves of the sea, with a sea gull above them, to give the effect of the disaster.

The upper part of the monument contains the cross and crown, the Army emblem mourning badge, and on the back of it will be cut the Army crest. The only text inscribed on it will be the one used by Colonel Maidment, the Chief Secretary, when he preached the farewell sermon in the Salvation Army Temple before they all left Toronto. The text is: "God is our refuge and strength, and a very present help in trouble."

It is expected that the unveiling of the monument will take place in October. It will stand in the centre of 22 graves in the plot acquired by the Army just a short time before the disaster occurred. It will cost in the neighborhood of $1,500. When erected, a picture of it will be taken, showing the graves around it, and copies of the picture will be sent to the friends and relatives of the victims as mementoes.

Ontario Beekeepers' Association.

The annual report of the Ontario Beekeepers' Association for 1914 has been issued. It is packed with useful information regarding the working of the apiary. The "Question Drawer" covers a large variety of topics, the replies being given by practical, expert beemen. Among the subjects dealt with at greater length are foul brood, the advantages or otherwise of specializing in beekeeping, putting up a honey exhibit, growing sweet clover for honey production, and methods of introducing queens. The report of the secretary on apiary inspection and demonstrations in the Province is most complete, and the discussions upon it, and also upon the other topics, show that the beekeepers of Ontario are live men who are well able to think and speak for themselves.

How the Dutch Eat.

A Dutch meal is always reminiscent of a game of cards, for the mother deals out all around the table, and when that first hand is played out she deals afresh, and so on until the dish is empty. There is no promiscuous serving, as with us, and the quick feeder (if such a person could exist in leisurely Holland) reaps no advantage. If meals are to be likened to games of cards our meals in Dutch eyes must look like games of "grab."

NEWFOUNDLAND TO VOTE ON PROHIBITION

ST. JOHNS, N.F., Sept. 7.—The Advocate says the question of prohibition of the liquor traffic is the leading topic to-day in the politics of the colony. Advocates for and against temperance have come to the front with elaborately planned platforms for campaigning, and a campaign of peace making that gives promise of being one of the most bitter ever fought in Newfoundland. Meanwhile the government authorities are [illegible] when a vote will be taken on a prohibition bill referred to the people by the last Legislature.

The Advocate would be great authority on the question of prohibition of the liquor traffic in importing into a territory completely surrounded by water, as is the case with Newfoundland, but it is pointed out that if prohibition should be voted

WAR TIME CONDITIONS IN THE UNITED KINGDOM

English Laugh at The German Hymn of Hate But They Feel The Hatred All The Same Themselves—Will Take a Generation To Remove It From Their Minds

(Copyright, 1915, Central News Ltd. by J. P. O'Connor.)

LONDON, Sept. 4—Though the English have no hymn of hate and only laugh at the German verses they feel the hatred all the same and it will take a generation, I feel sure, to remove it from their minds.

I went down to Harrogate, the chief water-cure town of England a short time ago, and had an opportunity both then and afterwards of making some studies of what England is like in war time. At first sight there were plenty of things to make you think there was really very little change in the demeanour or the appearance of the people.

Harrogate was full almost to suffocation. It was impossible to get a room in all the great hotels; some of them were booked up for weeks ahead. This, of course, is one of the results of the war. Few people are going even to France, and nobody of course to Germany or Austria. Indeed most of the people who used to find their yearly cure and rest in places like Carlsbad and Harzenbad, have vowed that they will never go there or to any other Austrian or German resort again.

Streets Crowded.

The streets were crowded; the bands playing three or four times a day; the shops doing an excellent business; even the jewellers and the picture dealers, I was told, were reaping an excellent harvest. The hotel proprietors were all beaming with their full houses and big balls. Everything made you inclined to ask yourself several times whether it was really possible that England was at war, or if she were, that she entirely realized it.

But when you went a little below the surface you found plenty of evidence that though she was determined not to be interrupted in her ordinary occupations or amusements, England all the same realized her terrible job. Now and then you met people, too, who were certainly far from confident. One man is particular was haunted with the idea that the whole country, and he in particular, is going into bankruptcy, but is he was a man who had at least half a million pounds saved from a large income and a fine official position for life of five thousand pounds a year. I did not attach much importance to his plaints. They were due to a high nervous temperament, and besides, the waters of Harrogate have the effect for some time of bringing people's spirits down to zero. The average Englishman does not take anything like these gloomy views; indeed, I did not meet one who had the least doubt of ultimate victory for the arms of the Allies, although they differed, of course, in their estimates of the amount of time the war will still take.

War Times Symptoms.

One of the many symptoms of war time was a remarkable meeting held that Sunday. It was at once a political and a prayer meeting, and all the creeds were represented. An Anglican Bishop was in the chair. The first speaker was an eloquent Jesuit priest named Father Brampton. He was followed by Mr. Younger, a Non-conformist clergyman, and the proceedings were wound up by the Archbishop of York. The audience sang hymns at intervals; they all remained silent while they prayed; then they all stood to their feet, and this silent crowd, standing with moving lips though one could not hear the words, was immensely impressive. It was evident that to all of them this was a fight for Christianity as they understand it; that it is, in short, a Holy War; and that there is not the least doubt nor misgiving in any of their hearts that the powers of heaven are on their side. Each of the clergyman of the very different and conflicting creeds was received with equal favour. Whatever discord this terrible conflict has made in the harmonies of life, it has certainly had the effect in England of softening all religious asperities.

Indeed, all asperities for the moment have disappeared. So strongly is the truce of political parties felt and so rigidly observed that if anybody happens inadvertently to speak of himself as a Liberal or Tory, he immediately pulls himself up and says, "But we have no parties now."

Ulster Condition.

I am told that this truce of parties and of creeds has made some way even in Ulster, the last spot in the British world where the discords of the past have survived; there have been it is true one or two little rows in some of the Ulster villages but they were due to young soldiers out on a spree and are not typical.

I received a letter from a prominent Nationalist member last night telling me that he had attended several meetings in Ulster the platforms of which were occupied by both Orangemen and Nationalists and that he had had the unique experience of being cheered by Orange meetings. The truth is that as time goes on the magnitude of the peril which was not felt at the beginning of the war—the real meaning of German militarism with its mailed fist, its spiked helmet, its Scythian savagery and its Teutonic arrogance—has opened everybody's eyes and brought such a sense of common and national peril over the dullest and most cantankerous [illegible]

A Bishop's Views.

At a meeting in Wales I had a conversation with an Anglican Bishop. He was a fine fellow with a sandy and benignant face, and I took to him even before I had spoken to him. I took to him still more when I found I had a conversation with him, for I found that he was partly Irish by blood, and it was good Irish blood, too. He told me how his grandfather on his mother's side was Lord Mayor of Dublin before Catholic emancipation, and unlike most of the men of his creed and class, was a supporter of the liberation of his Catholic fellow-citizens. One day there was a great meeting in the Rotunda Dublin's most historic meeting place in favour of Catholic emancipation. Feeling ran so high that his family begged him not to go. But he went in his big gilded official carriage; and, as his trembling family were awaiting his return in the Mansion House, they were almost paralyzed to see the horses of the carriage returning without the carriage and gave him up for lost. But the carriage soon appeared. The explanation of the disappearance of the horses from it was that the people were so delighted with the liberality of this patriotic and broad minded countryman of theirs, that they took the horses out of the carriage and insisted on dragging it home themselves.

"Is there any hope," asked this Protestant bishop of me, "that our quarrels will be softened by this war?"

This represents a universal aspiration among thinking and kindly men and perhaps it is not so Utopian as it may appear. For this war has been an enormous solvent.

Lloyd George asked me once the same question as the Bishop. What can one answer? I gave him a consciously ironical reply. Nobody appreciates a joke even at his own expense more than Lloyd George, therefore I said, "We can't talk no more about wicked dukes."

Aristocracy Splendid.

For the aristocracy has come splendidly out of this ordeal. Already family after family among the members of the House of Lords have lost an only son, sometimes two sons, and I do not know of a single great family which has not sent its sons to the war. The aristocrat has to be in the same wet trench as the workmen, they have to advance against the same hailstorm of bullets, they rush out to rescue each other when the one or the other lies wounded between the trenches; and all these things have broken down much class prejudice. No; one can't talk for many a long day to come in England of the "wicked dukes," nor can the dukes speak of the "selfish working man."

The other day I took up H. G. Well's very clever "Anne Veronica." It is a story, as its readers know, of the revolting daughter. All the unrest which finds its vent in the militant suffragist movement, in the works of the feminists with their defiance of the conventions of religion and of society for centuries, all these things had their symbol and their expression in this daring and brilliant story. Though I was deeply interested, I found it hard several times not to throw the book down. This world of self emotions, of the eternal feminine, somehow or other, seemed to me remote and unreal at a time when every day I was reading of the bodies of young and often beautiful human beings being torn to bleeding and tortured rags. Blind men whom I have seen at the Dunstan House, which was organized by C. Arthur Pearson, the journalist, who is himself blind, and sent by Otto Kahn meet you in the street, men stumping on one leg pass you; at hospital windows or on hospital verandas you see pale-faced men with head still bandaged, everywhere, even in the busy streets of London, you come across these reminders of the horrors and sufferings of war. What time is there and such moments to think of the sex alliances of life?

And yet at no time is one more reminded of the eternal feminine and the irresistible mating of human beings than at this very moment. Nature's instinctive tendency to the preservation of the race asserts itself fiercely during the war, which will kill off so many of the bravest and the best.

PRESENTATION TO CAPT. WATT

Receives a Wrist Watch From Departmental Heads of Auburn Mill

On Saturday last the departmental heads of the Auburn Woollen Mills gathered together for the purpose of signifying in a tangible form their regard and esteem for Capt. R. P. Watt of the 80th Battalion who has left the Company's service in response to the call of the Empire. A handsome wrist watch was accompanied by the following address:

Dear friend,—It was with feelings of regret, mingled with pride, when you informed us that you had heard the call of your King and country, and had enlisted for active service, and we feel we cannot let you take your departure from among us without in some way showing you that we appreciate the courtesy you have always shown to us in your position on the office staff of the Auburn Woollen Mills Company.

While you have at all times kept the interest of our employers before you, you have in your everyday dealings with us shown the true spirit which has always made it a pleasure to be associated with you as a fellow workman. As a small token of our best wishes we would ask you to accept this accompanying wrist watch and, we trust as it marks off the passing hours and days for you it will recall to you your former associates in the Auburn Woollen Company Mills.

Signed—William Hartley, Thomas W. Armitage, Shaw Hirst, Morris O'Heron, John S. Hetherington, Miss C. M. Miller, W. Anderson, John Bentley, George Baird, Geo. Greaves, and John Tierney.

All That Can Come Are Needed

hind, but they need it more than we do the sights of London.

I used to hear the English people out there say that the prices of things were very reasonable, but it is just the reverse for the prices have gone up almost to sky limit, and one has to make the shillings and pence count here now if he wants to keep his head above water, and at that he has to go some to keep from "touching" some friend up for a shilling or two between pays.

Peterborough in Evidence.

Peterborough is very much in evidence around here for I seldom go out but I meet some new faces from home that have either been to the front or about to go. Dr. Rogers is stationed in the barracks here. He is a Captain now in command of the second division of what is known as the C. A. V. C., and he certainly looks fine, and is well liked by his men. I had the pleasure of meeting Mr. Munro of the Peterborough Light and Power Co. on a motor bus, a few weeks ago, but I forget what he is connected with here. I also saw Lt.-Col. Clegg, but was not talking to him. We expect to be reviewed by the King and Lord Kitchener some day this week, and we are looking forward to a big day, as there is a large army of Canadians round here, and when the march past is over, expect that they will not only be pleased with us, but proud of Canada's contribution to the defence of the Empire so nobly and voluntarily given.

Need All that can Come.

What are the returning prospects around Peterborough now? Are they hard to muster up? I hope not, as we need all that can come and more, too, because when this is over we can say that Canada has surely done its work well, and Peterborough will not be behind in proportion to its size in the annals of this addition to history.

Give my best regards to the Chaplain, Mr. Duffus, Mr. Green, George Grange and all the boys. What kind of a season have you had so far—lots of grass fires and the sawdust pile as usual?

Well, Chief, I do not know what more I can tell you at present, but may have something interesting for you the next time, so I will say good-bye for the present and wishing you and the boys of the old brigade the very best of health, I remain,

Yours in the service,

DAMAGES FOR FLOODING ON TRENT CANAL

Mr. J. H. Burnham has received the following from the Minister of Railways and Canals:

Ottawa, Sept. 6th, 1915.

Dear Burnham,—I have yours in reference to the Exchequer Court cases. The sittings of the Exchequer Court are by arrangement with the Judge of that Court, and as your clients are the parties who are moving in this matter it is for them to arrange. We will be ready.

Very truly yours,
(Sgd.) F. Cochrane.

It will be seen from the letter from the Minister that arrangements are proceeding rapidly for the trial of the cases of flooding in 1912 along the Trent waters in the riding. The letter of the Minister says that the Department is ready and that there is no further obstacle in the way. Mr. Burnham, M.P., has applied accordingly to-day to the court at Ottawa for a day of trial and he will probably know in a week or so what day the judges have free which they can allot to Peterborough.

The Death of Rev. Wm. Kenner

Funeral Took Place To-day at Prince Albert

Rev. William Kenner died at Peterborough on Friday night, September 3rd, at 209 London Street, the residence of his son, Principal H. R. H. Kenner, B.A., of the Collegiate Institute. Mr. Kenner was born in Cornwall, England in 1830, being the eldest of three brothers, all of whom have been honoured Methodist ministers in Canada and the Old Land. He entered the Bible Christian ministry in 1851 in England, and married in 1850, Miss Emily Staples, she being a local preacher and in 1871 he came to Hamilton, Ont., as a missionary, establishing the Emerald Street Methodist Church of that city. In 1880, he became president of the Bible Christian Methodist Church in Canada. His other fields of labour besides Hamilton were London, Oshawa, Lot the Britain, Prince Albert, Tyrone and Blackstock. After 33 years in the ministry he was forced to superannuate through illness. He then made his home at Prince Albert until 1908 when he came to live with his son, at Peterborough.

On August 12th, 1909, Mr. and Mrs. Kenner celebrated their golden wedding, at the home of their daughter, Mrs. Forder, at Pipestone, Man. About a year later, August 3rd, 1910, Mrs. Kenner died. Four sons, W. S., H. R. H., J. S., and F. C. L. and two daughters, Mrs. Fox, and Mrs. Forder, survive the parents.

The funeral service was held in the home on Monday evening at 8 o'clock and was in charge of the President of the Conference, Rev. R. R. Kenny and Rev. Benj. Greatrix, Chairman of the District. Revs. Wilson, Crookshanks and Peever took part in the same, each bearing testimony to the amiable spirit, beautiful Christian character and worthy ministry of the departed brother, who was honoured of God through sixty-one years of service in the Christian Church.

This morning his body was borne to the G.T.R. station, followed by the ministers of the city and his many sorrowing friends, thence to Pine Grove Cemetery, Prince Albert, Ont., and laid by the side of his beloved companion and wife.

Mr. Kenner was a true pioneer minister, aggressive and earnest, successful in Church building and revival meetings. Kind and loving as a pastor and parent, strong and scriptural as a preacher of righteousness. May his like in character and service often come again.

GENERAL HUGHES IN PETERBORO' SUNDAY NIGHT

A study in contrasts was afforded on Sunday night as a big touring car purred down George street with General Sir Sam Hughes. It bore him to a C.P.R. siding, where his special car was waiting for the midnight train to Ottawa. Only a few days ago Sir Sam was meeting Gen. Joffre and other members of the French military staff, and inspected the trenches along the western front. He also chatted with General Sir John French and met his own Canadian soldiers in the positions they are holding along the British section of the lines. He conferred with Lord Kitchener, was gorgeously honored in London, and as we all was knighted by King George. Yet, with the flight of a few days he finds himself back on Kent street, Lindsay. From the hub of the universe, other with the war lords in London crashing the lightning thru', to Lindsay is surely a striking contrast.

And the incident of his week end visit home may relieve the conjugal impulse of the Minister of Militia leaving his blushing honors home to Lady Hughes, the chief patronage of his boys as of his trials. It is the human touch that makes a man of us.

Voice of The People

To the Editor of The Examiner:

Dear Sir,—I notice in your Saturday's paper that the ladies living on Gilmour Street want more oil. I wonder what they would say if they lived on Wolfe Street. We have had neither oil or water, and yet there is as much traffic and dust as on any other street in the city. Hoping the Street Department will see their way to distribute oil or water more fairly. Thanking you, I remain,

Yours sincerely,
A Ratepayer.

To the Editor, The Examiner:

Dear Sir,—I see by the papers that the price of flour went down 75c per barrel on Monday of last week when the price of bread was lowered in Toronto to 5c and 10c per loaf and now flour has taken another slump of 50c per barrel on Monday of this week, and yet our bakers have not awakened to the realization of these facts. Would you kindly let them know what is going on in the realm of bakerdoms. It is not stupidity on their part for they have always shown the greatest alacrity in raising the price of bread, once it is announced that the price of flour has gone up. At the present price of flour, with the tendency still further downward, the price of loaves should not be more than 4c and we especially when we know that they now only weigh 1 lb. and 3 lbs. instead of 2 lbs. and 4 lbs. as formerly.

Yours truly,

Mr. Paul Stoeving's Sacred Violin Recital at St. John's Church

The brief violin recital by Mr. Paul Stoeving, given in St. John's church on Sunday evening at the conclusion of the service showed how it is possible to combine devotional feeling and musical expression, it indeed it is permissible, in view of the highest qualities of music, to differentiate them. Mr. Stoeving's short programme consisted of only three numbers, a beautiful aria, Bach - Hymn, Schumann - Traumerei, and Chopin - Nocturne in E flat. It would be difficult to express in ordinary words, adequate appreciation of the masterful treatment of these themes. To execute purity, roundness and breadth in tone, to mastery efficiency of production was added a sympathy of interpretation and devotional spirit that made the performance not only deeply and beautifully devotional, but a source of the highest musical pleasure. In the matter of musical delight the dreamy Schuman number performed with exquisite daintiness from its familiarity, created the strongest popular appeal. The Bach aria speaking through a magnificent instrument in the hands of a master gave character to the devotional element of the production.

At the conclusion of the programme followed a short service of prayer with the singing by the congregation, appropriately enough of the hymn, Our Day of Praise is Done. The service illustrated how closely associated are music and religious devotion.

Yes, Lord, to thy dear will
In these stormy times be still
When in trance angels most are
May hear our low'r part.

Mr. Stoeving, who is connected by marriage with one of the most prominent families of the city, having married a daughter of the late Wm. Leitch, has, with his wife and son, been summering at Stony Lake. He returns to New York to-morrow. He is eminent both as a violinist pedagogue and as an executant. He was for nearly twenty years connected with the Guild Hall school, London, England.

An Explanation In Regard to Relief Aid Patriotic Funds

To the Editor of The Examiner:

Sir,—Again referring to the paragraph which appeared in your issue of Friday last, under the heading of "Fair Play," I have been informed of the name of the person in question, and on looking over our records see that this lady received from the funds $4.00 per week from Dec. 28th last until Jan. 15th, when the amount was increased to $5.00 per week and continued from Jan. 20th to June 24th when one section of the funds was closed out for the summer months. In all she has had from the funds the sum of $115.95, very much more than she would have received by the Patriotic Fund schedule.

Had her husband applied to the registrar of applications for employment he could have been advised of so many as seven places where men were wanted for farm and harvest work and other duties at sums from $30.00 per month and board. These in to the vicinity of the city. This registration was advertised in the local papers for several weeks.

If in the future similar cases should turn up would it not be better for those interested to telephone before coming to a hurried conclusion. I have asked the executive officer to give additional information regarding this case, which is one of many that have given the committee much concern in the administration of the fund.

H. Rush, chairman.

In the distribution of the Patriotic Fund the committee is required to keep within th lines laid down by the Head Office. These rules have been wisely determined, and only after very careful consideration of the circumstances that arise or are likely to come forward. In all cases where the head of the family enlists and leaves a wife and child or children or a son who was the sole support, or largely so, of his mother, the duty of the committee is quite plain. That the family shall receive benefits from the fund from the time the enlisted man left his abode for service.

Aside from these many cases present themselves which are surrounded by one or more elements of variation from the general rule. Else all would be treated practically alike. It is the variation in circumstances that makes the difference in the fact of the case. And there are not rules to cover all cases. Something has to be left to the good sense and consideration of the committee. And it must be remembered that the committee have before it all the facts, so far as very careful investigation can unfold them. On these facts it reaches a decision.

Take the case referred to above in the short letter from the chairman. As it is typical of several, it may be dealt with at some length, that the subscribers to the Fund and the public may have information of the facts in reaching a conclusion as to the action of the committee. No names are made use of. It has been the policy of the committee that as all such details are semi-private, that as little publicity be given as possible to the private affairs of the soldier's family. This is quite right. If necessary all the facts in relation to any case can be had at the distribution office. And it is earnestly requested that before jumping to a conclusion that due enquiry be made. The worst kind of evasion is a half-truth. Statements are made that lack much of the whole. Then when viewed these statements are wholly biased. Enquiry will disclose all the facts.

Coming back to the case in hand. The fund is for the relief and assistance of the wives and families of enlisted man, and for the assistance of mothers of sons on service. That is the head of the family must be on service, and the son a one that was the sole support of the mother. The fact that the son enlists and that the father is at home does not place the family on the fund. In an extreme case where the father was, for instance, bed-ridden, and a positive burden on the family, some assistance can be given. The rules say:

"Cases exist where the able-bodied father remains. In nearly every instance such families should not be regarded as legitimate claimants on the fund. The absence of employment for the father is not a factor that be allowed to influence a committee in its decision."

The above paragraph defines the status of the case in question, so far as the Patriotic Fund is concerned. The case was, and is, outside the rules. The rules may be wrong, but that is the effect. The local committee does not make these rules, only to carry them out. Again, in some confusing way, many people look on the Patriotic Fund allowance as being part of the soldier's pay. Indeed it is not. It is a gift from the people who subscribed the money to the soldier's wife and family. And to be given as assistance.

Three sons enlisted from that family. The committee recognized this and sought for some way in which this could be recognized, if deed it be that apportioning of a sum of money could be termed recognition. The family could be recognized, if indeed it is that the husband and father remained to earn, and support his wife. Also the one boy at home. There was, the committee knew, much of unemployment. It thought that this case was one that could fairly be turned over to the Local Relief Fund, and this was done. From the funds of this branch an allowance was made and steadily continued to this family. From Dec. 28th to Jan. 15th an allowance was made at the rate of $4.00 per week, but drawing in the time indicated, $26.75. From January 20th to June 24th the allowance was increased to $5.00 per week, or $20.00 per month. In all, this family had from the funds $115.65, within the period indicated. On July 1st the fund closed down for the three summer months.

Now had the family been placed on the Patriotic Fund the allowance would have been $10.40 per month, or in all since Dec. 28th to the end of August, $80.00 would have been drawn. The figures show that for the months that have elapsed the family has drawn an average of about $14.50 per week. What is there in that to complain about. The money was paid. The income was nearly 50 per cent. larger than if the Patriotic Fund allowance had been given. It is possible that the committee will consider this case on the opening up of the activities of the Local Relief Fund. But it will certainly not be led to view this case favourably when it finds that such extremely absurd criticism has been inconsiderately made in ignorance or in suppression of the facts. Such is little encouragement to a body of men who are earnestly discharging a serious and exceedingly perplexing public duty.

A feature of this case may be here referred to as in it is involved the matter of the part of the soldier's pay that should come to the wife, or mother, as the case may be. During the months succeeding the first enlistment it was assumed by the authorities that the soldier (husband or son of a mother depending on him for support), would return to the family a part of his pay. If he had not enlisted he would have remained at home to the support of his family by his wage earned in work. But it was presently found that a large number of the soldiers were careless and neglectful in this matter. The Department then passed, by means of an order-in-Council the regulation that the army service would invariably deduct and hold as much of the pay as would at least amount to $15.00 each month, and send this to the wife or mother. Failing this provision the Patriotic Fund found that its resources would be speedily depleted if it undertook to give liberal grants. Many of the soldiers send back $20.00 and several as much as $25.00 each month. In the case above referred to there were three sons, each drawing $31.00 per month pay. At first, so the report made to the committee by the member who investigated the case, the three sons sent the larger part of their pay back to be banked for their benefit, which was quite right. It is now understood that these amounts are banked in England. The sum sent back for the assistance of the family is given to the committee to be about $15.00 per month, all told. The committee felt, that under the circumstances, if the family were placed on the relief fund that the three sons should at least do more than they were doing for the assistance of the family.

Referring to the preceding paragraph and to the conditions that now confront the parent Fund generally, the following intimation, among several is handed to the local committee by the Head Office:

"It is earnestly requested that all relief committees will give their close attention to the foregoing, in order that subscribers may not feel that the money that they have given, at, in many cases, a real sacrifice, is being distributed among people who do not merit aid."

This because so many applications come to the committee that cannot be reasonably entertained.

The committee has in the course of its work endeavoured while keeping within the rules to try and see that the wife and family of the soldier was as well off, financially, as nearly as might be as if the head of the family was at home and in employment. But in making the allowance consideration must be given to the earning power of members of the family, if these were such as were able to work and found employment. Else people would be content to make little effort to secure work so long as the fund made up a living allowance. And many friends, in the absence of the knowledge of the facts have urged upon the committee allowances and that allowances be increased. Here is a typical case coming to the attention of the committee this week. A letter was received from two reputable gentlemen urging that an allowance be given to the mother of an enlisted man, and adding that if the matter were not at once rectified and "should your committee not make what we consider a satisfactory settlement we feel oblized to divert our subscriptions to some other channel of a similar character."

Plainly the absence of information. Here are the facts. The family as constituted being the mother, an adult son and daughter, and a son of fourteen years of age. Here is the revenue of the family as supplied to the committee by the gentlemen and from the committee records:

Separation allowance to mother per month	$20.00
Proportion of soldier's pay, month	15.00
Earnings of daughter, per month	25.00
Earnings of son, per month	40.00
Part of salary continued to be paid by employer each month	20.00
	$115.00

With $115.00 going into this family per month, surely it is no case for assistance from the Patriotic Fund. In any event the allowance from the Fund would be $10.00 and the employer is now paying $20.00 per month. The Head Office would never allow a grant to be made so long as these circumstances prevail in this family.

As to the condition of revenue of the average family of the soldier on duty. The allowance has been sufficient, when taken in connection with a part of the pay, to make the family fairly comfortable. Whether the Patriotic Fund will continue to make such allowances is a matter of doubt. The Fund, as a whole had a deficit over receipts for June of $125,000. For July $115,000 and for August of $158,000. So that more Patriotic work will have to be undertaken if the Fund is to be continued, as it is now being dispensed. But with reference to those families. A few are quoted for information and comparison:

Mrs. H.—Husband worked on a farm. Receipts are, Sept. all $20.00 part of pay, $25.00, Patriotic Fund, $13.00. Total, $58.00 per month. One child of one year.

Mrs. M.—Husband, wage $12.00 perweek Receipts, Sept. all, $20.00, part pay, $15.00, Patriotic Fund, $16.00. Total $51.00. Two children five and one years.

Mrs. M.—Husband wage, $11.00 per week. Receipts, Sept. all, $20.00, part pay $25.00, Patriotic Fund, $18.00. Total $63.00 per month. Four children, ages from six to one year.

Mrs. T.—Husband wage, $70.00 per month. Receipts, Sept. all, $20.00, part pay $25.00, Pat. Fund, $22.00. Total $67.00. Three children, ages seven to ten.

Mrs. C.—Husband's wage, $50.00 per month. Receipts, Sept. all, $20.00, part pay, $20.00, Patriotic Fund, $21.00. Total $61.00. Three children, ages 11 to 4 years.

Mrs. C.—Husband's wage, $42.50 per month. Receipts, Sept. all $20.00, part pay, $20.00, Patriotic Fund, $17.50. Total $57.50. One child aged thirteen years.

As to a paragraph in the letter signed "Fair Play." Just this. Soldier's wife called at the office to ask why her check was not forthcoming, and had it been stopped. Was assured it had not been discontinued, but that the expense of sending out notices was a very considerable one and had been discontinued as the applicants now came regularly for cheques to the office of the city treasurer. Was told that the fact of her husband's death would ensure her continued assistance, from the Patriotic Fund and separation allowance until a pension was declared. But in any event the two allowances amounted to more than the pension that would be allotted. That this pension would continue for life except in the event of her marrying again, which was a matter of the future. That her first duty was to see that herself and children were fairly comfortable, and that if in any arrear for rent that the landlord could wait. He would get along much better than the applicant and that arrears could be paid up in the future.

Canadian Newspapers Printed in the Trenches

Through the kindness of Mrs. Robert Graham, 508 Bonacord street whose son, Private William Graham, went with the first overseas contingent, and is now "somewhere in France," the Examiner has received a copy of the only Canadian new-paper published in the trenches. It is entitled "The Listening Post" and is printed by "kind permission of Lt.-Col. V. W. Odlum, Officer Commanding 7th Infantry Battalion, 1st British Columbia Regiment." The object of its publication is, in the language of the Saultatory, "to break trench monotony." And the first number promises to succeed. It is full of local hits, jokes—fragments of humorous shrapnel. It is filled chiefly with local hits and humourisms that would only be appreciated by those "in the know," and the general tone and tenor of the contents seem to show that the boys at the front, "somewhere in France" are not down-hearted, but are doing their bit with a lightness of spirit and contempt of sentiment that would be cynical if it were not heroic.

The "market" department of the "Post" is important and of interest to those who think that a battalion fund is not necessary for soldiers cut off from every access to the comforts and "luxuries" which we at home, in peace, consider a matter of course. The regular rations may sustain life but they are rather dry eating without some occasional variation. The need of money to a soldier, even in the trenches, is shown by the reproduction of a few of the prices printed under this notice:

"The following goods are for sale in the Battalion Canteens; and the low price should be a recommendation for your patronage"

Galveston, Texas, Sept 4 — The first direct news from Vera Cruz since the recent hurricane broke the Mexican cable, was received in a cablegram which stated the Japanese Minister, Adatchi, had left Mexico City and was en-route to Japan. Business caused him to break his journey to Orizaba last night.

"The situation has been horrible in Mexico City until recently," Obashi Adatchi's secretary said, "but due to the Constitutional administration and the sterling qualities of General Gonzales matters are rapidly improving, and normal conditions may soon be restored.

AUTO RAN INTO THE CHARLOTTE ST. GATE

One of the gates on the west side of Bethune street at the Charlotte street crossing was smashed off on Monday night by an automobile, the number of which is said to be 8592 of Lakefield. The gates were down at the time, the Belleville train was approaching, and the auto ran full tilt into the gate. The driver, who it was reported is Mr. Bycott of Lakefield, claimed that the gate lamp was not lighted, but an eye witness states that the usual warning light was up. The destruction of this part of the gate was complete, but the car escaped with slight damage.

A couple of hours later an automobile driven by Dr. Pulkinghorn collided with what was left of the gate. This occurred while the watchman was repairing the lantern which was used as a warning signal. During the evening the light went out and the watchman hustled it into the gatehouse for repairs. It was while he was away that the second accident occurred.

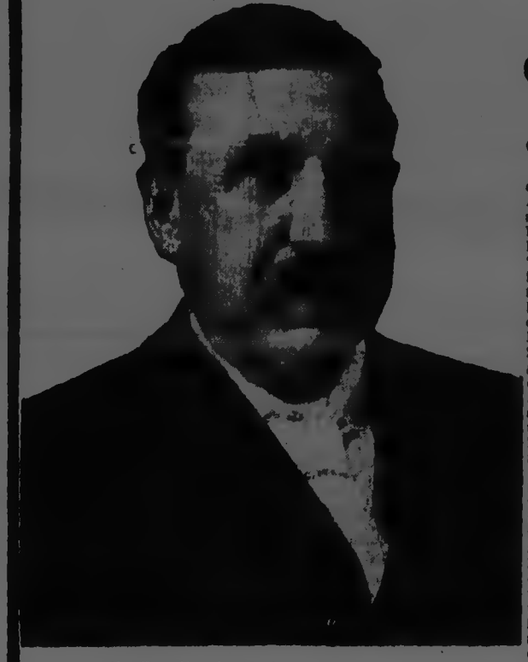
SENLIS REMEMBERS ITS MURDERED INNOCENTS

SENLIS, Sept. 3. The anniversary of the German entry into this city, and the killing of Mayor Eugene Odiey and seventeen citizens was commemorated Yesterday with a simple ceremony. After a religious service at the Cathedral the people of Senlis gathered before the soldiers' monument in the cemetery and listened to addresses in which tribute was paid to the heroism of the Mayor by Deputy Mayor de Parceval and Deputy Paisant.



COLONEL GEO. H. HAM

Honored

"AN Old Home Dinner In Honor of Col. George Helpful Ham, by his old friends on his Sixty-eighth Annual." This tells the whole story and tells it well. To really honor George Ham experience has taught that it must be an "old home dinner," participated in by "old friends." The old friends were there, and the "old home dinner" was very much in evidence, at the Place Viger Hotel, at Montreal on August 23rd. To quote the honored guest himself, there were sixty-eight people, sixty-eight lights, he was sixty-eight years of age, and he hoped to live long enough to attend the sixty-eighth annual banquet of every man in the room.

The occasion was a truly delightful one in every way for it was entirely and successfully informal and the eatables were of the "down-on-the farm" sort that men covet even in the midst of luxury. Curiously enough, the event was a surprise party for the "Helpful" one, yet he had the exceptional privilege of selecting the menu. It was only a few days previously that the Chief Dispenser of Smiles for the Canadian Pacific Railway Company transmitted to some thoughtful friends his own idea of perfection in dinner eatables. Lo and behold, he picks up the card at his birthday dinner and finds the very items in cold type! Therefore, to read the menu is to study and conceive of the personality of George Ham. It is submitted as an interesting exhibit, as follows:

"Sliced tomatoes; celery; olives; pea soup, thin, like mother used to make; a little cold liver and bacon; Irish turkey and cabbage; new boiled Murphys with the sweaters on; buttered white beans, a la Orchestra; dear apple pie; poor pumpkin pie, tea or coffee; Home Run cigarettes, on application to Col. Ham."

That the above bill of fare tickled the fancy of the guest of honor was indicated in his confession to the effect that he had attended more banquets than any man in Canada, but this was the only one that did not send him home hungry. That he was truly surprised was illustrated in Mr. Ham's remark that he had expected to have dinner with three or four friends, and to take them all home in rotation. The gathering was genially presided over by Mr. C. E. E. Usher, Passenger Traffic Manager. The speakers included Mr. Alfred Price, Assistant General Manager; Mr. Robert Miller, Windsor Station Superintendent; Mr. J. Murray Gibbon, General Publicity Agent; Mr. H. G. Chamberlain, Chief of the Investigation Department; Capt. Walsh, Chief Superintendent Marine Department; Mr. William H. Hurst, Central News Agency, New York; and Mr. Ham. Toasts to the King, Canada, and the guest of honor were drunk, the last being proposed by Mr. Miller. Mr. Ham is one man who will not go down to his grave without knowing that he is esteemed, though considering the vast number of his friends, from one ocean to the other, he can scarcely know the affection in which he is held. Some of this was in evidence in the words of the speakers, and in the response of all listeners' hearts.

Mr. Price paid tribute to Mr. Ham's refreshing, unconquerable, smiling cheerfulness. "Chief" Chamberlain informed the company that he had never had to look after Mr. Ham in Vancouver; Mr Gibbon quoted words written about Mr. Ham being a "large body of superfine humanity, entirely surrounded by the C. P. R."; Captain Walsh added his tribute of admiration. Mr. Miller credited the honored guest with unselfishness and illustrated by recounting incidents.

Mr. Ham's reply was appropriate and characteristic. That he deeply appreciated the honor done him was apparent, though he said that he was either worthy of a halo and a harp with a thousand strings, or else he was among a crowd of affectionate friends. If he were able to believe that it was the latter, then he believed that they were honoring what a man ought to be rather than what he was. He did not deny having labored ceaselessly for half of the sixty-eight years to make the C. P. R. what he believed it to be, the biggest and best transportation company in the world, and prayed for the privilege of working for it as long as the good God would give him breath. Even after death he hoped to find on his own tombstone, "He did his best for the C. P. R." Mr. Ham paid touching tribute to the personality of the late Mr William Stitt, and the large group of C. P. R. officials indicated that his words were shared by all. He also spoke of other changes and complimented the railway on having worthily filled the places left. Mr. Ham did not fail to work in his accustomed humor, and it was the real George Ham variety that has made his name a by-word throughout Canada.

"For He's a Jolly Good Fellow" was heartily sung by the company for Mr. Ham, and later for Mr Usher, when Mr. Ham called for his health as one of the most respected men in the C. P. R. The dinner closed with "Auld Lang Syne," sung in the "old home" style. After rising, Mr. Ham was subjected to general good wishes and happy returns.

Prefacing the menu was a poem, "How Laughter Came to Canada," written in 1903 by Neil Munro, of Toronto, being a sort of parody on the creation according to Genesis, reaching its point in the fourth verse, which follows:

Long thought the Lord, and one bright day
He made Him a man of His spit and clay,
And set him forth in the sun to dry,
In a place where waters went ripping by.
Said the Lord, "Be laughter wherever you are,
Stand forth, George Ham, of the C. P. R.

THE WORLD OF SPORT

Labour Day Demonstration At Riverside Park

Interesting Event Materialized Despite the Inclemency of the Weather—Extensive Programme of Sports—The Baby Show Attracted a Lot of Attention

The drawing contest in connection with the Labour Day celebration and annual gathering of the members of the local unions, to come off as a regular feature of the day's proceedings. [illegible] winning club was the [illegible] drawing took place on the ground on the one on the course [illegible] winning number for work, the Labour Committee were [illegible] to be claimed, but was [illegible] and another [illegible] was adopted.

Yesterday, the drawing took place as usual, and when the first ticket was picked out the announcer called out the number, but no one responded. Probably remembering last year's experience, those in charge of the feature decided upon an immediate disposal of the prize and a second draw was made. The holder of this number was near at hand and he was declared the winner. The second prize was disposed of without a hitch. But it seems that the holder of the first number, 916, was on the ground, but did not know the drawing was taking place and failed to hear the announcement. Mr. James Mabee was awarded the first prize on the grounds, but last night a member of the Field Day Executive stated that Mr. Burns was entitled to the prize, and it was intimated that a duplicate of it would be purchased for Mr. Burns. Mr. A. Stewart won the second prize, a water set, valued at $2.50. The first prize was a cut-glass bowl, presented by Mr. R. J. Soden.

The Programme of Sports.

The athletic events resulted as follows:

Boys under ten: 1st, L. Brown, 2nd J. Johnson.

Girls under ten: 1st Helen Keown, 2nd Helen Lapcott.

Girls under 11, 75 yards: 1st, Helen Salter, 2nd, Helen Kearns.

Boys under 11, 75 yards: 1st, H. Viner, 2nd, D. Leier.

City Championship, 100 yards: 1st, Kevin Corkery, in 13½ seconds; 2nd, Jas. McMartin.

Union men, over 50, 100 yards: 1st, George Ansems, Lorne; 2nd, Fred Dobson.

One mile open: 1st, Charlie Thorpe, time 5 min. 10 sec.; 2nd, Bruce Hamilton.

Running high jump: 1st, Jas. Rice, 4 ft. 2nd, Bruce Hamilton.

Vaulting with pole: 1st, Jame Rice, 8 feet; 2nd, Jas. McMartin.

Married Union men: 1st, A. C. Miller, 31 sec.; 2nd, George Campbell.

Running broad jump: 1st, Jas. McMartin, 15 ft. 3 in.; 2nd, J. Clough.

Single Union men, 100 yards: 1st, Vincent O'Keefe, 13 sec.; 2nd, Jas. Shaughnessy.

School Boys' Relays, 12 to 16: 1st, Kate Greene School, time 57 sec.; 2nd, Lapcott's, Keenok, H. Viner.

220 yards open: 1st, J. McMartin, 25 sec.; 2nd, K. Corkery.

Boys running: 1st, Lewis (East End), Scouts, 16 sec.; 2nd, Cherrett Empress, 17 sec.

The Baby Show.

Mr. G. A. Gillespie, M.P.P., and Mayor Beall were the judges of the Baby Show. The winning baby, under 6 months, was Arthur George Hare.

Between six months and one year the prize went to Swan Orlando, 1st, and Orme Herron, 2nd.

The other officials were R. Rose, G. Roper, clerk of course; G. L. Gee, field judge; Geo. N. Graham, R. J. Scott, timekeepers; J. Picard, J. Coates, announcer; Geo. Ansems, starter; G. Roper, committee; [illegible] G. Wearn. And the whole celebration was under the management of the following committee: Chairman, G. L. Mylard, secretary-treasurer C. Hannaford, committee, George Ansems, Fred Browne, T. Carroll, Geo. Campbell, P. Adamson, B. M. Frederick, H. Gainey, W. Flanders, A. J. Sharpe, T. Palmer, R. Mitchell, Chas. Seymour, Dan Wiseman, Hugh Robertson, F. Turner, W. A. Mewburn, H. Cant, T. Rew, T. Pacey, J. Crawford, I. Williams, R. Frost.

The Parade.

Owing to the absence of many union men from the city the parade was not as large as usual, although all the locals were represented. The Printers and Moulders apparently made the best showing. About two o'clock headed by the 57th Regimental Band, the men paraded down George street and walked directly to Riverside.

Baseball Match.

The ball game between the East Ends and a team gathered by Jack Peirce was virtually Dan McCabe's exhibition, drawing against Jack Yeates. The Abe Smith and Phelan was the latter's battery. Kirn and Swanson opposed them. The East Ends beat by 5-4 in a close and interesting game. Mr. Belting was the umpire. The game was [illegible] by Mr. G. A. Gillespie.

BASEBALL

The Thistles wish to challenge East Ends to a game of baseball for a supper, the teams to be the same as yesterday.

Insists Swiss Are Neutral

(Canadian Special)

Toronto, Sept. 7.—Emile Lemaitre, former chief engineer of Geneva, who sailed a few days ago for Scandinavia, on the French line steamer Touraine, said that the despatch published on August 19th from the United States Minister at Berne, intimated that Switzerland was preparing to take sides with the Germanic allies did not accurately portray the situation.

At the beginning of the war the Swiss Government mobilized an army of 450,000 men to guard the frontiers and preserve its neutrality. This army has been reduced to 200,000, he said. When I was in Berne towards the end of June the Federal Council was measures to insure that all the belligerent nations should be treated alike.

We have German, French and Italian cantons whose inhabitants speak the languages of their ancestors, and may be swayed a little in their personal opinions on the war, but they are all imbued with the one spirit that Switzerland must maintain her neutrality at all cost. That is the reason the army was mobilized.

Mr. Lemaitre said, further, that when he was in Zurich and Berne before leaving for New York the sympathies of the majority of the people were in favor of Germany but according to a letter from a leading banker he had received by the last mail it had veered to the other side. This change had been caused chiefly by added to the treatment of Belgium, as the Swiss realized that their country was in the same position and depended for its interest on its treaties.

HAVELOCK TEAM WERE BEATEN BY ST. SIMON'S

LINDSAY, Sept. 6—St. Simon's earned the right to represent Toronto in the juvenile final of the O.A.A. when they defeated Havelock here today before a large crowd by 11 to 5.

The saints got an early lead in the first period and kept in front all the way. In the second quarter Havelock made a spurt and almost caught the Toronto boys. This was Havelock's quarter.

Penalties in the third quarter weakened Havelock's attack and enabled the St. Simon's lads to pile up a lead, the quarter ending 8 to 3.

In the final period Toronto scored 3 to Havelock's 2 goals, making the final score 11 to 5.

Chandler in goal was a mountain of strength, saving numerous dangerous situations, many times holding the ball in a [illegible] Wright, inside home, [illegible] and whether I [illegible] a higher calling than that in which I was an understudy.

"It meant much to me," he continued, "I thought the whole matter over, I can truthfully say I enlisted on my knees. My views on the matter may be homely, but there's how it happened. I am prepared to die. Death let me will mean more than life could. That question is settled so let us go on further.

The next matter was, what was the best use I could make of my life. Could I do more service by making the supreme sacrifice for such a principle as is at stake in the present war, or by holding back and allowing some other man, probably not so well prepared to part with life as I am, to go ahead and fill the gap in the ranks that I should have filled. It wasn't an easy matter to decide. I have only one life to live and one death to die. I may go through the campaign safely, or I may be buried with the [illegible] lads [illegible] in France or Belgium. But I faced the question, and the answer came, and I do. I am in the Kitchener form. I have never had a doubt in my mind since that I did the right and proper thing.

LONDON, Sept. 7.—A German news agency declares that Riga has been taken by Germans, by the official statements of Berlin, Petrograd or Paris do not carry any confirmation. Berlin newspapers are publishing stories of panics in the Russian capital, owing to the Russian retirements. A story from Athens says the chief-of-police in Petrograd has been assassinated. The Czar is going to the front to inspire his troops.

LONDON, Sept. 7.—Eight hours before the Allan liner Hesperian was torpedoed, a submarine was sighted a few miles astern by passengers, according to a press despatch from Queenstown this afternoon. The Hesperian then adopted a ziz-zag course to avoid attack, these despatches stated and the submarine disappeared from sight.

It was stated the survivors would make affidavits concerning these alleged facts.

WHY HE ENLISTED

(Stratford Beacon.)

He was a fine type of Canadian manhood. Standing within an inch or so of six feet, he was matured beyond the ordinary for his 24 years. He had lived a clean life, and was inclined to take life a great deal more in earnest than many of his kind. He had taken his enlistment seriously. He had not been carried away by the clamour of war or the clanking of his accoutrements. It had meant a long session of prayerful thought and consideration, for he had spent some years preparing himself for his life's work, the ministry. One might almost stop and wonder why he had made the choice when he was so well fitted for the work he had intended to follow previous to the outbreak of the war.

His story was told in a quiet, studied fashion that marked his whole demeanor. There were no exclamation marks in it, but behind it all there breathed the deepest conviction that he had sought his best battle, and after making the decision he would be a soldier worthy of the name.

"You asked me how I viewed the question of enlisting for the present war," he remarked to the questioner.

BOTH OFFICERS HAVE REPORTED FOR DUTY

[illegible] borough it will mean that the battalion will remain in camp throughout the winter with the other units. If camp is broken about the first of November, the 80th may go to Belleville and occupy the clothing factory which was occupied by the 39th Battalion last winter.

Last year on the 80th Battalion little I. O. L. Hemmings will organize another battalion. Peterborough will be given authority to organize a new battalion which it will be given for the winter, and this will join Kingston Belleville, Ottawa and Pembroke with a battalion each for the winter months. It is said that the winter battalions will be composed largely of men who have enlisted for the war, and there will be no more trouble in the work of enlisting men. I. Hemmings is [illegible] to be in the very front of the ranks and [illegible] has been obliged to [illegible] to [illegible] to utilize in this [illegible].

Recruiting stations on Market street will be kept open and every effort made to secure recruits from the outlying country places. Bridgewater, Lakefield, Peterborough and other [illegible] will be visited by the recruiting officers on Monday to Barrie-field camp.

BRITISH LABOUR UNIONS VOTE FOR CONSCRIPTION

BRISTOL, Eng., September 7.—Resolutions containing compulsory enlistment in the British armies were adopted by an unanimous vote at today's session of trades union congress here. Copies of the resolution were telegraphed at once to Lord Kitchener, Premier Asquith, and Minister of Munitions Lloyd George.

Action was taken following hero speeches from some of the more radical labour leaders who declared that an attempt to force conscription act by the government might disrupt the nation.

Miss Jean McCulloch has arrived back from her holidays at Orillia.

WARM WELCOME FOR LIEUT. HAULTAIN

Port Hope Officer Back From Front is Enthusiastically Received

Port Hope tendered an enthusiastic reception yesterday to the first of her sons invalided home from the European battlefields in the person of Lieut. Robin Haultain, son of Mrs. C. S. Haultain of Port Hope, and formerly of Peterborough. Lieut. Haultain, who is a nephew of Lt.-Col. R. M. Dennistoun, officer commanding the 53rd Battalion, C.E.F., is home to recuperate after a long service at the front. When war broke out he was at Lake Athabasca with a survey party, and knew nothing of the excitement for several weeks. When word finally drifted into the far north young Haultain, who is a graduate of the Royal Military College, decided to enlist and with a number of others started for the south. On the long hike on foot and by canoe, others were picked up and by the time civilization was reached there was a party of eighteen. Great was the disappointment when the squad heard that the First Canadian Contingent had already sailed for the Old Country. Haultain decided not to wait for the second, but took passage to England and enlisted as a private in the 2nd King Edward Horse. Shortly afterward he was given a commission in the Royal Field Artillery, and went to the front in May. Early in August, after weeks of continuous service with his battery affected and suffering from a breakdown, generally he was sent back to England to rest up, and finally obtained a short furlough.

When he arrived in Port Hope yesterday he was met by the Port Hope Band and a big crowd of cheering citizens who escorted him to his home. He was pelted with flowers at the station while St. Paul's Chimes and all the bells in the town rang out a joyful welcome.

FIRST ANNIVERSARY OF ST. ALBAN'S MISSION

Sunday School Roll Shows 72 Children—Has Ambitions to Become Church

St. Alban's Mission Brownson was a scene of unusual activity on Sunday evening, well filled as the occasion was the first anniversary services.

The Rev. W. White Rector of St. Luke's, addressed the life of Holy Baptism, and also preached in the forenoon at the Sacrament. The mission presented a bright and cheerful appearance having been renovated and painted by Mr. J. Burns and Mr. F. Wolbrook. Conversation and Sunday School Superintendent, respectively to those whom save material and services gratuitously. St. Albans may now be regarded as a permanent addition to the Anglican Churches of Peterborough.

Opened on Sunday afternoon Sept. 6th 1914 by the Rev. James Price, Rector of St. George's as a Sunday School with an attendance of sixteen children. It now has a regular evening service in addition to the Sunday School service. The Sunday School roll shows the names of 72 children, but several families have moved from the neighborhood, the heads of them being at the front or working in munition factories in England and Scotland. At present the number on the roll is 40. Twice this little mission has been honoured with the presence of the Bishop of the Diocese on Nov. 1st, 1914, at the formal opening, when his Lordship inducted Mr. Spence as missionary-in-charge, and again, on May 9th of this year. There is no doubt that in time, as the population of Brownson increases, the present rather dilapidated building will be replaced by a substantially built Church. At least such is the ambition of the faithful band of workers connected with St. Alban's.

Street Car Left the Rails

Shortly after noon to-day, a street car jumped the track a short distance below Sherbrooke Street, on the Park Street line. The car was proceeding south at the time. After leaving the rails it ploughed along the roadway for a distance of twenty-five or thirty feet. A couple of cars were despatched to the scene, where, after very strenuous efforts, the car was replaced on the rails.

WEDDING BELLS

CAHILL—LARKIN.

A very pretty wedding took place on Wednesday, Aug. 18th, in the Holy Rosary Church, Vancouver, B.C., when Mr. Wm. F. Cahill, the popular clerk at the Hotel Vancouver, formerly of Peterborough, Ont., was married to Miss Teresa Loretto Larkin, one of London, Ontario's most popular ladies. Rev. Father O'Boyle officiated at the ceremony. The bride was attired in white silk, with lace overdress and white lace hat to match, and carried a bouquet of white roses. The bride-maid was Miss Clara Cahill, formerly of Peterborough, who wore white silk with a black velvet picture hat and carried pink roses. The groom was attended by Mr. Jas. J. Cody, while Father Connolly presided at the organ. After a wedding breakfast at the Hotel Dunsmuir the young couple left by the 10 o'clock boat for Victoria and Seattle. On their return they will take up their residence at 1185 Haro Street.

OBITUARY

CATHERINE MARCELLA MAYCOCK.

The death occurred to-day of Catherine Marcella Maycock, the one year old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Michael Maycock, 344 Water street. Death resulted from convulsions, the little girl being ill only a few hours. The funeral will be held on Wednesday morning to St. Peter's cemetery.

MRS. ROBERT MEHARRY.

Mrs. Jessie Meharry, relict of Robert Meharry, passed away during the night at her home, 140 Bonaccord Road, and was found in bed this morning. The deceased was born in England, and was the daughter of the late John Cheer. She had reached an advanced age, which was said to be partly the cause of her death. The funeral will be held on Thursday at 2.30 to the Little Lake Cemetery.

THE BEST TRIP TO HEALEY FALLS

Nothing daunted by the accidents that met on the opening of Labour Day, the Peterborough Canoe Club journeyed to Healey Falls on the steamer Stony Lake. This had been the greatest thing up this season to Healey Falls, and it was felt that as such it had been so well advertised her last trip might not prove so popular. The reverse however proved to be the case for the boat was crowded to the gunwales, and a better day and better company for the excursion could not be wished for.

First Supplied Liquor To Blacklister

Was Fined $25—Blacklister Was Penalized to the Extent of $10

Last week Constable Peter Macintyre Dunbar Hunt was [illegible] Dorner with a quart of rum in his possession. This morning Dorner appeared in police court charged with the crime and pleaded guilty. The accused stepped into the witness box while being escorted from the cells to the police. Having thus established himself as a person for leniency followed with an apparently tearful attempt to influence the Magistrate, who commanded the officer to remove the prisoner. Dorner admitted having supplied Edward Horton with two bottles of rum, but denied knowledge of the fact that Horton was in the habit of selling liquor. Horton stated that he first warned Dorner of the risk he was running. His Worship imposed a fine of twenty-five dollars to be paid forthwith, in the case of Dorner and ten dollars in the case of Horton.

"There is no use of talking to Dorner," said His Worship. "You have wrecked your own life and now you want to wreck others." was the words that fell on Dorner's ears as he disappeared below.

PRESENTATION WILL BE MADE

Interesting Evening in North Monaghan Town Hall on Friday

On Thursday evening next, at 8 o'clock, the Town Hall, North Monaghan, will be the scene of a presentation of a watch to Gordon Wint, the lad who this year passed highest for N.M. at the recent entrance examinations. Mr. Burnham, M.P., who will make the presentation, will be accompanied by Mr. R. J. Soden and other gentlemen; and Mr. Gallespie, M.A., has also been invited to be present, and to do honour to the occasion. It is likely that there will be a very large attendance of those interested in education in the township. The proceedings will also partake of the nature of a patriotic demonstration.

ST. PAUL'S CHURCH

Rev. Robert Pogue Resumes His Pastorate After Two Months Absence—Splendid Music

The esteemed pastor of St. Paul Presbyterian church, Rev. Robert Pogue occupied the pulpit on Sunday and delivered two forceful and inspiring addresses to large congregations. In the morning he took occasion to thank the members for the patience they had exercised during his period of holidays, and said he was glad to be once more among his people. He would not have taken so long a vacation had he not felt the necessity of rather doing that on coming up to work. He was glad to be able to say that during the past months he felt better than he had done for three years. He left with the assurance of the congregation to be able to go forward together. The Rev. Mr. Mackay occupied the pulpit in the evening.

British Submarine Scores Again

THE SCANDINAVIAN IS SAFE IN ENGLAND

ANOTHER TURKISH TRANSPORT IS SUNK BY BRITISH SUB.

Was Carrying Big Guns to the Gallipoli Peninsula---German Positions on German Coast Are Again Bombarded by British Squadron.

PARIS, Sept. 8.—Another large Italian expedition is embarking at Taran to proceed to the Dardanelles, according to Rome despatches.

AMSTERDAM, Sept. 8.—Despatches received here state an insurrection is being planned in Turkey by anti-German Turks to overthrow Enver Pasha and seize Constantinople.

CARDIFF, Sept. 8.—For the third time since the war began a strike was called in South Wales coal district to-day. About 3,500 miners in the two collieries quit work at the orders of their leaders, protesting against the employment of non-union miners.

LONDON, Sept. 8.—There was another German air raid on the east coast of England last night, causing some fires and a few casualties. Particulars are not available.

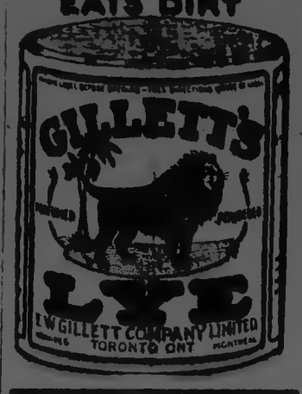
LONDON, Sept. 8.—A British submarine has sunk a Turkish transport in the Sea of Marmora, carrying big guns to Gallipoli.

LONDON, Sept. 8.—One American was lost in the sinking of the Hesperian.

NEW YORK, Sept. 8.—Eighty million dollars more in gold and securities arrived in New York last night from Halifax.

PARIS, Sept. 8.—A British squadron again bombarded the Belgian coast between Nieuport and Ostend inflicting great damage on the German batteries and positions.

OTTAWA, Sept. 8.—It is officially announced that the Scandinavian has arrived in England safely Saturday with 61 officers, 1,234 men, and 73 nurses, of the Canadian Expeditionary Force.



DR. DUMBA IN TROUBLE

Australian Ambassador is Accused of Participating in Plans to Check the Manufacture of Munitions in U. S.

THE PRESS IS BITTER

WASHINGTON, Sept. 7.—Dr. Constantin Theodor Dumba, Austro-Hungarian Ambassador had an engagement with Secretary Lansing at the State Department to-day to discuss reports that he had participated in plans to check the manufacture of munitions in the United States. It was understood the Ambassador's request for the interview was based on a desire to explain his despatches addressed to the Austrian Foreign Office which were taken by British authorities from James F. J. Archibald, an American newspaper man serving as a messenger.

The messages were said to have presented a request for which there is no precedent in American diplomacy. They were understood to disclose that Dr. Dumba had undertaken to advise subjects of Austro-Hungary that they were violating a legal code of the dual empire in working in American products and supplies for the allies.

Dual Citizenship Involved.

The ambassador's alleged activities involve the question of dual citizenship, along a line of diplomatic controversy. Officials doubt that there has been any law violation in the incident, but it was suggested the interview would result in a determination by Secretary Lansing as to whether there had been any breach of diplomatic proprieties or international ethics.

That Dumba never suggested and did not unqualifiedly recommend the Austrian strike was pointed out to-day in official quarters. They said in the case it was thought the administration would take the position that while in fact there was a breach of [illegible] subject by Dumba [illegible] warrant a request for his recall.

It was stated officially to-day that the ambassador would not make any statement regarding the matter, but it was understood that he would issue a statement to-morrow.

U. S. MAY SAY THAT HESPERIAN WAS A WAR SHIP

Washington Government May Change Its Attitude Toward What Constitutes Arming a Merchant Vessel---Would Be of Far-reaching Importance.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 7.—There is a strong possibility that the United States may change its attitude toward what constitutes arming a merchant vessel, and in the light of the development of submarine warfare, may hold that the mounting of small defence guns only, heretofore considered as not arming a ship, may be considered armament, which will remove the vessel from the non-combatant class.

State Department officials gave strong indications of this to-day and stated that when the United States at the beginning of the war declared that passenger ships carrying defence guns of small calibre would be permitted to enter and leave American ports and would not be classed as war vessels, submarine warfare had not developed to its present stage.

Officials pointed out that a 4.7 gun, such as is reported to have been mounted on the Hesperian, is of sufficient size to sink a submarine.

Proof of this fact, officials think, might be construed as a purpose to challenge the German blockade. It was pointed out in the same connection that the British ship Waimana, mounting a small gun, has been held up for some time at Newport News while the State Department has been deciding her status.

Officials admitted that a decision on this point involving a change in the American procedure toward such ships would be a far-reaching importance to the international situation arising over the submarine question.

BULLET PROOF STRETCHER COVER LATEST INVENTION

[illegible] ordinarily the new conditions met with in the present gigantic war give rise to new inventions of great importance. Many of these inventions are designed for destruction, and many for defensive protection. Occasionally there is one that has to do with relief work such as the present invention.

The work of the Red Cross and hospital attendants has become so hazardous and their immunity from attack while engaged in rescue work has become so uncertain, that some more material physical protection has been considered necessary. To meet these conditions a bullet proof stretcher cover has been invented in England. It appears to meet the conditions perfectly. It consists of a long metal shroud, closed and arched at the top, and high enough to enable the attendants to stand erect within. At the front end the shield is rounded and sloped backward to deflect bullets and two sight openings or cyclopes are provided through which the attendants may locate the wounded. The sides are composed of [illegible] stretcher steel forming the bottom. A vertical cross section would look like the shield of Achilles. It is mounted on two wheels. By this means the stretcher bearers may locate a wounded soldier with less danger to themselves, place him on the stretcher and then wheel him to a place of safety. The scheme is most ingenious and valuable invention.

Rescue Fifteen From Flames in Boston Harbour

Nine Women and Baby Among Those Imperilled in Motor Boat Fire

BOSTON, Mass., Sept. 8.—The motor boat Nautilus caught fire off Long Island Head in Boston harbor with fifteen persons on board. All were rescued by men in other boats, who were in constant danger of the explosion of a tank of two hundred gallons of gasoline.

The Nautilus, valued at several thousand dollars, was under charter to Louis C. Varey, of Boston, and he and his wife were entertaining a party of friends when a leaking gasoline pipe caught fire. The flames spread quickly and all on board, including nine women and a baby, were in danger of losing their lives.

While other craft kept at a distance fearing an explosion, E. W. Reed and Fred Souther, of Hull, ran a swift launch alongside of the burning Nautilus and took off the women and the baby. Their small boat was so crowded they had no room for the five men on board the Nautilus.

These five men were being crowded off by the flames when a life boat was lowered from the Nantasket excursion steamer and its crew took off the men. Several of those rescued from the motor boat were scorched by the flames. The Nautilus was [illegible]

Our Serial Story Page

[illegible] short, the Hungarian [illegible] to Scotch [illegible] the purpose of restoring it [illegible] to habitableness. An interesting discovery on the part of the Hungarian [illegible] with [illegible] that had been [illegible] start on their way before [illegible] The bundle was the [illegible] of the castle for the price [illegible] it [illegible], or whatever you call it, [illegible] set forth that I, John Smart, was the sole and unincumbered owner of everything the castle [illegible]

Our second and more critical survey of the lower floors of the castle revealed a number of things necessary for extensive repairs and refurbishing, but I was not dismayed. With a ballhousing [illegible] for expenses I dispatched Rudolph, the oldest of the two sons, to Linz with instructions to procure artisans who could be depended upon to undo the ravages of time to a certain extent and who might even suggest [illegible] to remedy the leaks.

My friends, abhorring the multitude of the complaints, refused to sleep over night in the drafty, almost jerry-built structure. They came over to see me on the ensuing day and begged me to return to Vienna with them. But, full of the project in hand, I would not be moved. With the house full of [illegible] hackmatics, masons, tile makers, blacksmiths, plumbers, plasterers, painters, paperers, scrubwomen and chimney sweeps, I felt that I could not [illegible] and leave it without a commanding influence.

Just as they were leaving my secretary and my valet put in an appearance, having been summoned from Vienna the day before. I confess I was glad to see them. The thought of spending a second night in that limitless bedchamber, with all manner of night birds trying to get in at the windows, was rather disturbing, and I welcomed my retainers with open arms.

My first night had been spent in a huge old bed, carefully prepared for occupancy by Herr Schmick's frau. I knew there was a ceiling, for I had seen its beams during the daylight hours, but to save my soul I couldn't imagine anything so far away as it seemed to be after the candles had been taken away by the caretaker's wife, who had tucked me away in the bed with ample propriety and thoroughness combined.

Twice during that interminable night I thought I heard a baby crying. So it is not unreasonable to suppose that I was more than glad to see Poopendyke, my secretary, clambering up the path with his typewriter in one hand and his green baize bag in the other, followed close behind by Britton, my valet, and the Gargantuan brothers bearing trunks, bags, boxes and my golf clubs.

"Whew!" said Poopendyke, dropping wearily upon my doorstep.

My secretary is a youngish man with thin, stooping shoulders and a habit of perpetually rubbing his knees together when he walks.

"It is something of a climb, isn't it?" said I beamingly.

"In the name of heaven, Mr. Smart, what could have induced you to"—He got no further than this, and to my certain knowledge this unfinished reproof was the nearest he ever came to openly convicting me of asininity.

"Make yourself at home, old fellow," said I in some haste. I felt sorry for him. "We are going to be very cozy here."

"Cozy?" murmured he, blinking.

"I haven't explored those upper regions," I explained nervously, divining his thoughts. "We shall do it together in a day or two."

"It looks as though it might fall down if we jostled it carelessly," he remarked, having recovered his breath.

"I am expecting masons at any minute," said I, contemplating the unstable stone crest of the northeast turret with some uneasiness. My face brightened suddenly. "That particular section of the castle is uninhabitable, I am told. It really doesn't matter if it collapses. Ah, Britton! Here you are, I see. Good morning."

Britton, a very exacting servant, looked me over critically.

"Your coat and trousers need pressing, sir," said he. "And where am I to get the hot water for [illegible] sir?"

"Frau Schmick will supply anything you need, Britton," said I, happy on being able to give the information.

"It is not I as needs it, sir," said he, feeling of his smoothly shaved chin.

"Come in and [illegible] about the place," said I, with a magnificent sweep of my arm to counteract the feeling of utter insignificance I was experiencing at the moment.

* * * * * * *

A day or two later the castle was swarming with workmen. The banging of hammers, the rasp of saws, the spattering of mortar, the crashing of stone and the fumes of charcoal crucibles extended to the remotest recesses. The tower of Babel was being reconstructed in the language of six or eight nations.

Poopendyke, in great distress of mind, notified me on the fourth day of rehabilitation that the cost of labor as well as living had gone up appreciably since our installation. In fact it had doubled. He paid all of my bills, so I suppose he knew what he was talking about.

"You will be surprised to know, Mr. Smart," he said, consulting his sheets, "that scrubwomen are getting more here than they do in New York city, and I am convinced that there are more scrubwomen. Today we had thirty new ones scrubbing the loggia on the gun room floor, and they all seem to have apprentices working under them. The carpenters and plasterers were not so numerous today. I paid them off last night, you see. It may interest you to hear that their wages for three days amounted to nearly $700 in our money, to say nothing of materials and breakage."

"Breakage?" I exclaimed in surprise.

"Yes, sir, breakage. They break nearly as much as they mend. We'll—we'll go bankrupt, sir, if we're not careful."

I liked his pronoun. "Never mind," I said; "we'll soon be rid of them."

"By the way," he said, "old man Schmick and his family haven't been paid for nearly two years. They have put in a claim. The late owner assured them they'd get their money from the next"—

"Discharge them at once," said I.

"We can't get on without them," protested he. "They know the ropes, so to speak, and, what's more to the point, they know all the keys. Yesterday I was nearly two hours in getting to the kitchen for a conference with Mrs. Schmick about the marketmen. In the first place, I couldn't find the way, and in the second place all the doors are locked."

"Please send Herr Schmick to me in the—in the"— I couldn't recall the name of the administration chamber at the head of the grand staircase, so I was compelled to say: "I'll see him here."

"If we lose them we also are lost," was his sententious declaration. I believed him. We kept the Schmicks.

On the fifth day of our occupancy Britton reported to me that he had devised a plan by which we could utilize the tremendous horse power represented by the muscles of those lazy giants, Rudolph and Max. He suggested that we rig up a huge windlass at the top of the incline, with stout steel cables attached to a small car which could be hauled up the cliff by a hitherto wasted human energy, and as readily lowered. It sounded feasible and I instructed him to have the extraordinary railway built, but to be sure that the safety device clutches in the cog wheels were sound and trusty.

That evening, after the workmen had filed down the steep looking for all the world like an evacuating army, I sought a few moments of peace and quiet in the small balcony outside my bedroom windows. My room was in the western wing of the castle, facing the river. The eastern wing mounted even higher than the one in which we were living, and was topped by the loftiest watch tower of them all. We had not attempted to do any work over in that section as yet, for the simple reason that Herr Schmick couldn't find the keys to the doors.

Suddenly I found myself staring as if stupefied at the white figure of a woman who stood in the topmost balcony of the eastern wing, fully revealed by the last glow of the sun and apparently as deep in dreams as I had been the instant before.

CHAPTER II.

I Defend My Property.

For ten minutes I stood there staring up at her, completely bewildered and not a little shaken. My first thought had been of ghosts, but it was almost instantly dispelled by a significant action on the part of the suspected wraith. She turned to whistle over her shoulder and to snap her fingers peremptorily, and then she stooped and picked up a rather fusty chow dog, which promptly barked at me across the intervening space, having discovered me almost at once, although I was many rods away and quite snugly ensconced among the shadows. The lady in white muzzled him with her hand, and I could almost imagine I heard her reproving whispers. After a few minutes she apparently forgot the dog and lifted her hand to adjust something in her hair. He again barked at me, quite ferociously for a chow. This time it was quite plain to her that he was not barking at the now shadowy moon. She peered over the stone balustrade and an instant later disappeared from view through the high, narrow window.

Vastly exercised, I set out in quest of Herr Schmick, marshaling Poopendyke as I went along, realizing that I would have to depend on his German, which was less halting than mine and therefore more likely to dovetail with that of the Schmicks, neither of whom spoke German because they loved it, but because they had to, being Austrians. We found the four Schmicks in the vast kitchen.

"Herr Schmick," said I, "will you be so good as to inform me who the dickens that woman is over in the east wing of the castle?"

"Woman, mein herr?" He almost dropped his keys.

"A woman in a white dress, with a dog."

"A dog!" he cried. "But, mein herr, dogs are not permitted to be in the castle."

"Who is she? How did she get there?"

"Heaven defend us, sir! It must have been the ghost of"—

"Ghost, your grannyl" I cried, relapsing into English. "Please don't beat about the bush, Mr. Schmick. She's over there in the unused wing which I haven't been allowed to penetrate in spite of the fact that it belongs to me. You say you can't find the keys to that side of the castle. Will you explain how it is that it is open to strange women and—and dogs?"

"You must be mistaken, mein herr," he whined abjectly. "She cannot be there. She— Ah, I have it! It may have been my wife, Gretell Have you been in the east?"

"Nonsense!" I cried sharply. "This won't do, Mr. Schmick. Give me that bunch of keys. We'll investigate."

The four Schmicks wrung their hands and shook their heads and then, repairing to the scullery, growled and grumbled for fully ten minutes before deciding to obey my commands. In the meantime I related my experience to Poopendyke and Britton.

"That reminds me, sir," said Britton, "that I found a rag doll in the courtyard yesterday, on that side of the building, sir—I should say castle, sir."

"I am quite sure I heard a baby crying the second night we were here, Mr. Smart," said my secretary nervously.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

HIS BOYS

How They Won a Mother

By AGNES G. EGOAN

It was a very humble [illegible] which [illegible] Mollie to [illegible] while [illegible] at her early window.

What could it mean, this riot of noise in a house supposedly empty? For the owner's apartments and the cosy next to the bungalow [illegible] had been one of Mollie's reasons for renting the place in the country.

Here, far away from city distractions, she might ruthlessly finish the clever serial for which a publisher waited. But now? From a high note of the neighboring house came a ringing line of boys, boys barbarically boys shouting, leaping good naturedly at each other's shoulders—one of them.

Indignantly Mollie descended to seek explanation of this intrusion from her housekeeper.

"Sure, they moved in last night," said Nora, "and divil a wink of sleep did I have all night. No one left to look after them but an old red face of a cook, and the father rode off this mornin' in his automobeel."

Disconsolately Mollie wandered out into her well-kept garden, the spirit of writing destroyed. Mr. Bollin, the cat, came scampering wildly from his customary seat on the garden wall, his exit evidently hastened by a well-aimed pebble.

"Dear me," cried Miss Mollie, "this will never do! Peace, indeed, and quiet and all the desirable advantages promised by that real estate man! Well, we shall see!" And then her gaze fell upon one small lonely brother seated in a sunny corner of the old verandah. Near to the clutch of his thin white hand rested a wooden crutch, and presently, bearing his full weight upon it, the little cripple swung himself out into the garden.

"Poor chap," sighed the girl in ready sympathy and retreat. Then hastily to her room again and her post before the casement window. From this viewpoint she could see the little brothers vainly trying to climb over garden wall to reach the lofty beech tree which bordered it.

"If they dare!" she murmured, with flaming cheeks. But her cherished blossoms were past out of reach of the [illegible], then with upraised [illegible] the [illegible] crippled brother [illegible] a nearby tree and much [illegible] the others, deliberately [illegible] It was necessary to make the [illegible] house, which had been empty yesterday, and to knock loudly on the [illegible] fastened door. [illegible] she opened the red faced cook confronted her, and Mollie, pointing [illegible] the limping culprit, asked, still a little excitedly, if the boy's mother was there and if she might see her.

"Tim's mother?" asked the cook; then she stared curiously at the girl. "Why, Tim's mother's in the hospital, havin' an operation."

Again Mollie experienced the same helpless sensation which had come over her at sight of Tim upon the verandah, the little crutch close at hand.

"I did not know," she said. "I am sorry. Perhaps you could—could keep the child from [illegible] so mischievous. He's ruined my choice flowers. He has been spoiled no doubt," she added [illegible] "left to grow up unpunished [illegible] of his wealth. [illegible] If his father"—

The woman interrupted with a coarse laugh. "Spoiled?" she mocked. "Unpunished? Tim come here!"

Quite cheerfully the little fellow [illegible]. Quickly the woman's rough [illegible] hands could also be gentle, [illegible] back the little white waist. "Here," she pointed, "there's welts, [illegible] marks where he's been punished."

Mollie drew back in horror. "Oh, [illegible] she cried pathetically. "Surely [illegible] could be a brute like that!" But Tim exhibited his scars proudly [illegible] of battle. "Sure," he said, [illegible]

Mollie's anger turned to pity. "[illegible] little thing!" she cried. [illegible] how to teach you. [illegible] and let me tell [illegible] flowers."

"Yes, sir," she explained as he hobbled along at her side. "They were just little seeds at first, planted in an empty garden. And the sun came along and did its warming work, then the rain and the wind, and—the spring. The little seeds had a hard, brave fight of it, but, after all, the green sprouts came peeping above ground, then the stalks and after, oh, ever so long a time, the green leaves, next the buds unfolded slowly, slowly and then—

The boy's eyes widened expectantly. "Then," finished Mollie, "came the flowers—the wonderful, glorious flowers." Her voice fell sadly. "And in a thoughtless moment you killed them all! I'll [illegible] you," she added at the boy's [illegible] stricken face. "You may come over and gather all the flowers you want, but don't kill them."

The lad sank down upon the porch step of Mollie's home, and his small eyes regarded her shrewdly. "Say," he asked, "after all I did you'll let me come over here? You'll let me have your flowers?"

The girl nodded. "Well, you are a good sport," said Tim, and their laughter mingled together.

"But you must be good," she admonished him. "You must be my knight errant and guard my garden."

And so faithfully did Tim perform this task that Mollie was called hastily one day by Nora to bandage an offending brother's head upon which Tim had used his one weapon of correction—the crutch.

Mollie watched each morning with eyes which tried to be sternly disapproving as the master of the lawless household entered his waiting car. It was difficult to frown continually upon one so gayly happy.

And the man's own brow would wrinkle perplexedly at the girl's forbidding salute in return to his friendly "Good morning."

Mollie wondered if the suffering wife in the hospital had no influence at all over those cruel blows. She heard him call to the boys quite savagely one evening, "You stop that!" Seizing upon the first excuse for intervention at hand, she picked up a tray of Nora's freshly baked cookies and ran to the garden wall. "Here, boys," she called over its top, "I've something for you." In an eager medley they came and, when they had been rewarded, as swiftly departed.

Mollie found herself looking directly into the man's smiling eyes. "You are very good to my boys," he said. Mollie hesitated, in anxiety to say the right word.

"One can do so much more," she remarked, "by kindness—than by—force."

"I agree with you." The man's tone was hearty. "And," continued Mollie, "little Tim was, no doubt, too frail for much schooling, but—he has such an apt mind—if he had but—half a chance now." Her voice reproved his neglect, but the man was most amenable. "I know," he said. "I intend to see that Tim has—a good education."

Mollie turned slowly away—again that helpless feeling of defeat. "His mother," she asked perfunctorily—"is she doing well?"

"Very well, they tell me," the man replied. He sought to detain her as she went up the path. "I'm going to take Tim in to see his mother tomorrow," he told her. So, in strange contradiction of emotions, Mollie gathered her choicest flowers, and when upon the morrow the shining automobile waited before the next house door she went forth in her white ruffled frock to place the roses in Tim's thin arms.

"You will give them to your mother," she said. It was hard to reconcile this tender father who settled Tim, the little cripple, so carefully among his cushions with that unspeakable father whose cruelty had scarred the same small body.

In the evening the man came back alone. "I had to leave Tim there in the hospital," he explained. "It seems he was not as well as they at first thought. The broken limb has not mended as it should, and it has to be forcibly broken again. He wants you. He says he can bear it better if you are there, holding his hand." The man's voice broke off huskily, and Mollie raised a pale face.

"I shall be ready to go with you in the morning," she said. So as they entered the hospital room the boy looked up with his own cheerful grin. "I knew you'd come," he told Mollie. "You're a 'good sport.'"

The girl laughed shakily as she pressed her tear wet face to his. "You must show me now," she said, "what a 'good sport' you can be."

"Sure," Tim answered bravely. When it was all over Mollie turned to find the man's eyes fixed upon her in a sort of worshipful adoration. Warmly he grasped her trembling hand.

"You are one of God's angels," he said softly.

So across the still motionless body of the little lad they gazed wonderingly into each other's face as at the birth of some new joy.

"Say," murmured Tim's weakly returning voice, "don't let them keep me here. Make him take me back to the country. You—make him." His entreating eyes were on Mollie. "He'll do whatever you say. He's dead stuck on you."

Mollie turned about breathlessly. "Oh," she cried, "he doesn't know what he is saying. He is quite out of his mind." But the man regarded her quietly.

"Tim does know," he replied, "just what he is talking about." Then as Mollie stood staring speechlessly the boy again spoke. "He is good," said Tim—"most as good as you are. Haven't he come down to the hospitals where homeless kids are getting better of different things, and doesn't he pick out a bunch of 'em and carry them out to his 'get well house?' 'You come along,' he says to me, 'and I'll fatten you up in the country,' and my mother didn't care 'whose I was, and my dad had broken my leg.'"

"Your father?" breathed the girl incredulously. Little Tim nodded. "Threw me downstairs," he explained succinctly. "Oh," cried Mollie remorsefully. Shamedly her eyes met those of the man. "And I've been thinking," she confessed—"thinking you were that father, blaming you all along."

"Good heaven!" exclaimed the man. His tone was eloquent. "Gee!" echoed little Tim. "But, say," he added quickly, "Won't you get him to take me back to the country?" "I'll make a bargain with you, Tim," the man began steadily. "I will promise to take you back for an indefinite time if you will try to persuade her to take me for good and all—later."

With a sudden tremulous laugh Mollie infolded the boy in her arms, while Tim winked back over the girl's bowed head. "She will," said Tim confidently. And she did.

"GOD SAVE THE KING"

ONWARD TO BERLIN

God of love give us light
To see our way clear
To battle for the right
In thy love and fear
O Lord in Thy wisdom
Lead the Allies on
While they fight for freedom,
United as one

Chorus—

Neutrals join the Allies
They are sure to win,
Quit you like men, be strong,
Onward to Berlin

O Lord in thy wisdom
Everything is free,
Briton's fight for freedom,
And for Liberty,
Our enemy's warfare,
Full of treachery,
No nation can compare,
With their butchery

Chorus—

Neutrals join the Allies
They are sure to win
Quit you like men, be strong,
Onward to Berlin.

The United States are
In a sorry plight,
The submarine warfare
Will force them to fight
Charity with honour,
Is a splendid stone,
Charity dishonoured
Will disgrace a throne

Chorus—

Neutrals join the Allies
They are sure to win,
Quit you like men, be strong,
Onward to Berlin
Our great British Empire,
Has no fight to fear,
Our great British Empire
Freely volunteer,
Britain's fight for freedom,
Over land and sea,
Briton's fight for freedom,
Godly liberty.

Chorus—

Neutrals join the Allies,
They are sure to win,
Quit you like men, be strong,
Onward to Berlin

An Old Soldier.

To Put on Flesh And Increase Weight

GOOD ADVICE FOR THIN PEOPLE.

I'd certainly give most anything to be able to gain a few pounds and stay that way, declare many thin men and women. Such a result is usually not impossible despite past failures. Most thin people are victims of malnutrition, a condition which prevents the fatty elements of food from being taken up by the blood as they are when the powers of nutrition are normal. Instead of getting into the blood much of the fat and flesh producing elements stay in the intestines until they pass from the body as waste.

To correct this condition and to produce a healthy, normal amount of fat, the flesh making food elements must be so prepared in the digestive processes that the blood will accept and distribute them throughout the body. There is a preparation called Sargol, which works on this basis and which is sold by nearly every druggist on a positive guarantee of weight increase or money back. Hundreds have testified to weight increase from its use.

Sargol does not of itself make fat, but is simply a combination of ingredients of acknowledged merit that taken with meals seems to better enable the digestive organs to separate the fattening elements of the food and to prepare them in a form which the blood can readily absorb. Sargol comes in tablet form, is pleasant and easy to take and its action is perfectly natural and harmless. Sargol is sold by all druggists everywhere who are authorized to refund the full price if weight increase is not obtained.

NOTE: Sargol is recommended only as a flesh builder and while it has produced excellent results in cases of nervous indigestion and general stomach disorders care should be taken by those using it who do not want to increase weight.

CONFIRMS ATROCITIES

A Woman Doctor of New York Denounces Foe's Conduct in Belgium.

Montreal, September 2. The Gazette has the following from New York:

"One of the passengers on the Sabre liner Sant Anna, which arrived from Europe yesterday was Dr. Elizabeth J. Van Slyke, of the New York Women's Hospital, who has been serving with the American Red Cross in Belgium and France. She said that when she went to Europe she did not believe the reports of the atrocities said to have been committed in Belgium on the peasantry by the German soldiers.

"I decided to investigate these reports," Dr. Van Slyke said, "and saw a number of women who had been terribly maltreated by the German soldiers.

"One French woman about 40 years old, was in an indescribable condition, and both her little girls had been killed. I want the American women to know the truth. Very few French or Belgian women in the territory invaded by the Germans, escaped attack. The stories about the atrocities are true. I investigated them and I know. I cannot speak too strongly on this subject."

EXAMINER PATTERN SERVICE

BLOUSE WITH CONVERTIBLE COLLAR.

By Anabel Worthington.

The present season has brought us this comfort giving novelty for boys as well as for women. The shirt is quite regulation in its general outline, fastening down the centre of the front and with a patch pocket on one breast.

The novel feature of the blouse is found in the collar, which without any alteration in its construction can be worn closed in the manner of a high, straight stock, or turn rolled back and facing the neck exposed, as shown in the picture.

The sleeve may be adjusted according to the convenience of the individual wearer, and made either full length, with a band cuff, or shorter, with a turnback cuff.

The blouse cuts at the waist line where it is gathered in an elastic or a tape.

These shirts are made of madras, percale, gingham, linen and wash silk, usually with flat pearl buttons.

This shirt, No. 7189, is cut in sizes 6, 8, 10, 12 and 14 years. Medium or 8 year size will require 2 yards of 32 inch material.

When ordering remember to give your name and address as well as the number and size of pattern required, and age of a child.

Price 15 cents, or 2 for 25c.

Address—The Examiner Pattern Service, The Examiner, Peterborough.

The Story of PEG O' MY HEART

At the "Grand" on Monday Next

Analyzing the story of "Peg O' My Heart," Oliver Morosco's charming play of love and romance, which playgoers will have the pleasure to view here at the Grand Opera House on Monday next, Sept. 13, one is forced to the conclusion that J. Hartley Manners, the author of this gem, because of the simplicity of his theme has found the key-note of the public's desire to be entertained. The intense interest of his play is in its pointed dialogue and the frank unfolding of his skillfully drawn characters.

Mrs. Chichester, her daughter, Ethel, and her son, Alaric, of unquestioned social position and friends with the aristocracy of England, are dumb founded on a June morning to learn they have been reduced from affluence to direct poverty by a failure of a London bank. They are the type of snobs to whom loss of wealth means social ostracism.

While her mother and children are talking over their misfortune, comes Peg, a poor, tomboy, red-headed, Irish, chit of a girl; her clothes are worse than shabby, she carries a dilapidated telescope suit case, several bundles from whose wrappings more than peek the contents and a mongrel cur.

Without a word the child enters the handsomely furnished living room, through a French window in time to see Christian Brent, a married man, attempt to kiss Ethel Chichester, a vehement love scene.

Miss Chichester discovers the intruder, demands why she is there and orders her to the kitchen, with the remark "we need no additional servants, but you can get something to eat."

The little girl picks up her belongings and departs. A London solicitor named Hawks, informs Mrs. Chichester that her brother, Nathaniel, is dead, leaving a fortune and a peculiar will.

It develops that Mrs. Chichester's sister had run away in her youth, and married a young Irishman of the never-do-well class, migrating to the United States, giving birth to a daughter, and in here extremity had appealed to her brother, Nathaniel, for assistance. She lived long enough to receive a refusal and died leaving the baby to be brought up by her husband.

On the anniversary of his sister's death the brother decides to make a late atonement for his refusal, and cables to New York for his niece to come to England. While she is on the ocean the old man dies, leaving a will to the effect that Margaret is to be taken into the home of a gentle English family and to be taught the life of the world of her noble mother. To such a family he provides for the payment of a thousand pound a year.

Hawks is one of the executors of the will, and has sent the little Irish beneficiary ahead of him to the home of her aunt. There is consternation on the part of the Chichesters, who on learning of the conditions of the will, see a way to ward off poverty for the present. The supposed snobbery maid is ushered into the living room by the outraged butler, and chastized by her aunt, who resents the girl's statement that "me name is Peg——Me father call me Peg O' My Heart."

Then commences the deliberate attempt of a couple of cold-blooded, selfish woman to make her life a hades for a child just budding into womanhood, whose life has been along different lines in which a father's love and tenderness make up for the lack of money.

Your heart and soul involuntarily go out in sympathy to the child with the delicious brogue, who defends her self with wit and apt quotations from "me father says" which effectively rout her relations to argument, but add to the refined cruelty of their treatment.

Peg finally conquers their dislike and at the same time, wins an English gentleman for a husband and a fortune as well.

The title role will be played by Rea Martin a charming and capable young actress.

Comfort and Cure For Baby's Skin Troubles

Dr. Chase's Ointment Cured When Baby's Body Was Covered With Distressing Eczema

If every mother could try Dr Chase's Ointment for the chafing, skin irritation and resulting eczema which tortures so many babies, what a blessing it would be for the little ones.

This letter will give you an idea of what a wonderful work this Ointment is doing in the way of bringing comfort to children who are unfortunate as to contract eczema. It is so easy for this trouble to develop from chafing or irritation caused by the clothing and so difficult to get it cured, that Dr Chase's Ointment is appreciated when once its healing qualities are known.

Mr M. L. Dueble, Postmaster, Dogravville, N.B., writes: "I believe it is my duty to recommend Dr Chase's Ointment as a cure for eczema. My baby was seized with eczema and his face and arms were covered with this terrible disease. After trying all sorts of ointments the disease continued to spread until it covered the entire body. When the doctor became tired he would tell us to bathe himself and we would be found in his pants covered with blood. Hearing about Dr Chase's Ointment I thought I would try it, and before the was a box used the child was cured. That was over four years ago and there has been no trace of eczema since. I recommend Dr Chase's Ointment to all who suffer from eczema as being the best treatment in the world for itching skin troubles."

Dr Chase's Ointment, 60 cents a box, all dealers or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Toronto. It is a good idea to keep it at hand always with the bath soap to be used for roughness of the skin, chafing or irritation. Prevents it is so much better than cure. Powders clog the pores but Dr Chase's Ointment cleanses the pores and thereby keeps the skin soft and smooth. Sample box free if you mention this paper. Edmanson, Bates & Co., Limited, Toronto.

AIR WARFARE ON A LARGE SCALE

GEN. RUSKY HOLDING ENEMY IN CHECK

FRENCH, GERMAN AND BRITISH AIRMEN ALL ON THE MOVE

Air Warfare Carried On on a Grand Scale---French Aviators Drop Sixty Bombs on German Aviation Camps and French and British Raid Another Enemy Air Camp ---Germans Raid Nancy.

HEAVY ARTILLERY FIRE IN THE WEST

PARIS, Sept. 8.—Air warfare on a huge scale was carried out along the France-Flanders battle front last night and early to-day. The French aviators dropped sixty bombs on the German aviation camps at Mesnard and Dieuze. French and British aviators raided another German air camp at Ostend. A squadron of German airmen showered bombs on Nancy and the plateau of Malzeville, killing several persons.

This afternoon's official communique reported no cessation in the violent artillery fighting from the sea to the Argonne.

In the Champagne region and between Rheims and Argonne infantry actions in which bombs and rifles were employed, kept both sides on the alert throughout the night.

The Argonne region was shaken by violent artillery firing throughout the night, exchanges being particularly heavy around La Harazee.

PETROGRAD, Sept. 8.—Gen. Rusky's artillery has prevented every attempt of the Germans to approach the left bank of the Dwina in an effort to force a crossing and march against Riga.

The Germans who occupied Friedrichstadt and the bridgehead north of the town have been unable to reach the river with their pontoons.

Northwest of Friedrichstadt a feeble attempt at crossing was broken up by Russian gun fire.

PETROGRAD, Sept. 8.—The Czar to-day took supreme command of the Russian army and navy, and addressed a proclamation to the people, declaring it to be "our sacred duty to defend our country to the last."

This last statement was taken as an answer to rumours that Russia was tiring of war.

LONDON, Sept. 8.—The Russian steamer Rhea, 1,400 tons, has been sunk. The crew was saved.

AMSTERDAM, Sept. 8.—The submarine that sank the Arabic has returned to her base, and has reported that she torpedoed the liner to escape possible attack, according to a despatch received here to-day from Berlin.

LIVERPOOL, Sept. 8.—Advices to the State Department at Washington have indicated that the U-boat that sank the Arabic on August 22, was either sunk or captured by the British, though reports have not been confirmed by the British Admiralty.

LONDON, Sept. 8.—The Ellerman liner Douro, 1,600 tons, was sunk by a German submarine. The crew landed to-day.

LONDON, Sept. 8.—The French steamer Guatemela, of 5,913 tons, was torpedoed and sunk off the west coast of France. Despatches said her crew had been taken off by a British steamer.

BRISTOL, Sept. 8.—The resolutions pledging the "utmost assistance" of British Labour to the Government in the prosecution of the war were adopted by the Trades Union Congress here to-day by a vote of six hundred to seven.

LONDON, Sept. 8.—A news agency despatch from Queenstown this evening said it has been definitely settled that an American named Wolff, from Newark, N.J., an able seaman, was lost in the sinking of the Hesperian by a German submarine.

The American Embassy has no confirmation.

LONDON, Sept. 8.—Lt.-Col. A. E. Swift has taken over the command of the Second Canadian Battalion, vice Lt.-Col. Watson, appointed to command the Fifth Brigade.

MONTREAL, Sept. 8.—The steamer Hesperian, which sank Monday, had on board the body of Mrs. G. W. Stephens, of Montreal, who was drowned on the Lusitania.

CANADIANS CONGRATULATED.

LONDON, Sept. 7.—Addressing the Canadian cavalry brigade recently, Field Marshal French commended Canada for showing a magnificent example to Empire volunteering, and also acknowledged the good work done by the brigade. He was anxious to see the brigade mounted in order to see what fine cavalry soldiers they were. In thanking Col. Seeley and the brigade for the work done, he expressed the belief that their record would go down to posterity as one of the most splendid in British history.

Lieut.-Col. Kemis Betty has been given charge of the Records Department, Col. Ward still holding the office of chief paymaster. Increasing work necessitates the separation of the two branches, and the rental of additional offices.

Mrs. Sandford Fleming's convalescent hospital is increasing its accommodation by 50 beds. Among the patients are Sergt. Volkert, formerly employed with the Walker Hardware Company, Montreal, and Gordon Carling of the Patricias, a grandson of Sir John Carling.

"TO PEGOUD, WHO DIED LIKE A HERO."

BELFORT, France, Sept. 7.—A German aeroplane flying at a great height appeared last evening over Chavannes, an Alsatian village on the old frontier. The aviator dropped a wreath, which bore the inscription: "To Pegoud, who died like a hero. From his adversary."

The noted French aviator, Adolphe Pegoud, while making a reconnaissance recently near Petite Croix, was killed by a German aviator, whom he attacked.

LONDON, Sept. 7.—A despatch to Reuter's Telegram Company from Berlin, coming by way of Amsterdam, says:

"It is officially announced that the military law will be modified to enable the re-examination of those persons previously exempt from military service on account of physical unfitness which in view of their possible fitness for duty at the present time."

SAYS ROSS RIFLE IS NOT BEING THROWN AWAY

Major-General Hughes Says Second Division Is Equipped With the Ross and They Will Be Re-issued to First

ALTERATIONS ARE MADE

OTTAWA, Ont., Sept. 8.—The impression which prevails in some quarters that the Canadian Ross rifle has been permanently withdrawn from use by the British Army authorities, is emphatically denied by Major General Sam Hughes. He says that because a small percentage of ammunition is not suitable for Ross rifle it is decided to have the chamber of the barrel enlarged. The alteration is being rapidly made, with the result that the second division is again equipped with the Canadian arm. In the course of a short time the Ross rifle will be again issued to the first division also.

Wages Case in Police Court

William Fitzgerald was the defendant in a wages case that was heard this morning before Police Magistrate Dumble. The plaintiff was John Holloway, who claimed the sum of sixteen dollars, representing one month's wages for services rendered the defendant on the latter's farm in Otonabee. He was awarded fourteen dollars and sixty cents, the amount originally offered by Fitzgerald. The plaintiff was also charged by the Magistrate with having uttered a number of false statements in consideration of which he was assessed for the costs amounting to a little over five dollars. The difference in the amount claimed by Holloway and the amount offered by Fitzgerald was one dollar and sixty cents.

Holloway claimed that he engaged with Fitzgerald on August the seventh and started to work on August the ninth at a salary of sixteen dollars per month. He left Fitzgerald's employ last Sunday or two or three days before his time had expired. The defendant offered to pay him $14.60, but this the defendant refused to accept, claiming the full amount.

"If you ever go into court again, don't go in with a lie in your mouth," said His Worship addressing Holloway after he had been cross-questioned in the witness box by Fitzgerald, with disastrous results.

POULTRY MEETING.

The monthly meeting of the Peterborough Poultry Association to-night. Mr. A. Brault will give a paper, and a nice show of young birds all varieties, will be on hand to compete. Ladies are welcome at the meetings. Labour Hall, 8 o'clock. Come.

GRAND DUKE IS THROUGH

Leader of Russian Army Has Been Made Viceroy of the Caucasus and New Commander Will Succeed Him

SATISFACTION IS FELT

Special to The Examiner.

PETROGRAD, Sept. 8.—It is officially announced to-day that Grand Duke Nicholas, formerly commander in chief of all the Russian armies, has been made Viceroy of Caucasus and commander of the southern armies.

As intimated yesterday this indicates an ominous change in the direction of the Russian armies.

Evidently the Russian public opinion, and probably the earnest advice of Russia's allies, demanded a new leadership in Russian. The announcement yesterday that the Czar would personally lead the troops is, of course, more or less formal. It is likely that considerable new and younger blood will be infused into the Russian General Staff.

Causes Satisfaction.

LONDON, Sept. 8.—(Special cable.)—The announcement of the retirement of Grank Duke Nicholas from the critically important post of commander in chief of the Russian armies, meets with supreme satisfaction here and in Paris, where there has for some time been strong opinion that some drastic change was necessary in command of the Russian armies. It is stated in some quarters that the British and French governments insisted that Nicholas be superceded.

Confidence in the Russian's ability to hold the Germans was greatly increased this morning by the Russian official announcement that Russian military operations will henceforth be directed by a new "board of strategy" with Czar Nicholas as nominal president.

Accounts Passed By School Board

The following list of accounts was passed at last night's meeting of the Board of Education. R. Smith, $37.75; E. F. Mason, 20c.; E. L. Payne, $7.55; M. McFadden, $6.05; A. P. Brown & Co., $24.97; W. R. Turner, $70.19; Morgan Hardware Company, $31.32; Peterborough Examiner, $7; Review Printing Co., $3.50; J. E. A. Fitzgerald, $1,522.56.

Advises Opening of Day Classes

Under the heading of "General Remarks," Mr. F. W. Merchant of the Department of Education, has the following to say respecting the Peterborough Evening Industrial and Technical classes:

"I am pleased to note the continued success of the evening classes at Peterborough. As I pointed out in my last report I think it would be advisable for the Advisory Industrial Committee to take into consideration the organizing of day industrial classes, both for boys and girls. There are doubtless a large number of boys who are dropping out of school before they reach the Collegiate Institute who would be profitted by the instruction which such classes would offer. It would appear, also, that there would be a demand for a course of study adapted to those girls who do not propose to enter business or prepare themselves for the University or professional examinations. This school possesses the equipment for giving just such a course which would include a thorough training in all the activities connected with home-making, and, at the same time, provide the other essentials of a good education.—F. W. Merchant.

FALL FAIR NEXT WEEK

Directors of Peterboro' Industrial Exhibition Have Done Everything to Advance Their Standard

MILITARY FEATURES

The Peterborough Industrial Exhibition on September 16th, 17th and 18th will reflect to a certain extent the military ideas and activities which are so prominent these days. At the same time, the agricultural aspect of the Fair should be as prominent and predominating as ever. The directors have not deviated from their first principle, that this exhibition is intended as a benefit to the agriculture of the community of which Peterborough is the centre. Hence, the prize list is extensive and attractive. The classes have been made more comprehensive with a view to including as many exhibits as possible. Exhibitors will discover these details best by perusing one of the prize lists which were published some weeks ago.

The midway promises to be bigger than usual and the attractions in front of the grand stand are highly recommended. Horse racing will be a feature as usual. And incidentally the cattle and horse parade and judging should be most interesting.

A detachment of men of the 39th Battalion will take part in the Fair's proceedings, and will have a prominent part in the attractions in front of the big stand. They will present various manoeuvres, especially the system of calisthenics followed in their training. Under the auspices of the Speakers Patriotic League, a prominent Canadian speaker will deliver an address in connection with the recruiting campaign.

The flower and art exhibits should be more prominent this year. The directors have lent every encouragement to these departments and good results have been noticeable during the past year or two. In short, the fall fair should be a success. It deserves to be a success. The directors have done their share to follow the "business as usual" principle during a period that is most trying. They are, however, depending upon the interest of the farmers of the county, especially the exhibitors, for a splendid show and incidentally to the citizens of Peterborough and the towns in the district.

COUNCIL CHAMBER EQUIPPED WITH NEW FURNITURE

The City Trust has equipped the Council chamber with handsome new oak desks and chairs for the aldermen, a deep swivel chair for Mayor Butler, they have also had cork matting, and today new benches were distributed in the gallery. A brass railing to enclose the Council sanctum is also among the changes. Possibly Mr. W. H. Moore and the other members of the City Trust have doubts that the present wire entanglements do not offer sufficient protection to the aldermen and concluded that heavy brass would offer stouter resistance to possible attacks from the gallery-ites. The furnishings are of a chaste and dignified appearance and it was expressed that they will be in keeping with the dignity of the debates in Council. Mr. Moore suggested that the chamber be excluded to organizations which have been permitted to use it in the past. An Irish gag moved, seconded by Ald. Saunders, that this request be complied with, but they withdrew the motion after Ald. Dobbin suggested that action be taken until they had discussed the proposal, especially with members of the City Trust. He felt that these committees of citizens were entitled to some consideration.

A feature of the decorations are two pictures of the Duke and Duchess of Connaught hung above either side of the Mayor's dais. They were presented to the Mayor on the occasion of the visit of the Duke and Duchess. The framing and inscription were left to Mr. T. Q. Quartermaine, whose good taste and artistic penmanship have been combined with excellent result.

10 Killed in the Latest Zep Raid

Three Dirigibles Participated in Last Night's Attack on Eastern Counties—All But One of the Killed or Wounded Were Civilians

STARTED SEVERAL FIRES

LONDON, Sept. 8.—Following is the official statement of last night's Zeppelin raid on the eastern counties of England:

"Last night's (Aug. 7) Zeppelin attack was made on the eastern counties. Two men, three women and five children were killed. Four men, eleven women and five children seriously injured. Five men, nine women and nine children slightly injured.

"A man and two women are missing and are believed to be buried under the debris.

"Fifteen small dwelling houses were demolished or seriously damaged.

"Several fires started but were quickly extinguished. There was no other serious damage done. All killed and wounded were civilians, except one soldier, who was seriously wounded.

"Our anti-air craft guns were in action, but our aeroplanes were unable to locate the enemy."

Last night's raid was the nineteenth air invasion of England since the war began.

According to official figures, German aircraft have killed 99 persons, wounded 241 and three others who are missing are supposed to be dead.

In the total number of casualties last night's raid was the most destructive made on England this summer, though on one occasion, June 15, sixteen persons were killed. The most recent raid occurred on Aug. 17, when ten persons were killed and 56 wounded.

As usual, the British censor to-day withheld information as to the exact locality attacked. The statement that fifteen small dwelling houses were demolished makes it appear probable that the same city was under attack. It is possible that London was again attacked by dirigibles.

LOCAL SOLDIER WINS BIG PRIZE IN OLD COUNTRY

Pte. Fred. Ashford of Peterboro' Who Went Over With the 39th Battalion Captures $1250 Award From Pearson's Weekly

WON THE CONTEST

His many friends in Peterborough will read the following article from Pearson's Weekly with interest. Pte. Ashford enlisted here with the 39th Battalion and lived at 514 Patterson Street. He had many friends both in and out of the ranks who will rejoice in his success. Pte. Ashford wrote several articles for The Examiner before confirmation here, a splendid description of the voyage of the 39th to the Old Country.

Pearson's Weekly says:

There is both drama and romance in the story of Private Fred R. Ashford of the 39th Battalion, Canadian Expeditionary Force, stationed at Caesar's Camp, Shorncliffe, who won the $250 prize in our Military competition.

Taken by the enemy at West Brickendon, Private Ashford was confined in the Prisoners' Camp at Minden, Westphalia. Here he had to endure the hardships of prison life for nearly two years. Then he managed to escape, and after many adventures succeeded in reaching Holland. He had not even the necessary penny for the passage.

But [illegible] officer was a good one and [illegible] the penny for a passage to Harwich. He has now received from us a cheque for the prize.

Bale of Clothing Is Acknowledged

Goods Provided by Peterborough Citizens Were Very Acceptable

Some months ago the Peterborough branch of the Grenfell Association prepared a bale of clothing and shipped it to the far north east for the use of the people on the Labrador Coast. The following acknowledgment has been received by Mr. James West of this city.

Dear Madam,—We are thankful to receive a most useful bale of warm clothing sent from you by the people of this part. It was very acceptable as this has been a hard year for many and [illegible] families. It is difficult for them to provide clothing for the boys cold winter.

Thanking you on behalf of the people for the grateful expression of your [illegible]

WAR MORE MERCIFUL.

When we read of the appalling casualties of the present war, we can hardly conceive the idea of its being a comparatively merciful war — one of the most merciful wars ever waged in regard to the mortality and suffering and mutilation of the wounded and the suffering and disability from disease. There is, from wounds, less gangerene, less blood poisoning, less mutilation of limbs by amputation. The middle of last June the French War Department issued a statement that up to that time the number of amputations among French soldiers had amounted to only 750. This is a remarkably small number considering the great number of wounded. Surgical science has made such advances since the last great war, and has been so scientifically and thoroughly applied to military operations that not only the mortality, but the permanent mutilation of soldiers from wounds is greatly lessened. Not only improved surgery, but improved nursing, with trained nurses in the field or at base hospitals, is accountable for the lessened mortality and mutilation. Improved sanitation, by the application of modern sanitary methods, is responsible for a great lessening of diseases, such as typhus fever, typhoid, dysentary, cholera, and other diseases that in former times, were decimating accompaniments of war.

These improved conditions as to treatment of the sick and wounded not only give a comparatively merciful aspect to war, but tend to increase the efficiency of armies, by healing wounded and sick soldiers, and permitting them to return to the ranks again as fighting men, instead of being permanently invalided or disabled. In these ways war is reduced to its true proportions, principally committing the actual killing and destruction to men who mutually have no personal interest in the destruction of their fellow-men.

If there is any mitigating thought in connection with war, and especially the present cruel war, it is that there will be fewer mutilated and limbless soldiers in proportion to the number engaged, than have resulted from former wars. It will be some comfort to the friends of those engaged in actual fighting, that the latter, if not killed outright, but only badly wounded, will have a good chance to escape permanent disablement, and be able, if not to return to the battle line, to come home a whole and sound man when the war is over.

THE WORLD'S WHEAT CROP.

A recent number of the "Statist" of London, the most responsible and authoritative commercial and financial publication issued, has an article upon the world's production of wheat by the harvest of the present year in the principal countries of the world. The estimate is carefully made, and gives one a fair idea of the food situation as affected by wheat. The production of wheat in 1915 is as follows: United States, 965 million bushels; Russia, 920 million bushels; the British East Indies, 383 million bushels; France, 280 million bushels; Canada, 224 million bushels; Italy, 184 million bushels; Argentine Republic, 176 million bushels; Hungary, 164 million bushels; Germany, 160 million bushels; Spain, 128 million bushels; Roumania, 100 million bushels; Australia, 46 million bushels; the British Isles, 68 million bushels; Austria, 66 million bushels, and Bulgaria, 52 million bushels.

A comparison of the same countries with that of 1914, shows that the yield this year is, 461 million bushels in excess of that of 1914. The only exception to an increased yield is France, a fact explained by the German occupation of a large area of French territory. The above figures show that if there is any shortage of bread stuffs it will not be Britain that will suffer. British countries including Canada, have this year produced 703 million bushels of wheat, and besides Britain has the whole world to draw from. Her importing facilities, thanks to the protection of the navy, are unimpaired. We sometimes, in our pessimistic moments, lament the shortage of munitions of war, but in one important element of strength, food supply, Britain is virtually self-contained, and is assured of an adequate supply. The nations of the Quadruple Entente are also sure of a sufficient supply of food. Russia, with her 920 millions is in this regard independent. Germany and Austria will likely have difficulty in securing the necessary food supply, should their own production be insufficient. Germany has produced 160 millions, and Austria only 60 millions, while Hungary brings up the total for these three countries, with a combined population of 115 millions, to 381 million bushels, with no prospects of this supply being augmented from outside sources. The "Statist" figures furnish an explanation of the viciousness of the efforts made by Germany and Austria to prevent Russia invading Hungary, which in the circumstances, with a wheat crop of 161 millions, may be regarded as the granary of Austria and Germany, its production being greater than the wheat crop of Germany, and three times that of Austria.

CHEERING AND DOING.

One feature of the present war situation is that with the tremendous issues involved, with the tremendous demand upon all of us, to do our best, we can turn aside to the consideration of comparative frivolities. A Mr. Ernest Heaton, of Winnipeg, has been writing to the papers, bewailing the fact that Canadians do not know how to cheer, and gives instances. It may be true that Canadians are a more practical than an emotional people, and that we do not wear our hearts on our sleeves, and are not prone to break into cheering even when the occasion demands such a demonstration of deep-seated feeling and real interest. There are, however, times when popular outbursts of cheering are as stimulating as good red wine. For instance, we let our soldiers pass through our streets lined with spectators, and not a cheer is raised to hearten those we are sending forth, perhaps never to return. We may not be to blame, perhaps our feelings are too deep to permit any expression of them any less solemn, and sombre, and silent, than that accorded to a funeral procession. There are times when cheering is indeed cheering, but our rarity of display of it is not perhaps to be deplored. It is to be noticed that the enthusiasm and frantic exhibition of applause is often in inverse ratio to the merit of the cause, or importance of the occasion. We grow wild with enthusiasm at election times over some petty politician, who at other times would not be considered entitled to anything more demonstrative than silent contempt. We on such occasions wave the flag in the interest of some insignificantly petty issue, with frenzied absurdity, while we have no cheers for the flag borne in the ranks of departing soldiers.

Mr. Heaton may be right in asserting that Canadians do not know how to cheer; but the indictment is not a very serious indictment in face of another fact. Canadians may not know how to cheer, but they know how to fight. We have reason to be proud of the manner in which they have taken their place in the battle line, and held it creditably and with honour alongside the seasoned soldiers of Great Britain and France. Their courage has been conspicuous, not a mere animal contempt of danger—that even foolhardiness may share—but a calculated intelligent courage. The courage and resource of the Canadian soldiers at the front have been the theme of praise of the greatest British and French generals, and the recent decorations of Canadians for conspicuous acts of valour are proof that the Canadians we have contributed to the fighting forces in France and Flanders, are second to no soldiers engaged there.

The trouble is, however, that we have not enough Canadians in the fighting line. Those who are there are doing great work, and not only bringing credit to Canada, but effectively promoting the interests of the Empire. They should be helped and supported; their ranks thinned by death and otherwise, should be filled by recruits from Canada—from Peterborough. Are we supposed to regard the Canadian young men eligible for enlistment any less courageous than their fellows who are in the fighting lines? Those who stay at home and let the brunt of the battle fall upon others, show a sort of courage—for it requires a deal of courage to face the thought of cowardice that must arise in some minds.

LIBERALS' CRITICISMS OF CARSLAKE HOTEL DEAL ABUNDANTLY JUSTIFIED

Exchequer Court Saves County Nearly $37,000—Judge Awards $288,750—Order-in-Council Had Appropriated $325,000

OTTAWA, Sept. 7.—A judgment given out by the Exchequer Court today saves the Treasury of Canada nearly $40,000 on the price which the Government was prepared to pay a year or so ago for the Carslake Hotel property near Bonaventure Depot, Montreal, appropriated as a site for a new postal station.

It will be remembered that last year when the intended sale of the property to the Government became known charges were made in Parliament by Hon. Rodolphe Lemieux and by The Montreal Herald that an exorbitant figure was being paid, and it was alleged that part of the purchase price was to go toward benefiting Conservative party interests in Montreal. The owners of the property asked $712,000 for it, although it had been bought some time before for $92,000. It was charged in Parliament that the Government was prepared to pay about half a million dollars for it, but the premature publicity given to the transaction caused a pause.

Government arbitrators were appointed, and their valuation varied from something over $400,000 to less than $300,000. Hon. Robert Rogers offered on the basis of one of the arbitrator's figures $425,000, and an order in Council was passed upon praising this amount. It was finally decided, in view of further agitation by the Liberals, to refer the whole case to the Exchequer Court.

Cost of 37 Machine Guns Saved.

The judgment given today by Mr Justice Audette awards the owners of the property only $288,750, with interest and costs to the defendants. It will thus be seen that the court has valued the property at some $7,000 less than the Government was prepared to pay for it. This represents the price of 37 machine guns saved to the country. The judgment is a complete vindication of the criticisms which prevented the original deal from going through.

A Country Worth Fighting For

How Britain Leads the World in Protection of Her Subjects—A Matter of Magnanimous Principle

In connection with the announcement from Washington that the sinking of the William P. Frye is to be settled with Germany on a cash basis, it is interesting to recall the fact, little known, that the now famous ship got her name from the late United States Senator, William P. Frye, who represented Maine for 30 years. Senator Frye paid one of the most notable tributes to Great Britain that has ever been made by a representative of a foreign power. An extract from that speech is well worth repeating at this time:

"This little incident, with which you are familiar, is a marvellous illustration of the protection which Great Britain gives to her subjects. The King of Abyssinia took a British subject named Cameron in 1867 and carried him up to the fortress of Magdala, upon the heights of a rocky mountain, and put him into a dungeon. It took six months for the British to find this out. Then Great Britain demanded his immediate release, which King Theodore refused. In less than ten days after his refusal was received 16,000 British soldiers, including 5,000 Sepoys, were on board ships of war sailing down the coasts. They disembarked, marched across the terrible country, a distance of 400 miles, under a burning sun, up to the mountains, up to the very heights in front of the towering dungeon; then gave battle, battered down the iron gates in the stone wall, reached down into the dungeon, and lifted out that one British subject. Then they carried him down the mountains, across the land, put him on board ship, and sped him to his own land in safety. That cost Great Britain $25,000,000 and made General Napier Lord Napier of Magdala. That was a great thing for a great country to do—a country that has an eye that can see across the ocean; all across the land, away up to the mountain heights, and away down to the darksome dungeon, one subject out of her 390,000,000 of people, and then has an arm strong enough and long enough to stretch across the same ocean, across the same land, from the some mountain heights, down to the same dungeon, and then lift him out and carry him home to his own country and friends! In God's name, who would not die for a country that would do that?"

New York Press Comment.

Sun: There can be little doubt that the market will improve when the difficulties over exchange have been adjusted.

Wall Street Journal: Activity in the railroad list of the stock market is expected to stimulate outside buying.

Financial America: A good demand continues to be reported for the stock of the Norfolk and Western.

Times: Stock market professional operations are now disposed to use bearish more than bullish developments.

Journal of Commerce: The tendency of the stock market speculation is to be more than to-day.

$225,000,000 From Wheat.

Western Canada's grain crop at September 1 prices will yield $225,000,000.

Mr Morley Donaldson, general manager of the Grand Trunk Pacific, says the farmers will be satisfied with anything over 70 cents a bushel. At that price the yield will be $175,000,000.

The price of wheat declined sixty points since July 25 to the end of August, but the belief is general that there will be no further severe declines until the output is marketed, which will mean an abundance of new wealth for the Dominion.

The railways were never in better condition to handle the crop. The C. P. R. alone has 40,000 cars distributed throughout the prairie provinces.

An estimate of the four principal grain crops of the Dominion for 1915 places the yield as follows:

Wheat	226,350,000 bushels
Oats	230,000,000 bushels
Barley	51,964,000 bushels
Flax	7,624,000 bushels

Canadian banks have been curtailing stock market and current loans with a view to obtaining funds for the financing of the crop, and even though the requirements should involve loans amounting to $50,000,000 to $75,000,000 the banks will be in a position to advance the money.

OTTAWA CHAMPIONS HERE FOR THREE GAMES WITH CUBAN GIANTS

Peterborough is to get a chance to see Frank Shaughnessy's Ottawa team, four times champions of the Canadian League, in action this week as a three game series has been arranged between the Senators and the Cuban Giants, the famous coloured champions of the world. Games will be played to-morrow and Friday and Saturday, called at 4 p.m. each day. An Ottawa will have all their old favorites including Shag, Dolan, Smykal Bullock, Powers, Shocker, etc. Pitcher Frank Kubat is in town today making arrangements for the series. The Cuban Giants have a number of players on their line-up who would be stars in the big leagues if their colour did not keep them out and they will give Shaughnessy's braves as tough an argument as they have had all season. Fans who have been anxious to see some of the Canadian players will have their chance in the next few days. The Ottawa team is playing in Toronto today against the Toronto International league team.

PACKAGE OF COMFORTS GATHERS THREADS OF AN OLD ROMANCE

A Louisana Lady Sends Lafeyette Kit to France and It Fell Into Hands of a Boyhood Lover

NEW YORK, Sept. 8.—There are many things to comfort a soldier in the kits which the Lafayette Fund is sending to the soldiers of France, but concealed in kit No. 1,148 was one of Cupid's darts. The effect it had on Maurice Dubois of Company No. 27, Sixth cavalry, dismounted, in the Argonne district of France, is best told in a cablegram received yesterday, announcing his marriage to Miss Adele Lenveille of Balquemine, La.

In the latter part of November Miss Lenveille sent $2 to the Lafayette Fund and asked that organization to forward a kit to some "brave soldier fighting in the trenches for France." She enclosed her card, and it was placed in kit No. 1,148. That particular comfort bag was handed to Dubois on Christmas day in the trenches.

When he saw Miss Lenveille's name on the card it recalled to him a delightfully pretty little schoolmate he once had in Nancy, who was his "first love." So he wrote to the Lafayette Fund thanking them for the kit.

In referring to his childhood sweetheart the soldier wrote: "We went to school together in Nancy seventeen years ago when I was twelve and she was eleven. I have never heard of her since she left there. Will you find out for me if she is the same person, my little girl and schoolmate? If I survive this war I am going to America to see her."

The committee immediately communicated with Miss Lenveille in Louisiana. She replied that she was delighted to hear about her friend of long ago and that she prayed for his welfare and coming to this country.

Fearing that would be too long, in February she wrote to the committee and asked if arrangements could be made for her to go to France. Arrangements were perfected, and in the latter part of that month she steamed and joined the nursing forces in the Argonne district. There she met her playmate of long ago.

Truth seems always to be robbing fiction of its glamour, for Dubois, after a desperate act of bravery, was wounded. His wound was so severe that it was thought he could not possibly survive. Miss Lenveille went to him at once, and she has aided in nursing him to health and happiness. They were married in Paris on Wednesday afternoon, according to the cable message, which was signed "Maurice and Adele." Just after the ceremony Dubois was decorated with the Order of Merit for conspicuous gallantry on the field of battle.

The cable also said that he had a furlough for several weeks for a honeymoon trip. Then he will rejoin his regiment and Mrs. Dubois will return to a hospital "somewhere in France."

MILITARY NEWS

Over 100 Men on Parade of the 80th Battalion To-day

Lieut. J. A. Harstone of the 57th Regiment, is with the 77th Ottawa Battalion. So far the 57th Regiment has supplied seventeen officers for overseas service.

Lieut. Joe Munro of the local Public school teaching staff, who has been appointed to the 80th Battalion, has been granted leave of absence by the Board of Education. He is the second local teacher to don the khaki, Capt. Park, principal of the East City school, being with the 49th Battalion.

Lieut. G. K. Rackham of the 59th Battalion, was in the city yesterday.

Sergt. Chambers and Bandsmen Preston Grange, Ernest Gibson and H. Gilbert of the 59th Battalion Band, former members of the 57th, arrived last night from Barrie field to accompany the 57th Band to the Toronto Exhibition to-day. Sergeant Walter Hughes and other 57th members of the 80th band also took in the trip.

Another Good Game.

Another good game was played last night by the boys of the 80th, which resulted in favour of Captain Woods' team, with a score of 5 to 2. The game was played in good form and the teams were in good shape.

The "Gold Dust Twins" were present and were in action. It is expected that two teams will be picked to play a game at the Exhibition grounds on Saturday, Sept. 18. The boys will challenge any other team in the city for a game to be played on the Fair grounds at the local Exhibition.

The teams were as follows:

Captain Woods'.

Calladine, Black and Edwards, Norman, T. Smith, King, H. Wood, Jay and Sadler.

Captain Willshaw's.

Leether, McKinlay and Theobald, Knowles, Vallins, Willshaw, Melton, Crowle and Templer.

Mr. R. Wood took charge of the game satisfactorily.

With over one hundred men on the strength the 80th Battalion detachment here is beginning to assume proportions that are highly satisfactory to officers and the Speaker's Patriotic League as well. In addition to those actually on the roll there are a number of others who have passed the Doctor and have not yet been attested. Altogether, since the beginning of the campaign, here, 280 men have been enlisted in Peterborough.

Lieut. Stewart of Peterborough, who was on duty at the Armouries, yesterday, received instructions to report for duty at Barrie field Camp. He left for Kingston this morning.

It was though that Peterborough would get a larger proportion of officers in the 80th Battalion. A number of local officers who were appleants were not appointed, among them Captains K. G. Lech and Gordon Hall of the 57th.

The news that the Scandinavian has arrived safely in the Old Country will be welcome in a number of Peterborough homes. On board was the draft from the 50th Battalion at Barrie field, in which were a number of the 57th detachment.

Tom Miller, Millbrook's Chief of Police, reported for duty at the Armouries this morning. His name will likely figure in the list of promotions which are to be announced in the order to-day.

The latest reports to the 80th Battalion have been largely Canadian-born. And as an answer to the complaint that the native-born are not responding to the call it may be pointed out that out of the draft supplied by the 24th Field Battery to the 33rd Overseas Battery, 52 were born in Canada and the majority were born in Peterborough or Peterborough County.

OTTAWA, Sept. 7.—The Department of Inland Revenue is enforcing a rigid inspection of all food supplies destined for the Canadian camps and depots of the expeditionary forces. The inspection is a most thorough one, and covers practically all the foods supplied to the troops. As the supplies are bought in Canada, it has been possible to conduct this inspection without enlarging the departmental staff, but special instructions are given to the inspectors with regard to the examination of army rations.

SAFETY IN PASTEURIZED MILK

"Is pure milk better than purified milk?" "It is; but it is so difficult to get pure milk that our only real safety lies in pasteurization."

"What is the solution of the milk problem?" "Inspection and pasteurization. We need inspection to keep milk clean; we need pasteurization to render milk safe."

—Prof. H. H. Dean, Guelph College.

Let us prove that ours is the guaranteed and most wholesome milk you ever tasted.

Been tested for its specific gravity and freedom of bacteria being scientifically clarified and pasteurized.

MONEY FLOWS FREELY AT THE EXHIBITION

The feature of the Exhibition this year is not so much the increased attendance as the way in which the people are spending money. It is a prosperous crowd that flocks to the Exhibition grounds and all the concessionaries are reaping a large harvest. The restaurants and dining rooms are crowded—so are the attractions on the Midway and those who have something to sell find business good. It looks like prosperity coming back with so many happy people spending money so freely.

Sir Sam Hughes, K.C.B., left for Ottawa on the Canadian Northern at 11 o'clock last night. To a reporter who saw him at the station the General said he had thoroughly enjoyed the day at the Exhibition. Asked about the progress of the war, he replied: "Everything is going nicely. I saw no finer soldiers in Europe than our own Canadian volunteers. We are getting plenty of recruits and they are of the very best quality."

Public Charges Are Not Beneficiaries of Life Assurance

A census was taken about a year ago of the inmates of alms houses, of prisons, of asylums for the care of the helpless, in an eastern state. It was found but three of the occupants of these institutions, who numbered altogether over fifteen hundred, had been beneficiaries of life insurance.

It was somebody's neglect that forced the public to pay higher taxes in order to take care of nearly all these people.

Life insurance limits the needs of poorhouses, prisons, old folks' homes. Life insurance, therefore, reduces the needs of the State in maintaining institutions for the care of the needy.

The man who has sufficient insurance to take care of his own future if he reaches old age, and of his dependents, should anything happen to him, is doing his duty, not only to his family, but to his State.

WOULD YOU CONSIDER

FINANCE COMMITTEE PASSED ACCOUNTS

At Last Night's Meeting of the Council--Other Recommendations Accepted

The following report of the Finance committee was adopted on motion of Ald Stratton, seconded by Ald. Dobbin.

We received a letter from James Sutherland asking for a refund of part of his business taxes, but as the matter is one between Mr. Sutherland and the firm to which he has sold your committee cannot see its way to recommend any action in the matter.

Your committee does not recommend the payment of an account from Dr Amys, City Physician, for examining persons charged with insanity as this service is part of his duties as City Physician.

We recommend that Roy A. Dixon, employed in the Engineer's Department, be paid on the certificate of the City Engineer.

COUNCIL TO ALLOW WARREN PAVING CO. TO IMPORT MEN FOR WORK ON THE STREETS

The Council passed a resolution last night supporting the Warren Paving Company's request to be permitted to bring fifteen labourers into the city for street work.

Ald. McIntyre—If they will pay a fair wage they will get all the men they want. Let them pay twenty-five cents an hour and they won't want long for labourers.

Ald. Edgar—There are no men applying.

Ald. Stratton—It does seem that there are men on the corners who should be working.

Ald. Dobbin—Dozens are idle.

Ald. McIntyre moved, seconded by Ald. Stratton, that the Warren Company be advised to pay a fair wage before adopting the method of going outside the city for men.

Ald. Weir—That motion's nonsense. There is nothing in their contract saying the company should pay 25 cents.

Ald. Stratton—Where is the nonsense about it. I know good men who are working for $1.50 a day, $9.00 a week in factories or on some other work. They told me they would be glad to get $2.00, $2.10 or higher daily wages if they could. They are just scraping along on $9.00 a week and they will jump at the opportunity to make better wages. These are the men the company can get.

Ald. Weir—You would only advise them to pay higher wages?

Ald. McIntyre—Yes.

Ald. Weir—They won't pay any attention to you at all.

Ald. Green stated that there was not one idle man in the city who had registered with the Board of Works. The company is from 15 to 18 men short. I don't think we should hold them up.

Ald. Green related his early activities to get the companies to pay fair wages. When $1.75 was offered the men he warned them that this was not a fair wage, and said he would get after them and see that they did better. He considered that the Warren company should be allowed to bring in the men they require in view of the conditions.

Ald. McIntyre—I don't want to hold up the company, but I would rather see them offer local men 25 cents an hour than go outside the city for men.

Ald. Green—We advertised before and got a few men.

Ald. McIntyre—I don't consider 20 cents an hour a fair wage.

Mayor Buller—I don't see how we can stop them bringing in men.

Ald. Edgar moved, seconded by Ald. Saunders, that the Warren company be allowed to engage not more than fifteen men from outside the city, if they can't get them in the city. This was an amendment to Ald. McIntyre's motion.

Ald. Duffus—We are paying 22 cents an hour to city labourers, and it seems absurd for the company to offer less and expect to get men.

Ald Edgar's motion carried, only three aldermen opposing it, Ald. McIntyre, Ald. Stratton and Ald. Duffus.

CONCRETE WALK ON ST. THOMAS STREET NOT WELCOMED

St. Thomas street is an inconspicuous highway connecting Charlotte street and Gilmour street. There are no houses fronting on it, but the four corner houses look out upon it from side windows. Some residents out in that section petitioned for a concrete sidewalk on it and of course the "matter was left with the Engineer," who reported in favour of a walk on the east side of the street.

Last night Mr. Walter Scott told the Council that this would ruin a fine terrace he had constructed and would necessitate the removal of trees. He was convinced for these and other reasons that the walk would be better on the west side.

Mayor Buller—We told the people on the west side that the walk was going on the east, and if we take any action to-night it will scarcely be fair to them. He suggested, to temporize, that the whole Board go out and give the location a once over.

Ald. Green said he felt that the west side was the best position. Ald. Stratton was also inclined that way.

Mr. Parsons said that a walk on either side would necessitate the removal of trees.

Ald. Green remarked that the main use of the street would be as a means for residents living north to pass out to the street cars on Charlotte street. He suggested that a walk be advertised on each side of St. Thomas street, and those who object will have an opportunity to meet the Board of Works before any actual work is begun.

MR. NELSON BELL, of Bridgenorth, who has invented a new bullet for the destruction of aeroplanes, submarines, wire entanglements and machine guns. The inventor will guarantee this bullet to do all he claims and thinks that no time should be lost in bringing it into use. He has applied for a patent in the United States and Canada.

BEAUTY SPECIALIST AT EXHIBITION EXPLAINS POWERS OF USIT

To thousands throughout Canada Usit is known as a highly-recommended wrinkle-chaser and skin food, but comparatively few know its origin or how it accomplishes its wonderful work.

A special booth in the Arcade, between the Women's Building and the Manufacturers' Building, at the Toronto Exhibition, has been given over to this purpose, and a well-known beauty specialist has been placed in charge. She explains how the secret of the preparation of Usit became down from the famous Egyptian beauties of old to the present proprietors. She shows how the Oriental oils of which Usit is composed supply the nourishment required by the skin, and rejuvenate it. Druggists everywhere sell Usit, also Usit Face Powder De Luxe. PETERBORO' CHORAL SOCIETY WILL BE RE-ORGANIZED Delegation Wait Upon the Board of Education and Obtain Permission to Use the Auditorium of the Collegiate Institute—Reports of the Various Committees.

MEETING OF THE BOARD OF EDUCATION

A delegation representing the Peterborough Choral Society, headed by Mr. John Allan, Organist of St. Paul's Presbyterian Church, waited upon the Board of Education, last evening, and was successful in securing the use of the auditorium of the Collegiate Institute, wherein the Society will practice throughout the winter months. A fee of twenty-five dollars for the season will be levied in addition to whatever extra remuneration may be due the caretaker. Mr. Allan in addressing the Board, said that the Society would be re-organized in a way that should produce results superior to anything previously obtained.

Committee on Appointments.

Mr. W. H. Hill, Chairman of the Committee on Appointments, reported as follows:

That Miss Edna M. Ferguson, Instructor of Domestic Science, employed jointly by the Department of Education and this Board, be reappointed, duties to commence 1st September and salary to be according to schedule.

That Miss Eva L. Fusee be appointed to a position on the Public School staff, duties to start 1st September, and salary to be according to schedule.

That Miss Lucy Richardson be appointed on the Public School staff as Assistant Kindergarten teacher at a fixed salary of $400 per annum, and duties to commence 1st September.

Arts and Crafts Column

In this column, conducted by Mr. Hughson Johnstone, painter and decorator, 510 College street, will be answered on Wednesdays questions of the kind given below, for the benefit of those who, in this period of stringency and enforced and suggested economy, might like doing their own work. Questions relating to painting, sign writing, paperhanging, furniture polishing, and decorating may be sent to the Examiner, and will receive attention in due course.

Richard B., Peterborough, Ont.—What is the best manner for me to varnish my bathroom paper? The varnish has all worn off that was on.

Ans.—Some papers require expert manipulation to varnish, others are comparatively easy. First, carefully dust the paper. Then size it with finely strained pole size. The best size is made from parchment cuttings; however, a good glue size will answer ordinary cases. Be sure to cover every part of your paper or it will show darker spots where missed, when finished. Then apply a coat of any good pale varnish such as copal or damar, or, better, if you can obtain it, one of the special wallpaper varnishes, giving a good full coat, well crossed, and laid on even with whatever varnish you use.

An Amateur, City.—I will feel grateful if, through your "Arts and Crafts" column you will explain to me what "Red oil" is, also "coloured polish." I have taken a recipe from a magazine for polishing mahogany (and I have generity enough to attempt it) and the above ingredients are included.

Ans.—"Red oil" as used for enriching the colour of mahogany and bringing out the figure, is made by steeping Alkanet root in raw linseed oil say about one and a half ounces to a pint of oil, according to depth of tone. Let it steep three or four days, then strain through fine muslin. "Coloured polish" may mean a hundred things, and space will not allow of too elaborate explanations. However, as recipes for French polishing are frequently published in magazines I may be safe in presuming you are to attempt that, so here you are. Simply colour your polish (no matter what gums are used) with a spirit stain of some rich trans-parent pigment being careful not to have your colour too deep or your work will be muddy and uneven.

Another A. B. C., Peterborough.—I am also troubled to know just how to decorate my bedroom. Will you help me? It is entirely barren and I want it done up very sweet and dainty. The room is 12 feet by 14 feet, and the ceiling is 9 feet high. There are two doors and two windows in the room.

Ans.—Ceiling to walls, 14 inches; cost 19 cents.

Perplexed.—Kindly tell me what to do with my kitchen walls. They are painted a dark green, and I have been told that by using a certain kind of whitewash it will take off the green. Is there anything I can do to make it blue? Is there a blue lime?

Ans.—The painter is wrong. Any good hardware or paint dealer will supply you with a blue wash which lime has no effect. Simply add to your limewash as much as will colour it to the tint desired.

N.B.—The inquiry from C. B. P. Hope, was received too late for answer in this issue. It will receive attention next Wednesday.

Ban on Death House Callers

Attorney-General Woodbury Holds to Strict Construction of Legislature's Wish

ALBANY, N.Y., Sept. 8.—Attorney General Woodbury has notified John B. Riley, Superintendent of Prisons, that under the State law it is not permissible for persons generally to see men awaiting execution of the death sentence in the State prisons. The question had been raised over the insistance of Virginia H. Field that she should be permitted at any time to see prisoners in the death house to minister to them.

The Attorney General holds that in enacting a law covering the subject the Legislature intended that only clergymen of the prisoner's creed, physician, priest and members of the immediate family would have such privilege.

A LUMBERMAN'S OPINION.

"I was troubled with palpitation of the heart and sleeplessness," writes Mr. Wm. Pritchard, Lumber Inspector, Tamsden Mills, Ont., and "used Dr. Chase's Nerve Food with very great benefit, as my whole system was strengthened and built up." Dr. Chase's Nerve Food forms new, rich blood and restores the feeble wasted nerve cells.

COUNCIL'S GRANT OF $250 TO 8TH C.M.R. ACKNOWLEDGED AS SPLENDID DONATION

Letter Received From Major McLoughlin Expressing Gratitude of the Officers and Men—Some of the Detailed Business That Passed Through City Council's Hands Last Night.

TO EXTEND PAVEMENTS

The regular meeting of the City Council was held last night, and thanks to long winded arguments about trifles, ran along until 12.15 a m., thus completing a sitting of four hours and fifteen minutes. Of course there was important business dealt with. It would be unfair to convey an idea that nothing but piffle was compiled. But the fact remains that quite recently extended debates occupied too much of the Council's time.

The following communications were read and disposed of:

Tax Collector's Statement.

Statement of roll ending Aug. 31, 1915.

To total amount of roll, 1915	$339,048 53
By total amount deposit	214,657 59
Balance	$124,390 94

Won't Need People's Consent.

Hon. W. J. Hanna, Provincial Secretary, wrote an assurance that the Legislature could be relied upon to approve by legislation special municipal grants for regimental funds, machine guns and similar purposes.

Wants Stratton Avenue.

Mr. H. R. Overend wrote the Council as follows:

It was proposed by you gentlemen to change the name of Princess street to Stratton avenue, which certainly is an agreeable change to us. There is, I believe, a petition in to oppose this change, and I trust you will not consider this as I firmly believe it is as good a choice as could be made.

Mr. Stratton should, I think, have some pretty street like this one called after him. We are by far the largest property owners, and besides we gave the town one-half of this said street that fronts on our property and were glad to do anything to further the interests of the south end.

Gentlemen kindly give this due consideration and call the street Stratton avenue. Received.

Claims Property Damaged.

Peck, Kerr and McElderry on behalf of James O'Connell, whose property is on the south side of Smith street, west of the river, intimated that proceedings would be undertaken for damages caused by the raising of the street in front of his property. He finds difficult to get tenants as a result of the condition of the highway. The city was asked to give the matter immediate attention. Legal Committee.

Mayor Buller stated that this property is on the Government lease.

Petition for Lamps.

Wm. Kemp, Wallace Hartt, R. Gibbs, L. H. Sherwood, and other residents on Bethune street between London and Bethune street, petitioned for three 60 watt lamps on this part of the street. Fire, Water and Light Committee.

Alderman Duffus said he had already given instruction to have these lamps installed.

Central Park for Orangemen.

W. J. Hancock, secretary of the celebration committee for the big Orange celebration July 12th, 1916, asked on behalf of the Association to be given control of Central for the big event. Granted on motion of Alderman Duffus and Alderman Stratton.

Needs a Ditch.

Geo. Hayes, 657 Reid street asked that a ditch be dug in front of his store to carry off surplus water. Board of Works.

Fair Day Banners.

Permission for the Peterborough Industrial Exhibition to place four banners on the streets was granted on motion of Alderman Weir and Alderman Stratton.

Pay for Child's Care.

Mr. Luke Mulaney asked the Council to assist in paying for an operation and care of his son, Edgar, two years old at the Sick Children's Hospital, Toronto. The child was suffering with paralysis in one ankle and his condition was growing worse. Mr. Mulaney was advised to take the child to Toronto for examination and did so. There he learned that he would have to pay $1.00 a day and as he could not pay this expense himself he was given a form to present to the Council for their consideration. The boy would have to be kept in the hospital about eight weeks. Alderman Stratton moved, seconded by Alderman Weir, that the city pay this hospital fee of $1.00 a day for a period of eight weeks or until the child can be returned home.

Expressed Gratitude.

Major McLoughlin of the 57th C. M. R. acknowledged the city's grant of $250.00, which he said Col. J. R. Munro regarded as a splendid gift, and would materially assist in the purchase of a field kitchen.

Extend Pavements.

Alderman Green moved seconded by Alderman Duffus, that Hall street, between Rubidge and Reid streets, and Hunter street, from Park and Belmont avenue be paved this fall if possible by the Warren Paving Co. The motion was passed under the city's agreement that the company construct pavement on any street at the price, in the existing contract. Asphaltic concrete shall be used in these two extra streets.

Board of Works Report.

The Board of Works report was passed as follows:—

That an application from the Warren Bituminous Paving Company for permission to occupy part of the street at the corner of Water and Sherbrooke streets be left with the Mayor, the Chairman of this Board, and the City Engineer to deal with.

That a concrete culvert be built upon Concession street at the south side of Douro street, six feet north of the present site at an estimated cost of $80.00, as recommended by the City Engineer.

That a wooden sidewalk be built on the south side of Euclid avenue, east of Erskine street, and a concrete culvert built at this point at an estimated cost of $35.00, as recommended by the City Engineer.

That notice be given under Section 9 of the Local Improvement Act of the intention of the Council to construct cement sidewalks as local improvements on the following streets:

Edinburgh street, south side, from Aylmer street to the Grand Trunk Railway.

King street, from Pearl avenue to Maitland avenue.

King street, from Maitland avenue to Elias avenue.

King street, from Elias avenue to Margaret avenue.

King street, from Margaret avenue to Frederick avenue.

King street, from Frederick avenue to Monaghan Road.

George street, east side, from Princess street to Lansdowne street.

St. Thomas street, east side, from Gilmour street to Charlotte street.

That the Peterborough Utilities Commission, the Bell Telephone Company, Peterborough Radial Railway Company, the telegraph companies and the Chief of the Fire Department be notified that they must obtain permission of the City Engineer before trimming or otherwise cutting trees on streets.

That the tender of The G. W. Green Company for manhole tops, sidewalk gratings and gulley grates be accepted, their tender of $2.24 per 100 pounds being the lowest.

That a bridge be constructed over the creek on Bonaccord street at an estimated cost of $2,913.00. This estimate does not include the approaches as it has been suggested that the approaches may be made gradually with ashes and other refuse. The bridge recommended is less than the full width of the street.

That a request from L. Pelvin for an approach at 961 Hunter street be complied with when the permanent pavement is being laid on that street.

That an offer from W. J. Johnston to give about 100 yards of gravel for the drawing of it from Dennistoun avenue be acknowledged with thanks, and that the gravel be utilized as soon as it can be used conveniently.

That a car of road oil be purchased from the Crown Oil Refining Company. our Board has received analysis of samples of road oil submitted by several companies which is attached to this report.

That permission be given to D. W. Dumble to register a plan sub-dividing lots Nos. 45 to 50, Plan 101.

Not Another Engineer.

When Ald. Stratton had read the Finance committee report, Ald. Edgar asked if Mr. Dixon was another engineer for the city's office. Ald. Stratton stated that he was replacing Mr. Richardson.

Ald. Green's Oil Troubles.

Ald. Green had another oil statement to make. He said that recently many streets had become dusty and the Board of Works had authorized the purchase of a car of Crown Co oil. He waited until Saturday with out any receipt and then wired the company for an explanation of delay. They answered that they could not deliver within a week. Thereupon he decided to try some other source, and without waiting for another Board meeting ordered a car from the British-American Company. It arrived in the city last night. He trusted that his action would be supported by the Council.

Ald. Edgar moved, seconded by Ald. Duffus, that Ald. Green's initiative be entirely endorsed and commended. Carried.

Pipe Line Under River.

Ald. Green moved, seconded by Ald. Duffus, that the City Solicitor and City Engineer be asked to make a formal appeal to the Dominion Government for permission to cross the river with whatever pipe line may be necessary, in connection with the outfall sewer.

Gas in the Stomach Is Dangerous

PHYSICIANS RECOMMEND THE USE OF MAGNESIA.

Sufferers from indigestion or dyspepsia should remember that the presence of gas or wind in the stomach invariably indicates that the stomach is troubled by excessive acidity.

This acid causes the food to ferment and the fermenting food in turn gives rise to noxious gases which distend the stomach, hamper the normal functions of vital internal organs, cause acute headaches, interfere with the action of the heart and charge the blood stream with deadly poisons, which in time must ruin the health. Physicians say that a quickly acting dose of Bisurated Magnesia to expel the gas and sweeten the inflamed, distended stomach to proceed with its work under natural conditions. Bisurated Magnesia is obtainable in powder or tablet form from any druggist but as there are many different forms of magnesia it is important that the bisurated which the physicians prescribe, should be distinctly asked for.

Rev. Mr. and Mrs. Barett and family have returned to the village after spending a few weeks at Stoney Lake.

Mr. Robert Webster, who resigned his position as constable to enlist for overseas service, left on Friday last to join the 77th battalion, Ottawa.

Mr. W. Lemay left by the same train for Peterborough, having enlisted in the 57th battalion. There was a large gathering at the station to see them off and the Citizens' Band rendered a number of patriotic selections.

Mrs. Atwood and the Misses Atwood returned home on Friday last after spending the past month at Fairhaven, Stoney Lake.

Mr. W. H. Blackwell, of Wilcox, Sask., was a guest of Mr. and Mrs. B. O. Deuch at North Dorro Lodge for a few days last week.

Miss Mitchell, who has been spending the summer with her aunt, Mrs. Traill, returned on Thursday last to Montreal.

Mr. Percy Johnson left on Wednesday last for Ottawa, where he has secured a position in the Customs Department.

Mr. T. B. Morling, who has been attending the artillery school at Kingston, for the past six weeks, returned home on Saturday.

Mr. John W. Todd, who has been the guest of Mrs. Atwood at Fairhaven for the past two weeks, returned to Millbrook on Saturday.

Mrs. Fessenden and Miss Penny of Peterborough, were visiting friends in the village on Saturday.

Mr. F. J. Tate, who has been spending the summer in Mr. Tate's cottage, has returned to the city.

Miss Mary Ogilvie of Grace Hospital, is spending her vacation at her home in the village.

Miss Elsie Ogilvie left on Monday last for Rose Island, where she will continue her duties as teacher.

Mrs. O. A. Langley and children are spending a few weeks visiting friends in Toronto and Oakville.

Mrs. A. T. LeFevre and children are visiting Mr. E. R. Tate at Bradens.

Miss Mary Traill, who has been spending the past two months with her aunt, Miss Traill, left on Tuesday to resume her training at the general hospital, Brantford.

Mrs. W. Nicholls and children of Brokenorth spent the week-end with Mrs. T. Simpson, Queen St.

Mr. C. Leonard of Peterborough spent the week-end with his daughter, Mrs. Hewett at Clydesdale.

Miss E. Grubb left on Tuesday last for Bobcaygeon, where she has been engaged as teacher in the public school.

The Lakefield public and continuation schools reopened on Wednesday last. The vacancy caused by the resignation of Mr. C. S. Carter, who has been principal for the past 16 years, has been filled by the appointment of Mr. Baker of Ingersoll. Mr. Baker and family are occupying the house belonging to Mr. J. B. Reed on Queen street.

Misses Sherman Mahood, Stoney Hall, who have been visiting friends in the village, left on Tuesday morning for Toronto.

The members of the A.Y.P.A. of St. John's church gave a party to Miss Sherman Mahood with a view to her having been a valuable and prominent member of both societies.

LAKEFIELD, Sept. 4.—Mr. H. Morrison has been appointed caretaker, taking the place of Mr. R. Webster, who has enlisted in the 77th Battalion, Ottawa.

Mr. Morrison is well known in the village, having been a member of the 57th battalion band for a number of years.

Rev. Mr. and Mrs. Barrett have recently have returned to the village after spending a few weeks at Stoney Lake.

Miss Clarke, Belgrave, is the guest of Miss Pringle at present for a few weeks.

Rev. J. J. Rogers is paster of the Presbyterian church for the present, having a two weeks' vacation at Mitchell's Bay.

Mr. R. G. Mantle returned on Saturday after spending a few months' vacation at Alberta, Ont.

Mr. J. Yeates and Mr. Pearl returned on Saturday after spending two weeks' vacation at Peterborough.

Mr. and Mrs. J. Payne are spending a few weeks at Stoney Lake.

On Tuesday morning, Sept. 7th, the citizens of Lakefield turned out to say farewell to our popular Chief Police Robt. Webster who will serve on active service as Quartermaster Sergeant of the 77th Battalion at Ottawa, and Sergeant H. Lemay, who has joined the 57th Battalion at Peterborough. The Citizens' Band turned out and paraded to the station playing Tipperary and our Director March. At the station the band played our National Anthem. Many people were present to give the boys a hearty send off. The train pulled out at 9.30. A. E. Vye, Lutzen, all were unable to be present to say a few parting words to the boys and to present them with a gift. Each of them appreciated it in the act how they are making for Lakefield and country. The boys left in the Chief's motor car, which was decorated with flowers and Union Jacks.

Six more boys leave next week for the 39th Battalion at Peterborough two of whom have been accepted as members of the Battalion Band.

CHEESE WAS UP 2 CENTS TO-DAY

Better Demand For Export Made Bidding Brisk—Buyers Went to the Limit

To-day's price, 14⅛ cents.
Cheese offered, 2,055.
Last sale price, 12⅛ cents.
Cheese offered, 1,821.

Cheese buyers had to loosen up to get it on the local market this morning. Increased export activity livened the buyers and the best price was almost two cents above the high of the last sale, three weeks ago.

The factories boarded as follows:

Keene 75, Warminster 88, Shearer 145, Selwyn 115, Villiers 80, Warsaw 115, Westwood 170, Oakdale 90, Daisy D. 65, Myrtle 130, Ormonde 100, Young's Point 60, Lang 130, Indian River 90, East Emily 160, Trewern 105, Norwood 170, Fleetwood 80, Killarney 75, Pine Grove 60. Total, 2,053.

The Bidding.

Mr. Flavelle opened at 13c; Mr. Kerr raised to 13 16, Mr. Flavelle to 14, Mr. Morton to 14, Mr. Gillespie 14, Mr. Flavelle 7-16, Mr. Cook 14, Mr. Gillespie 9-16, Mr. Flavelle 58, Mr. Kerr 11-16, Mr. Morton 14, Mr. Gillespie 13-16, Mr. Cook 7-8, Mr. Gillespie 15-16, Mr. Morton 14 cents, Mr. Cook 14 1-16, there was a big scramble around the 14 cent mark. Mr. Flavelle 14-8.

At 14 cents Mr. Flavelle secured Keene, Shearer, East Emily, Norwood, Fleetwood, Killarney, Daisy D., Oakdale.

Mr. Flavelle offered 14 1-16 for the other selections. Mr. Morton offered 14 1-16 for the balance. Mr. Cook offered 14-8 and obtained Westwood, Villiers, Ormonde, Selwyn, Trewern.

Mr. Kerr offered 14-8 for the balance and got Warsaw, Pine Grove, Myrtle, Young's Point, Indian River, Warminster.

Board adjourned for two weeks.

COUNCIL DEADLOCKED OVER CHANGING NAMES OF STREETS

After Months of Preparation By-law Was Presented and Went Down in the First Round—South Ward Alderman's Objections.

WAS SENT BACK AGAIN

The Council frequently appears to be as extravagant with time as it is barren of ideas and common sense. At any rate they wasted nearly an hour last night and displayed few indications of that mental lucidity through which wisdom and intelligent judgment flash.

The changing of the names of certain streets was the particular bone of fruitless contention. This subject, by the way, has been talked endways, threadbare, even to the limit of Toronto's horrible example, the appointment of a fire chief. It has been through committees in the best part of this year, and some sections of the by-law had been discussed prior to this year. But the longer this Council seems to burden their mentality with the consideration of some subjects, the more diminished and entangled do they seem to become. One would have imagined that when the Board of Works, consisting of the Whole Council had hardly reduced this matter to the form of a By-law presented for its three readings, there would have been some indications of unanimity. But the poor by-law was greeted with just the opposite reception. There was neither unity of opinion nor anything else except the completest deadlock, without even the possibility of the lucky of amation.

The Proposed Changes.

Once more, the changes in the by-law were as follows:

Cedar to Murray street.

Brown to Auburn street.

Reid, between Wolfe and Sherbrooke, to Park street.

Park, between Wolfe and Sherbrooke, to Harper street.

Park Lane, between Bethune and Sherbrooke, to Harper street.

Princess and Gladstone to be entered into Stratton avenue.

Alderman Saunders declared that he was unalterably opposed to the Stratton avenue clause. He suggested that Princess be changed to Gladstone so that the whole street would be under that name.

Alderman Saunders and Alderman Edgar opposed the by-law. Alderman Langford had retired and even with the Mayor voting in favour, the by-law was defeated because a three-fourths majority was needed.

Alderman Saunders endeavoured to pass the Brown and Cedar street changes, but his attempt met a cool reception.

Alderman Edgar moved, seconded by Alderman Saunders, that Clause 1 (a) be passed with the exception of the Princess and Gladstone clause. There was most in the reception this suggestion got.

Alderman Green registered dissent to use moving picture phrase. "Let the by-law go for a year," he said.

Alderman Duffus, who was presiding, tried to get the by-law through this second reading.

In any direction the alderman looked for a way out, they found obstacles that completely blocked them. The minutes were dragging around to midnight, and the street-changing idea was no further advanced than a year ago, or there abouts.

Alderman Weir moved, seconded by Alderman Dobbin, that the by-law go back to the Board of Works for a month. It might then be passed, they said.

The motion passed, but Alderman Saunders, with the tenacity of a certain type, remarked that his mind wouldn't undergo any change during the month.

Voice of The People

Editor of the Examiner,—

Dear Editor, In the explanation regarding the relief fund, the executive officer surely makes an unfortunate "precedent" in advising "that for any arrear for rent the landlord could wait." Does he imagine landlords are all millionaires? Many are depending for their existence upon the rent of just these small houses, the result of a thrifty past and the daily economy that means constant self denial. It is surely a very narrow view of patriotism to so overlook the rights of the citizen who provides in this way for the days of incapacity or for his dependants, having to "wait" for rent only too often means losing it; and the landlord must get credit who does not "speed up" the town very well, or would the Patriotic Fund help him should he apply?

This is written from a strong sense of the injustice to landlords from cases that have come to our notice, not in one a landlord ourselves. Yours, etc.

ANOTHER L. P.

Editor of the Examiner,—

Dear Sir,—If Mr. Rush had not a true version of what was said it would read this way:

The woman asked the officer in charge if her cheque had been stopped. He said, "No, but she would have to call for it." He then asked her where she was living now. She said still in the same house naming the street and number. He said, why don't you move, she said, because I don't want to. I have lived in the same house for four years. He said it is cheaper to move than to pay rent, you should do the landlord out of three months' rent and then move. The woman replied, It may be you are right not mine. He then said, Your money will be ready for you every month until you get your pension, which will be about $25 a month. You can draw that for a while and then get married again.

As the woman could say, was Thank you good morning, and walked out of the room, but the other gentleman called her back to ask her for her proper address. There was no mention of her duty to herself or children not making the landlord wait for his rent, nor that the arrears could be paid up in the future. If any fair minded person considers this coming to hurried conclusions they are welcome to say so. There were two others in the office at the time who heard what was said.

Price of Sugar Takes a Drop

A drop of ten cents a hundred-weight in the price of sugar is announced locally. Granulated now sells at $6.64, Golden Yellow at $6.24 and Beaver granulated at $6.49 a hundred weight.

This will be welcome news to the housekeeper, who at this season of the year, are actively engaged in preserving the many small fruits now coming to hand.

Presented With An Umbrella

Mr. Joseph Denno, 476 Parnell Street, was last evening presented with a handsome gold-handled umbrella, suitably engraved, by the members of St. Peter's Court, Catholic Order of Foresters, of which the recipient was Chief Ranger. Mr. Denno is removing to Hamilton, where he expects to reside. He has been connected with the Order that honoured him last evening for upwards of twenty-three years. The presentation, which took place in the Hunter Street quarters of St. Peter's Court, was accompanied by the following address:

To Joseph Denno, Chief Ranger.
St. Peter's Court No. 225

Dear Sir and Brother,—We, the members of St. Peter's Court No. 225, having learned with regret that you are about to depart for a new field of labour, and in another city, and that the ties that have bound us so closely together are to be severed, cannot allow you to depart from our midst without in some way expressing our appreciation of your services and our admiration for your zeal and energy for the good and welfare of the Court and the Order. Your zeal and devotion to duty in every position in which you were placed will be beacon lights for your successors.

In conclusion, we hope you will prosper in your new home and we hope you will sometimes remember your Brothers of No. 225.

We ask you to accept this gift as a feeble token of our esteem and admiration of your many good qualities.

Fraternally yours, L. N. Trombely, Frank Murray, Wm. Thomas, and all members of St. Peter's Court.

WEDDING BELLS

MENOGUE—ALLEN.

A quiet wedding took place at the Immaculate Conception church at six o'clock this morning, when Miss Nellie Allen, Concession street, was united in the holy bonds of matrimony by the Rev. Father McColl, to Mr. Patrick Menogue, Driscoll Terrace. The bride was assisted by her cousin, Miss Mary Sheehan, of Kinmount, while Dennis Menogue, brother of the groom, acted as best man. The young couple left on the 8.10 C.P.R. train for points west, and on their return will reside at 383 Mark street, East City.

HOUSEHOLD RECIPES

BEEF LOAF WITH TOMATO.

One pound of rare beef chopped fine, three large crackers rolled and sifted, add one-half teaspoon of salt and one-eighth teaspoon of pepper with one well-beaten egg. Work all until thoroughly mixed. Press into a bowl and turn out into a buttered tin. Rub a little butter over it, and pour on a large cup of fresh stewed or canned tomatoes. Bake three-quarters of an hour, basting frequently with the tomato.

TOMATO JELLY SALAD.

Take eight good-sized tomatoes, remove skins and stew gently 10 minutes with a slice of onion, six cloves, a sprinkling of pepper and a half teaspoon of salt. Pass this through a sieve to remove seeds, etc. Stand it on back of stove and stir into it one-half box of gelatin dissolved in a small half cup of boiling water. Strain through a cloth into glasses wet in cold water and set away to harden. There should be a pint and a half of the juice in all. Serve in slices on lettuce leaves with mayonnaise dressing.

TOMATO SOUP.

Slice a peck of unpeeled tomatoes with six white onions and boil together until soft enough to rub through a colander. Then strain through a sieve and return to fire with three bay leaves, a table-spoonful each of powdered mace, pepper, cloves, sugar, salt, a half teaspoonful of paprika and a tablespoonful of celery seed tied up in a small cheese-cloth bag. Boil for six hours, stirring frequently. Remove the bag of celery seed, add a pint of vinegar, and bring to a boil again, then remove from the fire. When cold bottle and seal.

MOCK CHARLOTTE.

Moisten four level tablespoonfuls of cornstarch with a half-cup of water, add one pint of boiling water and stir until it reaches the boiling point. Add one-half cup of sugar and pour slowly while hot into the well-beaten whites of four eggs. Add a teaspoonful of vanilla and turn at once into a mould. Serve with a soft custard sauce, made from a pint of milk and the yolks of the eggs. If the yolks are needed for other dishes, this pudding may be garnished with fruit and served with fruit sauce.

EAST CITY GARBAGE CONTAINERS WERE NOT RETURNED TO OWNER

Fortunately there is usually a touch or two of humour in the Council's melodramas. Ald. Weir stirred up the amusing element last night, when he mentioned East City and garbage collection in the one breath. He complained that an East City resident had sent garbage to the incinerator in a metal container and it was kept there. A few days later, this ratepayer sent a porter to refuse and he couldn't get the barrel back. It was worth thirty cents at least. Ald. McIntyre wanted to know if the incinerator operator was entitled to return the containers.

Ald. McIntyre arose to reply and delved into other difficulties connected with garbage collection. The collectors, he said, were not living up to their agreement. They were picking over the refuse and making all the money out of it they could. They were even scrapping among themselves. The Sanitary Inspector, and not the Chairman of the Property Committee, had the authority over the collectors. Refuse was worth from $25 to $40 a month. Ald. McIntyre said he had told the Council the conditions existing, but no action had been taken. The caretaker of the plant was still buying wood to build up the fires.

Ald. Stratton: According to your committee's bill a cord of wood is being burned every 36 hours. That bill was sent back.

Ald. McIntyre: I think you are wrong.

Ald. Edgar: How much wood are they burning?

Ald. McIntyre: About two cord a week.

Ald. Edgar: Mr. Spence told me that Mr. Keating was burning a cord a day.

Ald. McIntyre: He did not tell me that.

Ald. Edgar stated that if the rags were wet, as they have been of late, they were of no use in augmenting the fires. A Jewish junk dealer had been authorized to value the refuse received at the incinerator. The aldermen did not object to the ordinary respectable Jew doing the work, but he did object to the Austrian Jew who had been appointed. This man had to report regularly to the police.

Ald. Edgar considered that the Collectors should be permitted to pick out refuse of any value to them. They were saving the city about $800 under last year's contract. He suggested that the present conditions be maintained until the end of the year when any changes could be more easily made.

Mayor Buller suggested that the Property Committee deal with the whole matter.

One result was reported this morning that the caretaker of the incinerator was refused an order for wood and threatened to quit his job.

PROMOTIONS ANNOUNCED

Thos. Miller is Made Company Sergeant-Major Provisionally

The following are extracts from orders issued to the 80th Battalion detachment, this afternoon:

The Commanding Officer has been pleased to make the following provisionally:

To be Company Sergt.-Major: Pte. Thos. Miller.

To be Company Orderly Sergeant: Pte. C. Wardale King.

To be Platoon Sergeants: Pte. S. Calladine and F. Oxley.

To be Section Commanders: Pte. Wm. Theobald, Fred Wicker, H. Wood, L. McIntosh, Wm. Lewington, W. J. Lemay, J. T. Knowles, Wm. Jones.

The detachment will parade at 8.30 a.m. and 2 p.m. daily, except Sundays, until further notice.

Debenture By-law Had Queer Look

A by-law to issue debentures for $21,521.03 to cover the short issue of former debentures was caught on the wing through the Council last night by Ald. Stratton, who wanted to know the why and the wherefore of the deficiencies which the new debentures are proposed to cover. There was no detailed discussion of the by-law and no definite statement as to what the debentures were actually intended for. Apparently certain debentures have been issued during the past five years, but they did not meet the full amount of the cost of the work for which they were intended. Ald. Stratton stated that the matter appeared too important to pass without being fully considered by the Council. The amount, $21,521.03, appears as a large item. On the surface it would appear that an amount which should have been met by frontage taxes will now have to be paid for out of the general taxes.

GREAT CHANGE AT OLD CAMBRIDGE

A letter to a Cambridge man in New York from another graduate of the same university who recently returned to England, gives some details of the changes that the war has made on the aspect of the ancient courts and colleges. The writer says:

The war has left its mark on Cambridge. You will remember Whewell's Court stands apart from Trinity as a separate entity. Since last summer it has been taken over by the government, and they have had all sorts of soldiers quartered there. There are none now but in one of the courts there still stands the soldiers' wash arrangements, a long zinc-lined trough with a few taps running into it under a rough penthouse. The staircases still have the names of the undergraduates painted at their bottom, but only two or three done are in evidence, and scrawled in chalk are such queer words as Company C. Medical Room, or Canteen.

In another court you may see the remains of the camp kitchens, little piles of brick, and an empty washtub. Even the porter has deserted his lodge. They are expecting a couple of hundred Canadian nurses next but they won't do the damage the Welsh territorials did, who tore out about $6,000 worth of gas and electric fixtures for pure lightness of heart.

Pembroke and Peterhouse are given up to the officers' training corps. I saw them come in from their drill to-day, four companies strong. They were marching down Trumpington street men of all sizes, widths and years. Nearly all of course were in khaki but a few were still in civilian rig. To-night as I write I hear the tramp, tramp of a regiment, and saw marching Girtonward a corps of active men.

At Jesus some of the officers are quartered, and beside the porter's lodge stands a most wonderful collection of pickaxes and shovels. At Caius is the headquarters staff of an army.

Jesus, Clare and the Mall are said to have suffered most from the war on account of the number of their men who have gone to the front. It is a pretty serious matter for the dons and still more for the coaches. Men have seen a perfectly secure income cut in half or disappear altogether almost overnight. One of the Jesus dons was telling me how the man who 'kept' below him and the man above him had both been killed and how another man from the same staircase had been seriously wounded. He also warned me that when I dined in Hall to-morrow night I should get only meats and sweets, although there might possibly be soup, because that did not cost much. When I told him that Trinity was still supplying at the High Table soup, fish, roast, sweets and cheese, he almost rose in revolt at such shameless extravagance.

PICKLED CORN.

Five pints of sweet corn cut from the cob, five pints of finely-chopped cabbage, five seeded and chopped peppers, four pints of vinegar, one pound and a half of sugar, two tablespoonfuls of salt and a quarter of a pound of mustard. Mix all these ingredients together and cook in a granite pan until the corn is tender. Seal in glass jars.

Quaker Oats Co. Is Buying Locally Oats And Feed Barley

Farmers in this district will be interested to learn that the Quaker Oats Company are in the market for milling oats and feed barley. They are paying 40c a bushel for new oats in for milling purposes, delivered at the mill and are also purchasing feed barley. This will be of particular interest to Peterborough farmers who will be able to draw their oats and barley to the Quaker Oats elevator.

Dancing was originally a religious observance.

Surgeons Perform Successful Operation

NEW YORK, Sept. 9.—The cure of the infantile disease, "spina bifida," is hoped for by surgeons in the Polyclinic Hospital, who have operated on three babies in an effort to find a remedy.

The disease, which heretofore has baffled surgeons, is a peculiar condition in which the spinal column is not fully developed. Heretofore exposure of the immature nerves has resulted in paralysis of the lower part of the body and a complete arresting of development.

To overcome this condition surgeons have followed the form of operation successful recently in bone grafting. They provide a bone covering enclosing the spinal column. The age of the babies, and the relatively small spots on their spines affected leads to the hope that success may result from the experiments. The children are three weeks, four weeks and one month and four days old.

They were operated on while so young because delay, according to physicians, would cause the membrane containing the spinal cord to protrude and render impossible all attempts to aid.

Universal suffrage (including women as well as men) has been adopted in Denmark.

TWO MORE AIR RAIDS MADE ON ENGLAND

The Russians Take Many Prisoners

TWO MORE AERIAL ATTACKS ARE MADE

The Third German Air Raid in a Little Over Twenty-Four Hours Officially Announced---No Details in Regard to the Casualties Caused Have Been Made Public by the Authorities.

LONDON, Sept. 9.—Late reports from the Dardanelles tell of more heavy fighting with the British gaining several yards of Turkish trenches.

ATHENS, Sept. 9.—Heavy reinforcements of French and British are arriving at Gallipoli to-day.

PARIS, Sept. 9.—General Joffre a ireported to have said that the war will be over by May with the Allies across the Rhine River.

BERLIN, Sept. 9.—Newspapers declare Tuesday night's Zeppelin raid on English towns was a "great military feat" and will be repeated.

PARIS, Sept. 9.—French aeroplane builders have completed enormous airships to fight Zeppelins.

PARIS, Sept. 9.—The Crown Prince's army has failed in another attack on Argonne.

PETROGRAD, Sept. 9.—The Russians have defeated the Germans at one point and captured thirty guns and eight thousand men.

LONDON, Sept. 9.—It is believed here that the Czar has permanently cast aside Russian bureaucracy.

PARIS, Sept. 9.—General Joffre is reported to have said that the war tingent will probably be in the trenches next month.

PARIS, Sept. 9.—German aeroplanes flew over the suburbs of Paris early to-day dropping a large number of bombs. The extent of the damage is not known.

AMSTERDAM, Sept. 9.—Seventy-five persons were killed, many of them soldiers, in the French air raid of Saarbrucken, Rhienish Prussia, on Monday, according to reports received here. The railway station was blown up. German airmen reported they killed a French observer.

RUSSIANS SCORE A DECISIVE VICTORY

Two German Divisions Reinforced by Austrian Brigade Hurled Back in an Attempt to Throw Slavs Out of Galicia---Russians Are Driving the Enemy Westward and Have Taken Many Prisoners.

PETROGRAD, Sept. 9.—The decisive victory in the fighting before Tarnopol was heralded by newspapers to-day as a big personal triumph for the Czar.

Two German divisions, reinforced by an Austrian brigade and heavy and light artillery were hurled back in an attempt to throw the Slavs out of Galicia. The Russians counter-attacked and are driving the enemy westward.

Crowds gathered in the streets to cheer the news of the most important Russian victory in the southeast since the Austro-German drive began.

"It is an omen of success for the little father," was the approving murmur that ran through the streets.

In other sectors of the long battle front semilar success have crowned the fresh efforts of the Czar's armies. The Russians have taken many thousand prisoners, and not only have beaten back the enemy attempts to advance, but have developed successful counter-attacks. In their major attempt against Riga the Germans have been unable to make progress.

LONDON, Sept. 9.—Two separate air raids on the "eastern counties" of England occurred during last night, it is officially announced. Details as to casualties have not been made public. The raid officially reported to-day is the third in a little more than 24 hours. Zeppelins raided "eastern counties" Tuesday night. The Press Bureau last night announced an air invasion earlier in the evening. The air raid announced early to-day is the third.

Bars of Dutch Fortress Fail To Hold Interned British Officers

THE HAGUE, Sept. 9.—The ancient fortress of Wierickers-bans, where are interned the British officers of the Antwerp relief expedition, which was forced by the Germans to retreat into Holland nearly a year ago, occasionally loses some of its khaki-clad guests, notwithstanding that the Dutch profess to guard the place thoroughly. The British officers, like many of those interned in other camps in Holland, refuse to pledge themselves against trying to escape to rejoin the fighting forces, and once outside the fortress these prisoners find the Dutch people disposed to make things easy for them. The guards at the camp are under orders to shoot any escaping prisoner, and it is true that they do shoot at them, but there is often something mysteriously poor about their aim. In fact, if it were not for the constant arrival of shipwrecked aviators the quota of prisoners at Wierickers-chans would not be long sustained.

The fortress is an interesting one. Although visible from two railways lines, nobody seems to have been aware of its existence until the war brought it to notice. It is surrounded by a cluster of green trees and a broad moat, which makes it virtually an island. Even the farmers who live near by know so little of its origin that, with the historical generosity of the indifferent, they vaguely refer to the castle as dating back to the time of the Romans. As a matter of fact, the fort was built by King William of England the Stadtholder of Holland, and cannot be older than the year 1672. It was in that year that King Louis XIV of France invaded Holland and marched right up to Amsterdam. The country at once was flooded and several fortifications were built in this impromptu way to guard the few high roads which could not be submerged.

The deep and broad moat which surrounded the fortress now is used for fishing and swimming purposes by the forty-five British officers interned there. In the distance there is a pretty Dutch landscape, with red roofed houses, clusters of trees, a few lazy windmills and a high dyke, all of them suggestive of the liberty that is near at hand, but which is barred by a double row of wire fences both above and under water and a series of armed Dutch guards. At night the entire zone of barbed wire and rifles. The occupants of the fort are safely locked up for the night and at eleven o'clock they are sent to bed.

For nearly a year now these men have been in a prison which really is not a prison. If they were prisoners of war they could be treated severely and could be punished for the breaking of any rule of the camp. Since they are interned foreign soldiers and have not given their promise that they shall not try to escape they are at perfect liberty to walk away the moment they can. When they are caught they are brought back, but they may renew their efforts the next morning and unless they actually destroy government property there is no way in which to punish them for the trouble which they have caused all around. As a matter of fact, the Dutch are outstanding good sports and are going to forget the connection with the death of an excellent fellow with whom he has played games for many months and against whom he has nothing but friendly feelings.

As for the daily routine of the interned officers it can be well compared to a rather quiet watering place. Ten men can control the game of their own schooldays and a few times a day indulge in a mild game of quoits. The British government has built two excellent tennis courts. The Dutch government has put up a cricket board and between eleven and one o'clock all over the moat of Holland is heard the merry crack of the willow as a cricket match is played.

Explosion in the New York Subway Near Where Treasure Was Waiting For Transfer From Train to Vault

GUARDS ALARMED

NEW YORK, Sept. 9.—An explosion in the new subway, near the express company building at Forty-fifth street and Lexington Avenue, in which $80,000,000 in gold and securities was temporarily stored, threw fifty armed guards into feverish activity for several minutes to-day.

Soon after they had learned that the treasure was still safe the gold, which is the third shipment from England in payment for war supplies, was transferred to the vaults of the J. P. Morgan Company at Broad and Wall Streets. Twenty-five auto trucks, guarded by fifty express guards, a score of mounted police and fifty plain clothesmen formed the treasure.

The third and largest consignment of gold shipped from England to the United States during the past few weeks, was placed in the substructure here to-day after having been guarded all night by police and armed express messengers at the Grand Central terminal where it arrived on a special train from Halifax.

The gold consisting of American and British coin was reported to be approximately $60,000,000, while the securities accompanying the shipment were said to be worth about $40,000,000. The entire consignment was made to J. P. Morgan and Co. fiscal agents of the British Government.

Members of the Morgan firm said that no estimate of the value of the consignment could be made until after the gold had been weighed and counted and the securities examined.

After the gold had been deposited in the sub-treasury from twenty-five hot trucks it was reported that it consisted of $1,650,000 British coin, the equivalent to about $8,500,000 and $7,500,000 in American coin. The British coin at first was said to be sent to the Government mint at Philadelphia to be re-coined and melted down into bullion.

HORSE BUTCHER SHOPS OPENED IN ENGLAND

LONDON, Sept. 9.—The colonization of Belgian refugees in various parts of England has brought with it the introduction of the sale of horse meat. The horse butcher has hitherto been almost unknown in England except as a few of the poorer quarters of London.

Three horse meat shops have just been opened in Glasgow. Steaks are sold at from twelve cents a pound and sausages at ten cents a pound, pickled and smoked cuts are fourteen cents. Belgium butchers at Stirling will give away several cart loads of meat next to the English people of the town in the hope of popularizing their goods among a wider class.

There are probably twenty horse butcher shops in London. Under the law it is illegal for any butcher to sell horse meat provided that a permanent notice is exhibited at the front of the shop to that effect and provided also that the customers ask for or are informed that they are receiving such meat.

ITALIAN BRIGAND ASKS PERMISSION TO FIGHT

VERONA, Italy, Sept. 9.—The famous Italian brigand, Musolino, now serving a sentence of thirty years' penal servitude has confessed a penitent to God, King of Italy asking to be allowed to fight and die for his country. He has received the papers necessary to enable him to enlist and has left to-day for the front. Musolino passed his time in prison in religious practices, rising from his cot at the hour of mass and asking to be allowed to observe the regulations of the prison more closely. He also asked that he be provided with a rosary and prayer book. Musolino's request to enlist was brought about through the efforts of a priest who visited him frequently in prison.

School Children Can't Afford Handicaps

In a remarkable test, recently made under the supervision of a western Board of Health, over 9000 school children were questioned as to what they ate for breakfast.

A large percentage of the breakfasts consisted of coffee, bread and butter; coffee and oatmeal or some other cereal; coffee and hotcakes; coffee and biscuits; coffee and coffee cake, or coffee alone. Probably the same conditions prevail generally.

"IS IT ANY WONDER," SAYS THE EXAMINING PHYSICIAN, "THAT 23 PER CENT OF THESE CHILDREN HAVE FREQUENT HEADACHES?"

He was thinking of the chief cause—coffee. It IS no wonder when we consider that coffee contains the powerful drug, caffeine, a nerve poison and notorious cause of headaches, heart trouble, sleeplessness, irritation and other ills! The results of tea drinking are similar to those of coffee, because they both contain the same drug.

Parents often wonder why their children are sickly, dull and backward in school, when frequently the cause lies in the homely, accepted habit of giving them a beverage containing an insidious poison.

When scientists and Boards of Health everywhere are speaking out against the dietetic dangers to which children have so long been subjected, it is high time that parents take heed and correct these conditions. No child should be permitted to use tea or coffee. It is easy to furnish them instead the pleasant, pure-food drink

Spanish Surnames.

In addition to three or four Christian names the Spanish child bears the combined family names of his father and mother. When the surnames are doubled or connected by the y, meaning "and," the first is the more important one and the only one that may be taken alone, for it is in the father's name, while the last is in the name of the mother. In Spain they know no "senior" and "junior." Father and son may bear the same Christian name, but each takes his own mother's name as a distinction, the father being, for instance, Pedro Diaz y Castillo and the son Pedro Diaz y Blanco.

"Come!" said I finally, grabbing the keys from the old man's unresisting hand. "And, Schmick, if that dog bites I'll hold you personally responsible. Do you understand?"

Two Abreast We Filed Through the Long, Vaulted Halls.

Two abreast we filed through the long, vaulted halls, Rudolph carrying a gigantic lantern and Max a sledge. We traversed extensive corridors, mounted tortuous stairs and came at length to the sturdy oak door that separated the east wing from the west—a huge, formidable thing strengthened by many crosspieces and studded with rusty bolt heads. Padlocks as large as horseshoes, corroded by rust and rendered absolutely impracticable by age, confronted us.

"I have not the keys," said old Conrad Schmick sourly. "This door has not been opened in my time. It is no use."

"It is no use," repeated his grisly sons, leaning against the moldy walls with weary tolerance.

"Smash those padlocks, Max," I commanded resolutely.

Very reluctantly Max bared his great arms, spit upon his hands and, with pitiful look at his parents, prepared to deal the first blow upon the ancient padlock. But the padlock merely shed a few scabs of rust and rattled back into its customary repose.

"See!" cried Max, triumphantly. "It cannot be broken."

"It is a very fine lock," cried old Conrad, with a note of pride in his voice.

I began to feel some pride in the thing myself. "It is, indeed," I said. "Try once more, Max."

It seemed to me that he struck with a great deal more confidence than before, but without result.

"Give me the hammer," I said in desperation. Max surrendered the clumsy, old fashioned instrument with a grin and I motioned for them all to stand back. Three successive blows with all the might I had in my body failed to shatter the lock, whereupon my choler rose to heights hitherto unknown, I being a very mild mannered, placid person and averse to anything savoring of the tempestuous. I delivered a savage and resounding thwack upon the broad oak panel of the door, regardless of the destructiveness that might attend the effort. If any one had told me that I couldn't splinter an oak board with a sledge hammer at a single blow I should have laughed in his face. But as it turned out in this case I not only failed to split the panel, but broke off the sledge handle near the head, putting it wholly out of commission for the time being as well as stinging my hands so severely that I doubled up with pain.

The Schmicks fairly glowed with joy! Afterward Max informed me that the door was nearly six inches thick and often had withstood the assaults of huge battering rams, back in the dim past when occasion laid of the primal baron to seek safety in the east wing, which, after all, appears to have been the real, simon pure fortress.

As we trudged back to the tower halls, defeated, but none the less impressed by our failure to devastate our stronghold, I was struck by the awful barrenness of the surroundings. There suddenly came over me the shocking realization—the "contents" of the castle as set forth rather recently in the bill of sale, were not what I had been led to consider them.

"Herr Schmick," said I, abruptly halting my party in the center of the hall, "what has become of the rugs that were here last week and where is that pile of furniture we had back yonder?"

Old Conrad was not slow in answering.

"The gentlemen called day before yesterday, mein herr, and took much away. They will return tomorrow for the remainder."

"Gentlemen?" I gasped. "Remainder?"

"The gentlemen to whom the herr count sold the rugs and chairs and chests and"—

"What!" I roared. Even Poopendyke jumped at this sudden exhibition of wrath. "Do you mean to tell me that these things have been sold and carried away without my knowledge or consent? I'll have the law"—

Herr Poopendyke intervened. "They had bills of sale and orders for removal of property dated several weeks prior to your purchase, Mr. Smart. We had to let the articles go. You surely remember my speaking to you about it."

"I don't remember anything," I snapped, which was the truth. "Why—why, I bought everything that the castle contained! This is robbery! What the dickens do you mean by"—

Old Conrad held up his hands as if expecting to pacify me. I sputtered out the rest of the sentence, which really amounted to nothing.

"The count has been selling off the lovely old pieces for the past six months, sir. Ach, what a sin! They have come here day after day, these furniture buyers, to take away the most priceless of our treasures, to sell them to the poor rich at twenty prices. I could weep over the sacrifices. I have wept, haven't I, Gretel? Eh, Rudolph? Buckets of tears have I shed, mein herr. Oceans of them. Time after time have I implored him to deny these rascally curio hunters, these bloodsucking"—

"But listen to me," I broke in. "Do you mean to say that articles have been taken away from the castle since I came into possession?"

"Many of them, sir. Always with proper credentials, believe me. Ach, what a spendthrift he is! And his poor wife! Ach, Gott, how she must suffer! Nearly all of the grand paintings, the tapestries that came from France and Italy hundreds of years ago, the wonderful old bedsteads and tables that were here when the castle was new—all gone! And for mere songs, mein herr—the cheapest of songs! I—I"—

"Please don't weep now, Herr Schmick," I made haste to exclaim, seeing lachrymose symptoms in his bleak old eyes. Then I became firm once more. This knavery must cease or I'd know the reason why. "The next man who comes here to cart away so much as a single piece is to be kicked out. Do you understand? These things belong to me. Kick him into the river. By Jove, I'd like to wring that rascal's neck! A count! Umph!"

"Ach, he is of the noblest family in all the land!" sighed old Gretel. "His grandfather was a fine man." I contrived to subdue my rage and disappointment and somewhat loudly returned to the topic from which we were drifting.

"As for those beastly padlocks, I shall have them filed off tomorrow. I give you warning, Conrad, if the keys are not forthcoming before noon tomorrow I'll file 'em off, so help me!"

"They are yours to destroy, mein herr. God knows," said he dismally. "It is a pity to destroy fine old padlocks"—

"Well, you wait and see," said I grimly.

His face beamed once more. "Ach, I forgot to say that there are padlocks on the other side of the door, just as on this side. It will be of no use to destroy these. The door still could not be forced. Mein Gott, how thankful I am to have remembered it in time!"

"Confound you, Schmick! I believe you actually want to keep me out of that part of the castle!" I exploded.

The four of them protested manfully, even Gretel. "I have a plan, sir," said Britton. "Why not place a tall ladder in the courtyard and crawl in through one of the windows?"

"Splendid! That's what we'll do!" I cried enthusiastically. "And now let's go to bed! We will breakfast at 8, Mrs. Schmick. The early bird catches the worm, you know."

"Will you see the American ladies and gentlemen who are coming tomorrow to pick out the —"

"Yes, I'll see them," said I, compressing my lips. "Don't let me oversleep, Britton."

"I shan't sir," said he.

But I did. "Get up, sir, if you please," Britton repeated the third time. "The party of Americans is below, sir, rummaging about the place."

"Where is Poopendyke?" I cried, leaping out of bed.

"Mr. Poopendyke is in despair, sir. He has tried to explain that nothing is for sale, but the gentlemen say they are onto his game. They go right on ranking things about and putting their own prices on them and reserving them."

"I'll—I'll put a stop to all this," I gasped, seeing red for an instant.

"And the ladies, sir! There are three of them, all from New York city, and they keep on saying they are completely overjoyed, sir. Your great sideboard in the dining room is to go to Mrs. Riley-Werkheimer, and the hall seat that the first baron used to throw his armor on when he came in from"—

"Great snakes!" I roared. "They haven't moved it, have they? It will fall to pieces!"

"No, sir. They are piling sconces and candelabra and andirons on it, regardless of what Mr. Poopendyke says. You'd better hurry, sir. Here is your collar and necktie"—

"I don't want 'em. Where the dickens are my trousers?"

His face fell. "Being pressed, sir. God forgive me!"

"Get out another pair, confound you, Britton! What are we coping tool?"

He began rummaging in the huge clothespress, all the while regaling me with news from the regions below.

"Mr. Poopendyke has gone up to his room, sir, with his typewriter. The young lady insisted on having it. She squealed with joy at seeing an antique typewriter, and he—he had to run away with it, 'pon my soul he did, sir."

I couldn't help laughing.

"And your golf clubs, Mr. Smart. The young gentleman of the party is perfectly carried away with them. He says they're the real thing, the genuine sixteenth century article. They are a bit rusted, you'll remember. I left him out in the courtyard trying your brassie and midiron, sir, endeavoring to loft potatoes over the south wall. I

HAD DIARRHOEA.

Was So Bad Passed Blood.

Little Boy Was Cured By Using

DR. FOWLER'S Extract of Wild Strawberry.

Diarrhoea arises from many causes such as, change of water, change of climate, change of diet, catching cold, the eating of unripe fruits, etc.

Never neglect what, at first sight, appears to be a slight attack of diarrhoea for if you do some serious bowel trouble may ensue.

Mrs. Wm Bartlett, Stanley, N.B., writes: "Last summer our little boy, age 1½ years, took diarrhoea. He got so bad as to pass blood. We procured a bottle of Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry, and after I had given him the third dose he was all right. I would not be without it, as I consider it a household remedy. It is a Godsend to any family."

There is nothing that can take the place of "Dr. Fowler's."

There is nothing "Just as Good."

"Dr. Fowler's" has been on the market for the past 70 years.

"Dr. Fowler's" is manufactured only by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

THIS SCHOOL GIRL HAD BAD FAINTING SPELLS

Was Weak and Run Down. But Dr. Chase's Nerve Food Made Complete Cure

The most critical time in a girl's life comes during the school age, when she is impelled by rivalry to put forth her best efforts in studying for examinations. At the time she should have healthful outdoor exercise and abundance of fresh air, to keep the blood pure and rich, she is confined to her studies. Is it any wonder that she becomes run down in health and suffers from headaches, indigestion, loss of appetite and spells of weakness or fainting?

The case described in this letter is a good illustration and you can read here the splendid results of using Dr Chase's Nerve Food to help through this critical period.

"While attending school my daughter became weak and very much run down. She was frequently troubled with bad fainting spells, and nothing we tried seemed to do her any good. We were advised to try Dr Chase's Nerve Food, and did so with most satisfactory result. I am pleased to tell you that after using five boxes of the Nerve Food she was completely cured, and has no return of the fainting spells."

This statement is certified to by Mr Hamilton Houston, Justice of the Peace.

The reason Dr Chase's Nerve Food is so effective in cases of this kind is because of its extraordinary blood-forming influence. By creating an abundance of rich, red blood it strengthens the action of the heart, revitalizes the exhausted nerves and builds up the system in every way.

The appetite is restored, digestion improves, you rest and sleep well, and the new vigour and energy is felt in every organ of the human body. Dr Chase's Nerve Food is doing wonders for men, women and children whose systems have become weak and run down. 50 cents a box, 6 for $2.50, all dealers or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Limited, Toronto.

EXAMINER PATTERN SERVICE

SOMETHING NEW FOR LITTLE BOYS.

By Anabel Worthington.

It is not easy to find novelties for the small boy, but the suit shown in the illustration is about the latest thing that has been brought out for their wearing. It is really a boyish affair, and this should appeal to mothers who wish their sons to be little men, as most of us do.

The suit consists of blouse and trousers. The blouse is much on the middy order. It is a straight cut shirt in shape, with a small opening at the neck, just enough to allow of its being slipped on over the head. Around the neck is a rounding collar of medium size, trimmed with braid or bias bands of colored material. The sleeve is quite regulation, fitting the arm loosely and continued to the wrist or cut off shorter, as preferred. The long sleeve has a group of lengthwise tucks at the wrist instead of a cuff. Only the hems of the edges of the trousers are visible below the blouse, and these are made open, this finish being newer than the bloomer. The trousers open at each side and are made without the fly which figures in the garments of older boys.

There is nothing prettier than duck or linen for these suits, but many of them are made of gingham. The blouse is perhaps of a light blue and white check, while the trimmings and the trousers are of plain blue, the same shade or a trifle darker.

The pattern of this suit, No. 7230, is cut in sizes 2 and 4 years. To make the suit in the 4 year size will require 2½ yards of 36-inch material.

When ordering remember to give your name and address as well as the number and size of pattern required and age of a child.

Price 15 cents or 2 for 25c.

Address The Examiner Pattern Service, The Examiner, Peterborough.

STORMY WEATHER DURING THE MONTH OF SEPTEMBER

The First Reactionary Storm Period is Central on the 7th, 8th and 9th---The Prime Season for Meteorological Disturbances---Weather Forecast for the Month.

A period of storm period is central on the 2nd beginning the last two days of August and extending to September 2nd.

In all western sections and on and about the 2nd keep your eye on your barometer the first days of September. If its reading is below normal and falling you may safely make ready for violent atmospheric disturbances. They will culminate on about Thursday, the 2nd to Sunday the 5th and notably the 3rd and 4th. Autumnal thunder, hail rain and possibly inland tornadoes are among the things possible and probable especially in regions to the southward. After these early September storms do not be surprised if very cool nights with frosts northward, attend the rising barometer and northerly winds that are sure to follow.

The first reactionary storm period is central on the 7th, 8th and 9th. The Venus period is central on the 7th, the moon is in conjunction with sun and earth, and on the celestial equator on the 9th. Saturn and Mars are in close conjunction on the 10th, and Venus is at superior conjunction with the earth and the sun on the 12th. It must also be remembered that the earth is passing its annual crisis of electrical and magnetic disturbances from about the 5th to the 15th. All these things considered this reactionary period may be regarded as a time of probable danger, entailing danger on land, lake and sea. There will be danger of killing frosts during the nights, following within forty-eight hours of electrical storms on the 9th. The probabilities of violent seismic troubles are also strong at this time.

The second regular storm period is central on the 14th, extending from the 12th to the 17th inclusive.

In western extremes see if your barometer does not begin to "tip its hat" to the approaching storm king as early as the 12th and 13th. It will turn decidedly warmer and renewed storms of rain, wind and thunder will take up their eastward march, passing over the great central valleys about the 14th to the 16th, and reaching the Atlantic states a day or two later.

Frosts for several nights following, say about the 16th to the 18th, will be natural in the central to the northern sections.

It will turn decidedly warmer and renewed storms of rain, wind and thunder will take up their eastward march, passing over the great central valleys about the 14th to the 16th, and reaching the Atlantic states a day or two later.

Frosts for several nights following, say about the 16th to the 18th, will be natural in the central to the northern sections.

Cocoanut Oil Fine For Washing Hair

If you want to keep your hair in good condition the less soap you use the better.

Most soaps and prepared shampoos contain too much alkali. This dries the scalp, makes the hair brittle and is very harmful. Just plain mulsified cocoanut oil (which is pure and entirely greaseless) is much better than soap or anything else you can use for shampooing, as this can't possibly injure the hair.

Simply moisten your hair with water and rub it in. One or two teaspoonfuls will make an abundance of rich, creamy lather and cleanse the hair and scalp thoroughly. The latter rinses out easily and removes every particle of dust, dirt, dandruff and excessive oil. The hair dries quickly and evenly and it leaves it fine and silky, bright, fluffy and easy to manage.

You can get mulsified cocoanut oil at most any drug store. It is cheap and a few ounces is enough for everyone for several months.

Are Fighting At Many Points In The West

The Germans Dropped Bombs On Paris

IS ROUNDING INTO SHAPE

More Men Are Added Daily to the Strength of the Peterboro' Detachment of the 80th Battalion

TO-DAY'S MILITARY NEWS

Each day sees new recruits out with the local detachment of the 80th Battalion and the roll is steadily advancing. In addition to the men actually on the strength, there are a number of others who have passed who will report in a day or two, as well as a number of others who are in the hospital undergoing minor operations. Major Cameron sent two Lakefield recruits to the hospital yesterday.

Sergt. Tom Miller took charge at this morning's parade.

The first bugler to join the local detachment passed the doctor last night, in the person of Bugler Will Oxley. He is a son of Sergt. F. Oxley of the 80th, and is only sixteen years old, the youngest recruit in the 80th.

The squad from the 80th who are to give a demonstration of bayonet exercise and physical drill at the Peterborough Industrial Exhibition are hard at work. They will have their first practice with the band of the 80th to-morrow morning.

The morning's parade, until further orders, has been changed from 9 a.m. to 8.30 a.m.

A generous offer from the Y.M.C.A. for the free use of the shower and plunge baths in the Y on four mornings each week was announced to the men this morning and is thoroughly appreciated by the men of the 80th. Each platoon will visit the baths twice a week.

It is expected that boots and uniforms for the men of the 80th will arrive in a short time. Boots in particular are needed at once.

The provisional section commanders named yesterday are all former members of the 57th Regt. except Corp. Wm. Jones, who is an ex-Royal Navy man.

Rev. Jas. Rollins of St. Andrew's church, who holds a provisional commission in the 57th Regiment, is attending the School of Infantry at Barriefield camp.

The band of the 57th Regiment had a very enjoyable visit to the Toronto Exhibition yesterday.

Kingston Standard: There is a rumour running in the right quarter for reliability to the effect that the 59th Battalion will probably go overseas as a unit. In spite of the order that all units would simply be depot draft units, it is impossible to gauge the course, or to anticipate what changes will take place at Ottawa owing to the change in the situation at the front. Things may change to such an extent that many more battalions will go overseas as units, including the new 80th Battalion. However this may be, it looks as though the 59th would really have a chance to get away without being drafted and every man and officer is delighted with the prospects.

Kingston Standard: The 80th Battalion has secured a number of good men who have been serving on the board at Petawawa camp. These men belong to the 42nd Regiment, are good soldiers and are just the kind of material that will help make Lieut.-Col. Kelcheson's command a good, creditable and efficient one. These men will be here in a few days and were recruited by Capt. Watson.

Kingston Standard: The 43rd Battery has received another 15 recruits and is now about 20 strong. Some of the best material obtainable is applying daily to Major Sutz, for enlistment.

Sergeant H. Elliott and Pte. Smyth of the 8th C.M.R., were here to-day to escort back to Barriefield Camp two members of B squadron who had over-stayed their leave.

PETERBOROUGH BOY WHO IS A PRISONER IN SAXONY

Mr. C. Fessenden of Peterborough, Ont., received the picture from his son, Lieut. C. V. Fessenden, of the 15th Battalion, who, with his companions, were captured at St. Julian, when their platoons were cut off and they found themselves defending 150 yards of trenches in a sea of Germans. From left to right—Lieut. E. H. Macdonald, son of Col. W. C. Macdonald; Lieut. Ryder, of the Buffs; Lieut. C. V. Fessenden and Lieut. F. J. Smith, of the 15th Battalion. "They are prisoners at Bischofswerde, Saxony, where the picture was taken.

Hot Fighting Is Reported on The Western Front

German Aeroplanes Bombard Suburbs of Paris and French Aviators Drop Bombs on German Railway Stations ---Germans Attacking Fiercely in the Argonne.

PARIS (French Official Communique) Sept. 9.—A German air raid on Paris, the first in many months, and French attacks on the railway stations held by Germans, featured to-day's official reports.

German aeroplanes bombarded the suburbs of Paris at an early hour to-day. The Government will permit announcement as to casualties as soon as the full details are received.

A French dirigible bombarded the railway station at Nesle, 15 miles southeast of St. Quentin, during the night. French aviators showered bombs on the station at Challerange railway junction in the rear of the German Crown Prince's army. Fifty bombs were hurled on Challerange station and it is reported great damage was done.

The Germans have been attacking without any cessation for 24 hours in Argonne. Whether this presages another attempt by the Crown Prince to reach the Verdun-St. Menehould railway, cannot yet be determined. The advanced German trenches in Western Argonne are within eight miles of this line, whose capture would cut Verdun off from the west.

This afternoon's official communiue said the German attacks were particularly violent near Fontaine Aux Charmes. It was officially admitted that the Germans carried some French trenches, but on the principal front the French maintained their positions.

Fierce fighting is occurring north of Arras and in Lorraine. Near Binarville the French have captured both prisoners and machine guns. Advanced position combats have occurred at other points in the Lorraine-Alsace region.

Around Arras, particularly near Neuville and Reclincourt both sides have made trench attacks with bombs and rifle fire. Fierce cannonading is reported at several points along the northern front and also in Argonne.

LONDON, Eng., Sept. 9.—The casualties in last night's Zeppelin raids totalled 106 according to the Press Bureau announcement to-day.

A NEW PHASE FOR ITALIANS.

ROME, Sept. 8.—The Italian army has passed to a new phase on its offensive operations. Important news affecting the entire Trentino salient is now awaited.

The danger of this great wedge, which passes through Italy's natural line of defence in the north, has not only been a problem for the armed forces of the nation, but has been constantly in the mind's eye of the whole people as an ominous threat for the day when war should come. There is reason to believe that General Cadorna has conjured the evil and even has devised a means of turning it against the enemy.

After several weeks devoted to the work of clearing the Tyrol valleys in the Gexten district and breaking down the advance works of the numerous forts around Monte Croce di Padola, the Italian commander recently brought up a number of batteries of medium calibre and prepared the ground for an important assault. The attack was begun on Monday and is still in progress.

Reports from Austrian sources show that much apprehension is felt by the general staff regarding the outcome of this attack. It is a blow at the main railroad line connecting the Trentino with the heart of Austria.

The Italian effort is directed to the capture of Toblach and Innischen, both of which are important towns on the railway. Should it be successful the Italian forces expect to have little difficulty practically in isolating the Trentino salient.

PETERBORO' BOYS FORM COMPANY

A charter has been granted to Fred G. Roberts & Co. Limited, of Toronto, to carry on business as general contractors, with a limited capital of $40,000.

Messrs. Fred G. Roberts and Arthur F. Hetherington are the largest stockholders in this company.

They are both former Peterborough boys who have made good in the Queen City, and we wish them all success in the future.

MOTOR CARS ARE NEEDED

Patriotic Automobilists Can Do Their Bit by Lending Their Cars to Assist in Recruiting in the 80th Battalion

A CHANCE TO HELP

The Patriotic League are making arrangements for a thorough canvass of the northern part of the county for the purpose of enlisting recruits in the 80th Battalion. In order to do this they will require the services of several autos, and are asking all the auto owners who desire to help in the canvass to send their names to S. J. Keyes, 773 Water Street, stating the length of time that the Committee may count upon their help.

Apart from the patriotic viewpoint the city's interests should demand a ready response to this appeal. It will mean a great deal to the business of the city if 1,000 men are stationed and drilled here during the winter.

Overseas Tobacco Fund Endorsed By J. R. Robertson

Following is a copy of a letter from J. Ross Robertson, proprietor of The Evening Telegram

To the Publishers and Editors of Canadian newspapers

Dear Sir,—My son, Irving E. Robertson, Associate Editor of the Evening Telegram, went, thoroughly into the foundations of the mission which brings Mr. Arthur Private to Canada. He satisfied himself, and satisfied me, as to the merits of the work of the Overseas Club on behalf of all British soldiers, and of the special need of such a work to supply tobacco to our own Canadian soldiers at the front. I was, therefore, glad to give Mr. Private and the Overseas Club all the help that the Telegram could give him, and confidently commend Mr. Private and the Overseas Club and its work to the good offices and friendly help of the other Canadian newspaper men to whom Mr. Private may appeal.

Bound Over to Keep the Peace

George Crossen Faced Two Charges in Police Court This Morning

I will smash in your bedroom and will give your dope and carry you away," quoth George Crossen. The party thus addressed was a Mr. Hazlewood who resides in an isolated part of the city. Crossen appeared in the Police Court this morning, and was bound over to keep the peace. He will have to furnish a bond of $500 or reside in the gaol for the next three months. He accused admitted the offence which was perpetrated while under the influence of liquor. For being drunk and disorderly in a public place he was fined two dollars and costs amounting in all to five dollars and seventy-five cents.

"You ought to be ashamed of yourself," commented acting Magistrate Rush, who assisted by Mr. Vincent Eastwood, J.P. occupied the bench in the absence of Police Magistrate Dumble.

Remanded for a Week.

John Leary pleaded guilty to a charge of being drunk in a public place. His left eye looked as though it had collided with a mule's starter. The Court decided to intern him in the stone pile for a week, where he will have an opportunity to recuperate and regain his sight.

Wire Was Stolen.

Hugh Connor was charged with unlawfully receiving from a number of boys a quantity of copper wire, value unknown, the property of the Canadian General Electric Company. He admitted receiving the goods, but did not appear to know that it constituted an offence. The case will be heard on Wednesday next.

COL. ASHTON'S FERVID APPEAL

BRANTFORD, Sept. 7.—"From reports I see that Canada is still recruiting men and working them into shape. All will be needed. This war is only beginning. It is hard to imagine that men, supposedly sensible, thinking men, can stand on one side and not jump into the game. What were they born for? Are they blind? Don't they want to take a man's part in this, the greatest and most momentous event in the world's history? What are they waiting for? It is this hanging back and not giving us men and munitions at the start that is costing all these lives. It will not do any good for them to come forward too late. We are going to win, but we are paying a terrible price for slowness."

The above extract is from a letter to Capt. Rev. C. E. Jeakins, rector of St. Jude's church, chaplain of the 58th battalion, but Lieut.-Col. E. C. Ashton, officer commanding the 36th battalion, now in England.

Many Officers and Men Are Captured By The Russians

Czar Nicholas Wires Personal Felicitations to the Officers in Charge---Austrians Tried to Assume the Offensive in Dneister Region But Lost Eleven Officers and 1000 Men.

PETROGRAD, Sept. 9.—Czar Nicholas has wired personal felicitations on the Russian success to the commanders directly in charge.

"South of the Thembowla region, we repulsed a number of enemy attacks on villages occupied by our troops," said the official statement. "We took forty officers and 2,500 men prisoners, as well as three field pieces and ten maxims.

"Between the Dniester and the left bank of the Lower Sereth region, the Austrians assumed the offensive but we flanked them and took eleven officers and 1,000 men prisoners. We also took some maxims at this point."

PARIS, France, Sept. 9.—The Allies are now abundantly supplied with war munitions, not to mention the stream of shells pouring in to the front each day. They have adequate reserves. These things, with the continued great activity of the Anglo-French artillery, convinces Paris that something is about to happen on the western front.

Everything is in the same state of preparedness noted aboard ship when the fast dropping barometer foretells a hurricane. Everywhere one can see the finishing touches being administered to latest perfections of a war machine which seemed only awaiting the touch of a button to take on motion.

All these things together with the official admission that the British now hold a more extended line of the western front, enhance the impression that the Allies plan concerted action in a new offensive.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 9.—Secretary of State Lansing has cancelled the passports of James J. F. Archibald, the United States correspondent now in Rotterdam, who was mixed up with Austrian Ambassador Dumba's munitions strike negotiations. It is thought here that Dumba may be asked to leave the United States. The investigations may draw in German Ambassador Bernstorff.

NEW YORK, Sept. 9.—Gustav Stahl, the German reservist, who pleaded guilty to perjury in signing affidavits that he saw four guns on the Lusitania just before that liner's last voyage, was to-day sentenced to a year and one-half imprisonment.

OTTAWA TEAM HERE FOR EXHIBITION SERIES

Manager Frank Shaughnessy and his Ottawa team four times champions of the Canadian League arrived in town this morning for a three game series with the famous colonized team the Ottawa Giants. Stars and he nine have had a good season winning the honours in a wide manner and the team is about the strongest that has represented Ottawa in Canadian baseball circles. Pete Peters, Kerr, Smythe, Dooley, Bowman and Layourite are here. The Ottawa Giants are a fast team and have won the championship of the Canadian capital city. The Ottawa team is now in first place in the league standing and will endeavour to maintain their position when they meet the locals here. The first game will be played this afternoon at the Electric Park grounds.

The Work of the Ashburnham Cent-a-day Club

The contributors to the Ottawa Citizen Day Class of the Ashburnham Red Cross Society for the month of August just amounted to eight thousand and seventy-three cents ($8073) making a total to date from this source of eighteen thousand, two hundred and seventy-four cents ($18274).

If there are any friends with boxes that have not been collected they are requested to kindly call at once and at their convenience, at the home of Mr. W. H. Perry, 141 Hunter street East City, or any of the ladies on the collecting committee in East City, who are not always fortunate enough to find their workers in this cause a home.

Should there be any others desirous of joining this movement they will be very welcome, and boxes will be gladly supplied to them by any of the above ladies on request.

20 KILLED IN AIR RAID

Trafalgar Square District in London Attacked by German Zeppelins ---Eighty-eight People Injured

NEARLY ALL CIVILIANS

Special to The Examiner

LONDON, Eng., Sept. 9.—Twenty persons were killed and eighty wounded in last night's Zeppelin raid in London.

All the killed and wounded were civilians except that one soldier was killed and three wounded.

The dead are: Twelve men, two women, six children. The injured number forty-eight men, twenty-seven women and thirteen children.

A DESTRUCTIVE RAID

NEW YORK CITY, Sept. 9.—The most destructive air raid in history was made on London last night. The extent of the property damage had not been permitted to pass censor at one o'clock New York time. It was known, however, that many fires were caused by the bombs. Private messages indicated that the raid was on the very heart of London.

A cable despatch to Chicago News to-day from a correspondent in London, bore evidence that the Trafalgar Square district was attacked. The cable says: "The Daily News staff and offices safe. All well."

The News London office is in the Trafalgar buildings at the corner of Northumberland avenue and Trafalgar Square.

If Zeppelins dropped bombs on Trafalgar Square, they were directly above one of the principal Canadian and American centres of London.

The Metropol hotel, the Grand hotel and the Victoria hotel, all popular with Americans are either on the square or only a block away. The Carlton hotel is also nearby, as are Morley's, and the Golden Cross hotel, all well known to Canadians.

The great Nelson column is in the centre of the Square and behind it is the National gallery, which houses London's art treasures.

Steamship and banking offices used as a Canadian rendezvous are on Cockspur street, leading into the Square. At the other end of Trafalgar Square is the Strand, the most famous street in the English speaking world.

The Trafalgar Square section is largely a business community, with scarcely any residences. A number of large hotels and clubs however, are located in this district.

Such important British public buildings as St. James' Palace, Westminster Abbey, Parliament Buildings and Charing Cross railway station are close to Trafalgar Square. It is supposed that the German airmen aimed their bombs for these structures.

To date in the present war German Zeppelins and Taubes have killed 140 civilians and injured 300 more in Britain and France.

AT THEIR OWN RISK

WASHINGTON, Sept. 9.—Americans are in London at their own risk. This was the view unofficially taken at the State Department to-day on the arrival of dispatches in Washington telling of the Zeppelin raid on the British capital in which, reading through the lines it appeared that a very fatal aerial bombardment was directed against the downtown hotel district, where visitors from this country are most numerous.

London, the officials said, is decidedly not a fortified city.

This was declared to mean that the attack was justified by International law and the foreigners there must take their own chances.

SYSTEMATIC SAVING.

The value and importance of small contributions systematically made is illustrated in the case of the "Ashburnham Cent-a-Day Club," which has since its organization collected by this means the relatively big total amount of $189.74 for Red Cross work. The importance of small contributions relates to small savings. Many an individual and many a family feel the pinch of shortage of money for present emergencies. They have wasted — because they have not saved — amounts that if now available, would serve much more urgent needs, than the frivolities and unnecessaries upon which money was foolishly spent. In these strenuous times, when every penny counts, when, through lack of employment, pennies are hard to gain, and of high prices when the purchasing value of pennies is reduced, there is need for saving money for absolute essentials. The pinch that comes from money shortage — the scanty table and the bare larder—is a high price to pay for the doubtful pleasure of spending here and there small sums, but in the aggregate, large sums, for things that can without any loss or suffering, be dispensed with. If all of us would have the courage and self-denial to "cut out" much and most of the petty expenditures we daily make upon comparative follies, we could do so, without sacrificing anything important, and with decided advantage, when the resulting savings are needed for legitimate and necessary purposes. Hard times, individually and generally, come from the careless and prodigal expenditure of small sums, that do not bring anything to compensate, for doubtful values in face of the needs that must be met. The practice of saving so as to have ready money, cheapens living and permits of the practice of buying food, etc., in quantity, and prevents the necessity of living from hand to mouth, and paying possibly double prices for the driblets we purchase. Not only among individuals, but with governments, civic and provincial and national, does the same practice of waste obtain with the result that we have individual "hard-upness" and higher taxes and less money to spend judiciously upon necessary private comforts and public conveniences.

THE PEOPLE ARE MASTERS.

The City Trust has done well to refurnish the Council Chamber and give the "hall of wisdom" an approximate degree of decency. However, the chairman of the Trust, Mr. W. H. Moore, in turning over its largesse to the city fathers, expressed heretical views as to the relations of the city corporation to the citizens, that really constitute such corporation. He suggested that it should be provided that nobody but that sacred body, the City Council, should have the use of the renovated chamber. Mr. Moore, as a long time director of the Cemetery Board, may have had his views influenced from association with a place, from which most persons wish to be excluded, as long as possible, but in making his suggestion, he and the unthinking aldermen who moved its adoption, lost sight of the public entirely. The City Council uses the Chamber only about a dozen times a year. They may use it oftener, for the practice of meeting one night to fruitlessly wrangle and adjourning to another evening to do business, naturally multiplies sessions. However, the Chamber is often needed for other purposes. The exclusion of all organizations but the Council shuts out meetings of the Board of Trade—and goodness knows, it does not make any extravagant demands upon the accommodation—meetings of Exhibition directors, of the Cemetery Board, of the Horticultural Society, such special meetings as that of the Speakers' Patriotic League, special meetings of committees to arrange civic demonstrations, and a score of other meetings, held in the public interests. The idea of making the Council Chamber exclusive, is contrary to the spirit of the democratic institutions we are spending millions of money and thousands of lives to preserve. Neither the City Trust nor the City Council owns the city buildings. They are the property of the people who, for the moment, with a judgment that cannot be unreservedly commended, have turned their custody over to a body of men called the City Council—turned them over to their servants for purposes of administration only, without impairment of the rights of the public to their use when not needed for the specific purpose of their erection. City Trust magnates, aldermen and members of the School Board are the servants of the public, and it does not become them to assume the role of masters, and to narrow or restrict the legitimate exercise of the rights of their masters. Even the Board of Education forgets its responsibilities. In taxing the Peterborough Choral Society $25 for the use of the Assembly Hall of the Collegiate Institute, the Board of Education, has, in principle resorted to a bit of petty extortion. The Choral Society is as essentially educative in its functions (and possibly more so in the highest results) as the Collegiate Institute itself. It is composed of citizens who pay through the nose their share of maintaining the Institute, and they have the right to the free use of a hall, that is only used once or twice a year for Institution purposes.

CRIME OF A WAR-TIME ELECTION.

Unless the correspondent of the Toronto Star is mistaken and wiring gossip instead of fact, his statement, tantamount to an announcement of a general election this autumn, is a disturbing one. A general election in war-time is unthinkable, unless Canada wishes to discredit herself or withdraw from her share in the fight. Sir Robert Borden, during his sojourn in the Old Country, assured the British people and authorities, that Canada was ready, and willing, and anxious, to devote all her resources in men and means, to the cause of the Empire, to hleping wage the war to a finish. All patriotic Canadians applaud such declarations, and are willing, and ready, and striving to give them practical effect. No doubt the British authorities believed them; they measured the Government and people of Canada, by the work of Canadian soldiers in the battle line; by their heroism, their willingness to sacrifice every consideration, even life itself, to the heroic discharge of duty.

Now is Sir Robert Borden prepared to say to the British people at home?—

"I was mistaken in declaring that the Government and people of Canada were prepared to make every sacrifice to help the Empire wage war in the interest of the Empire and humanity; in the interests af Canada. The Government and people of Canada, especially the Government, are not prepared to sacrifice party advantage; the Government thinks this is a good time for holding an election—for party advantage only—for a general election will practically destroy Canada's participation in the struggle for the time being; at a critical time. Therefore, the British people must make up their minds to Canada's marking time while we hold an election that is not necessary for another thirteen months."

Yet if Sir Robert Borden brings on a general election a year before the end of the present parliamentary term, he will be practically saying this, he will be bringing this about. We are doing generally well now, and we must listen to the echo of an election cry of 1911—"let well enough alone." The Government is supported in the House by a large majority; and virtually by the whole membership of Parliament. As far as the war goes, Parliament is unanimously behind the Government. Throughout all the country both parties are working as one to promote Canada's discharge of her duty. In the Speakers' Patriotic League in Peterborough, Grit and Tory are working shoulder to shoulder. The wives and mothers and sisters of Grits and Tories, are working spendidly together. All this will be at an end if we have interposed the bitterness and the comparative pettiness of a general election. We have recruiting slow enough now; it will come to nothing during the distracting period of an election—months perhaps—at a time when the strongest efforts of a united people are called for. We shall have this united people divided into warring camps; and it will be up-hill work to restore the universal unanimity of sentiment and cooperative action that now prevails.

For heaven's sake don't let us have an election while the war is on. It will be treason to Canada and to the cause of the Empire. It will be taking the life-boat on its way to the sinking ship, to go a-fishing with.

THEORY AND PRACTICE.

An engineer named Frank Koester has written a book, "Secrets of German Progress," which the publisher advertises as contrasting the American commonwealth with German democracy. It seems that Germany has an infinitely better government, better journalism and art and finance, better schools and industrial methods, better methods of housing and city planning, a superior navy, and that the German army is "the greatest organization which has ever been perfected by the brain of man." Mr. Koester was born, raised, and educated in Germany, but has lived the last twelve years in the United States, and he is not going back to Germany. Why? Doesn't he believe his own stuff?—Collier's Weekly.

JAPAN'S HELP.

The speculation as to the possibility of Japan's cooperating with the allies in the Dardanelles fighting seems to be without foundation. As a matter of fact, it is hardly likely that such assistance is needed. The inspiration of the allies in attempting to bring the Balkan states into the war against Turkey is not so much the need of more men as the advantage of the strategic positions occupied by these states.

Japan is already giving important assistance in the war against Germany, as Count Hayashi, Japanese Ambassador to Rome, asserts. The Japanese government is going to unusual lengths to supply the Russian armies with equipment. Japanese factories are working at top speed, and it is said that guns from Japanese forts in Manchuria have been dismantled and sent overland to the Russians.

No doubt Japan would be willing to give further assistance, but it is difficult at present to see just what form this could take.—Ottawa Free Press.

THE MENACE TO MISSIONARIES OF DISASTROUS FLOODS IN CHINA

Mr. H. A. Wallis has left with The Examiner a copy of the Killarney Guide (Manitoba), containing a reference to the recent great floods in China. It is written by Miss Florence Lanfrill, a missionary in South China:

Kong Moon, July 18th, 1915.

My Dear Mother,—Here it is Sunday again and it does not seem any time since last Sunday although terrible, terrible things have happened here. I expect that long before this reaches you, you will have read and heard of the appaling floods in China this year. We thought last year was bad and the Chinese said that it was the worst flood in the memory of the oldest Chinese, but it was nothing, absolutely nothing compared with this year's. Nothing has happened in China in the way of floods for five hundred years that can compare with this year's flood.

Canton, the capital of this province is only about seventy miles from here. Well Canton has been flooded and while the water was raising a fire broke out. It is estimated that in Canton alone one hundred thousand people have been burned and drowned. When the water began to flood the city the people thought that only about three or four feet of water would come in, and so they moved upstairs. But before long the water had reached upstairs and so they got up on the tops of their houses and still the water kept creeping up. The boat people charged enormous prices to take them away, and in many, many cases the people did not have the money and thousands were drowned. Then many, many people were in the area where the fire was raging and the water rising. The only means of escape from the fire was to jump into ten feet of water where they would be surely drowned, and the only escape from drowning was to stay in their houses which were burning and so they would be burned. It is too horrible to think of. Many have been saved but they are starving to death it is so hard to get anything to them yet. A great many who have been saved from drowning and burning will be starved to death. Almost all the rice crops in South China have been completely ruined. That in itself would mean famine, but what is worse all the rice shops in Canton have been completely ruined by flood and fire. Canton is the centre of everything in the South and the rice shops in Canton are generally well enough stocked to ward off famine in case of crop failure for one season. But now all the rice is gone. We are afraid that there is going to be a worse famine in South China than there has ever been before.

All the mission compounds but one in Canton have been flooded and the missionaries there have been in terrible straits. Both the houses I lived in while I was in Canton are flooded. All of the down stairs is full of water in both houses and the people have had to move upstairs. The last house I was in in the United Brethren Mission is an old one and it is in hourly danger of falling down.

Shin Hing, another city up the river, has been completely flooded. think of it, a whole city of hundreds of thousands of people completely under water. A few thousand people were able to escape to the city walls and so were saved. Among them were four Independent American Missionaries, but they have been a long time without food. Just back of the city of Shin Hing there is or rather was, a famous cave fourteen hundred people took refuge there when the flood broke in the city. The cave has always been a place of refuge in time of flood, and so, of course, the people thought they were safe there. It used to be the river bed, but some how the river got diverted from its course, well this year the river went back to its old course, and flooded, in fact completely washed the cave away, and the 1,400 people were all drowned.

Ng Chan had 73 feet of water last year. Well this year the water was ten feet higher, 83 feet; think of it. Almost the whole city was under water. The Christian Alliance Mission, Southern Baptist and Methodists are there. The Baptist Mission houses, and the Methodist Mission houses, are completely under water. Thousands and thousands of people have been drowned, it is too dreadful to think of.

We have had miraculous escapes and we are indeed grateful to God for having kept and protected us through this dreadful time. If Canton had not got the flood (they are above us), we most certainly would have; they saved us. Our mission houses might have stood but it would. Anyway we would have lost everything, and the city of Kong Moon two miles from here would have been wiped from existence. We think and talk of nothing else but the dreadful disaster that has fallen on South China, and as yet even we right here in the midst of it, do not realize what an awful thing it is. When the water goes down think of the sickness there will be with so many thousands of dead bodies being thrown up on the shore.

WEALTHY WIDOW RBIDE OF PALMIST

NEWPORT, R. I., Sept. 9.—Skill in palmistry and astrology won a bride for Walter Kelly Martin, known professionally as "Kenilworth, Palmist," and prominent as an entertainer in Newport homes. Mr. Kelly was married at noon in Berkeley Episcopal Chapel to Mrs. Edmund Sanford Clark, a wealthy widow with a home in Paris. The Rev. Latta Griswold performed the ceremony. Only a few friends were present.

Mr and Mrs. Martin have been stopping for some time at the La Forge cottage, and will leave soon for Paris, where Mr. Martin has a home at No. 84 Boulevard de Courcelles, and his wife a house in the suburbs called Villa des Ternes. Mrs. Martin is sixty-six years old and her husband forty.

Mrs. Martin, who was Miss Emma A. Harding of Medfield, Mass., has lived in Paris for many years. Mr. Martin is the son of the late William T. Martin, banker, of Columbia, S. C. He was a palmist in several entertainments given by the late Mrs. Stuyvesant Fish.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

SENORITA MOLINA

A Story of the Cuban Revolution

By ESTHER VANDEVEER

While the revolution that brought independence to Cuba was brewing the government of Spain through the governor of the island used every effort to secure the adhesion of prominent Cubans. Among those whom it was deemed desirable to win over was a lawyer named Enrique Fernandez, who was becoming prominent in his profession. One Jose Molina was summoned one day before Captain General Weyler and ordered either to win Fernandez by argument or bribery or force. Weyler at the time had unlimited power, and his orders were not to be disobeyed.

Molina was an elderly man and the father of a family of children, one of whom, Rosa, was grown. Fernandez was about thirty years old and unmarried. Molina invited Fernandez to his house that he might have an opportunity to persuade him to align himself on the side of the Spanish government. Fernandez accepted the invitation, listened to his host's arguments, but was unconvinced.

Molina noticed that Fernandez cast admiring eyes on Senorita Rosa, and it occurred to him that what he himself could not accomplish by argument his daughter might bring about by persuasion. The father therefore held a private interview with her, at which he said:

"My child, I have been ordered by the captain general to bring Senor Fernandez to the support of the Spanish cause either by argument or force. I have tried the former and failed. The latter course remains. I must tell my guest that the Spanish government demands his adhesion or his life. At times a woman may accomplish by persuasion what a man cannot effect by argument. If you could win over Senor Fernandez you might save his life."

"But, father," asked Rosa, "why are you obliged to do this work?"

"General Weyler is an autocrat in Cuba. He may send me to prison or to death, whichever he chooses."

The girl paled. She did not speak for some time. Then she said:

"Do you wish me to win Senor Fernandez's adhesion to the crown by first winning his love?"

"I do not. I would rather suffer than have you do anything dishonorable."

Again there was a silence, at the end of which Rosa threw her arms about her father's neck and assured him that she would do anything honorable to save him from the consequences of failure.

What made this duty odious to Rosa Molina was that she was heart and soul for the cause of Cuba. One morning she sat on the veranda of her home with Fernandez and began to reason with him why he should embrace the cause of Spain. He listened to her while she spoke hesitatingly and without animation, and when she came to a halt he said:

"Tell me the truth. Your heart is not with Spain; it is with Cuba. There is some reason why you are endeavoring to win me to a cause with which you do not sympathize yourself."

Rosa did not dare tell him what he wished to know. If she should do so he might betake himself beyond her father's reach, and the latter would have to suffer for his failure. She would not tell an untruth. Rising from her seat, she went into the house, leaving Fernandez wondering what all this meant.

Senorita Molina sought her father and told him that she had tried to influence Fernandez, but had failed because she was unfitted to plead a cause to which she was bitterly opposed. Molina sighed, but the sigh was his only reply. Rosa was much troubled. She asked him many questions. If he reported a failure to the governor would he be imprisoned? What would be her next move in respect to Fernandez? What did General Weyler mean by using force to secure the latter's adhesion? She received no reply. Whether her father was himself uncertain in regard to these matters she did not know. The only information she received was that either her father or Fernandez must suffer.

Rosa left her father to shut herself up in her room that she might form some plan of action. Would it not be best for her to tell Fernandez of the situation and trust to him to find some way to save her father? This would be trusting too much to a man whom she had known but a short while. If he should take himself off to the revolutionists Rosa would feel that she had betrayed her father.

Fernandez, who suspected the source of this pressure which had been brought to bear upon him, would have departed had he not been interested in these persons who he believed were made the unwilling tools of the Spanish government. More than this, he was powerfully drawn toward Rosa. It occurred to him to pretend to be uncertain as to which cause he would espouse in order that he might gain time for observation in the hope that he would be able to solve the mystery. So long as there was any hope of a willing surrender there was no reason to use force, and day after day passed with no change in the situation.

Meanwhile the attorney was falling in love with Rosa Molina. Nevertheless he could see no evidence that she regarded him in the same light. For some reason unknown to him she seemed to look upon him with a sort of dread. One day he said to her:

"Senorita, you and your father have some interest in wishing me to support the Spanish government. To convince you that you can safely confide in me I will tell you something which you do not suspect. I love you. Tell me the source of your efforts to convert me to a cause that you not approve. I swear to you not only on the honor of a gentleman, but as one who loves you, that I will not betray you; that if either you or your father or I must suffer it shall be I."

Rosa at this avowal gave a quick gasp, and an expression of pain crossed her face.

"You have only added to the complication that haunts us all," she said. "If I could assure you that your love was returned it might simplify matters, for we might then come to a mutual understanding. As it is, to tell you what threatens us would be to invite a sacrifice on your part without being able to reward you for making it. If you have seen anything in me to warrant your avowal you have been mistaken."

"I have seen nothing to warrant an avowal, and I am not surprised to receive an unfavorable response. I have made my confession that you may understand that you have nothing to fear from me—that my life is at your service."

Naturally these words had a powerful effect upon Rosa Molina. She fixed her gaze on the speaker with an expression that it was difficult for him to interpret. It seemed to be a mingling of awe and reverence. But there was no love in it. After thus looking intently at him for a few moments she said:

"Leave me to think over all this. So many strange things have followed upon one another so closely that I am bewildered."

Meanwhile Senor Molina was acting irrespective of anything that was taking place between these two. Weyler had become impatient and given him a definite and imperative order. One morning Molina summoned Fernandez into his private room and said to him:

"Senor, the government demands your influence and your efforts to assist in putting down this rebellion against the authority of the king of Spain."

"And what if I refuse?"

"You will pass into the hands of the governor general. I cannot answer for your life."

"You can answer for my death. Those who go into General Weyler's parlors never come out. You have my reply. Long live Cuba and Cuban independence!"

With this Fernandez turned to leave the apartment. Molina stopped him.

"You cannot leave this house."

"Why not?"

"It is surrounded by Spanish soldiers."

Fernandez paused. He had been hasty in giving a definite answer.

"Am I to be taken from here immediately?" he asked.

"Unless you recall your reply."

"Give me time."

"My instructions are to require an answer within twenty-four hours."

"Very well. Before tomorrow noon I will choose between life for Spain or death for Cuba."

* * * * * * * *

The Spanish fleet had been destroyed. Santiago had fallen. Cuban independence had been achieved. Sufficient time had elapsed for the Pearl of the Antilles to become the pearl of her own people. Enrique Fernandez was now a judge on the bench. Quite often it was his duty to pass upon a matter arising from the antagonism existing between Cuban liberators and Spanish adherents during the revolution. A man whose hair was prematurely white was brought before the judge on a charge of having legally executed a man by order of the king of Spain. The culprit was supported by his daughter, who was doing all in her power to encourage him.

"Jose Molina," said the judge, "do you remember me?"

"I do."

"When last we met you demanded my support of the Spanish cause or my life. I was given a day in which to arrive at a final decision. The decision was not given, for that night I escaped from your house. You were only partly to blame for these acts of tyranny, for you were the unwilling tool of the tyrant. You gave me my choice between Spain and death, and yet I am under a great obligation to you, not to you directly, but through a member of your family."

The prisoner stood waiting for the judge to explain.

"It is to your daughter that you owe the life that I am about to give you, for it was she who provided for me the means of escape from your home. What I owe to her I give to you. Go free. We have had enough of these reprisals since the revolution. I will hear no more of them."

Then, turning to Rosa Molina, the judge continued:

"Senorita, I once offered to give my life to solve a problem that distressed you. You repaid me by giving me a freedom which enabled me to fight for Cuba. If I had a hundred lives with which to repay this debt I would give them all to you."

As Senorita Molina led her father out of the courtroom she turned and looked at the judge. What was in that look he understood, for not long afterward when she and her father had returned to her home a wedding was celebrated there, Judge Fernandez being the groom and Senorita Molina the bride.

CRITICAL TIME OF WOMAN'S LIFE

From 40 to 50 Years of Age. How It May Be Passed in Safety.

Ste. Wellington, B.C.—"For a year during the Change of Life I was all run down. I was really too weak to walk and was very despondent and thought I was going to die, but after taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and Blood Purifier my health and strength returned. I am very thankful to you and praise your medicine. I have advised several women who suffered as I did to try your remedies. You may publish this if you wish."—Mrs. DAVID R. MORMAN, South Wellington, Vancouver Island, B. C.

No other medicine for woman's ills has received such wide-spread and unqualified endorsement. We know of no other medicine which has such a record of success as has Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. For more than 30 years it has been the standard remedy for woman's ills such as inflammation, ulceration, tumors, irregularities, periodic pains and nervous prostration, and we believe it is unequalled for women during the period of change of life.

If you have the slightest doubt that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound will help you, write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential) Lynn, Mass., for advice. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman, and held in strict confidence.

Report on the Crop Situation

TORONTO, Sept. 9—The following telegraphic advices, pointing out that cutting has been largely completed and that threshing has commenced in many districts in Western Canada, were received today by officials of the Canadian Northern Railway at the head offices of the company from the Departments of Agriculture of Alberta and Saskatchewan:

Edmonton Southern district—Harvest in full swing, with ideal weather; 65 per cent. cut, balance advanced beyond harm from frost; threshing started in several localities, reporting extra good yield with No. 1 sample. Central district—Weather conditions very favourable, with local showers; no frost; fully 65 per cent. harvested, and threshing commenced in several localities. Northern district—Fully 75 per cent harvested; no frost; threshing will start this week; big yield, and No. 1 sample guaranteed.

Regina, Sask.—Eighty-five per cent. of the wheat crop, 70 per cent. of the oat crop, and 80 per cent. of the barley crop is now cut, 77 per cent. of the flax crop remains to be cut. It is now safe to state that the great bulk of the crop is harvested in first-class condition; in some few instances small areas of later-sown grain may have been touched by light frost which occurred on the 23rd, 24th and 25th of August. Threshing will be general during the week ending September 18.

You will like the rich strength and full flavor.

Regular Monthly Poultry Meeting

Mr. A. Brault Gave a Paper on "Personal Experience"—The Exhibits

Regular monthly meeting of the Peterborough Poultry Association was held last night with a good attendance. There were more ladies than usual. Mr. A. Brault gave a good paper on personal experience gained in years of raising pure-bred stock, which brought out splendid discussion of value to those present regarding birds bred to lay vs. pure-bred. There were three varieties of young stock on exhibition, which were splendid specimens of the respective breeds. In Partridge Rocks Mr. R. Gardner got the 1st on cockerel and 1st on pullet; R. D. Robson got the 2nd on cockerel and 2nd, 3rd and 4th on pullet.

Barred Rocks, Mr. Thos. Glover was awarded 1st cockerel and 1st and 2nd pullet.

White Wyandotte, Master Alex Elliott got 1st cockerel and Mr. Harrington 1st and 2nd pullet.

The sweepstakes was awarded Mr. Harrington for best bird on exhibition, White Wyandotte pullet which would be hard to beat in any company. The president, Mr. Kelly, judged the birds most satisfactory to all.

Mr. Everson will give a paper at next meeting.

WILL OF THE LATE ANDREW MERCER

Andrew Mercer, former president of the Semi-Ready Company, who died on 26th July, left an estate valued at $1,350, consisting of $100 household goods, etc; $361 book debts and promissory notes; cash, $146; life insurance, $742. In addition there are three life insurance policies, aggregating $5,891. By his will made on 15th April, 1904, deceased's widow, Mary Brodie, inherits everything.

SERGT.-MAJOR MILLER WELL KNOWN SOLDIER

Native Son Who Has deen Appointed Acting Sergeant-Major of the Local Detachment of the 80th Battalion Has a Long Record.

SERVED IN SOUTH AFRICA

Probably no soldier in the Peterborough district is better or more favourably known that Acting Company Sergeant Major Thos. Miller of the 80th Battalion, whose appointment was announced yesterday. Sergeant Major Miller was born in Peterborough in 1875 and is known throughout the whole district. His military service has been a long and creditable one, including as it does terms in the Canadian Militia, Canadian Permanent Force and the Imperial Army, while his service included the South African war, for which he holds the Queen's Medal with six bars and the King's Medal with two bars.

Sergt.-Major Miller's first service was in the 57th Regiment, commencing as a bugler. Afterwards he became colour sergeant in one of the companies and for some time was a member of the 57th Band. He served three years in the Royal Canadian Regiment of the Canadian Permanent Force, and when the South African war commenced crossed over to England and enlisted with the 1st Battalion Scots Guards, with which famous regiment he served throughout the war, being promoted to the ranks of sergeant. The clasps on his Queens Medal contains the names Belmont, Modder River, Driefountain, Johannesburg, Diamond Hill and Belfast.

On his discharge from the service Sergt.-Major Miller returned to his home in Peterborough. For some time he was a member of the local police force and for the past few years has been chief at Millbrook. He is a son of Mr. Finch Miller, the City Relief Officer.

His appointment is a popular one with the men and generally in the city and should be the means of bringing many recruits to the 80th Battalion.

MRS. RUSSELL SAGE IS EIGHTY-SEVEN

NEW YORK, Sept. 9.—Mrs. Russell Sage, whose philanthropies have extended their influence around the world, was yesterday eighty-seven years old, and she observed the occasion, as she usually does, in a quiet way at her summer home, in Lawrence, L.I., where she has been for many months.

Mrs. Sage was born in Syracuse, N. Y., and is the daughter of Joseph and Margaret Pierson Sloecum. She was christened Margaret Olivia. She was graduated from the Troy Female Seminary in 1847 and was married to Mr. Sage in November, 1869.

All her life she has given great financial aid to various church, charitable and philanthropic organizations throughout the country. She is a great lover of birds, and one of her recent benefactions was the purchase of Marsh Island, in the Gulf of Mexico, as a home for wild birds.

She is president of the Emma Willard Association and in 1907 gave $1,000,000 to the Emma Millard Seminary, in Troy. She gave $10,000,000 to be known as the Sage Foundation, to be used for social betterment.

AMERICAN WAS LOST

LONDON, Sept. 9.— The American Consul at Queenstown has received information that a man named Wolff, aged twenty-one and born in New Jersey, was lost in the sinking of the Hesperian.

CHARING CROSS NOW GATEWAY OF WOUNDED MEN

LONDON, Sept. 1.—Charing Cross, London's greatest railway terminus, often called in novels "The Gateway of the World," is to-day, principally, a "gateway of the wounded."

Always in peace times the scene of gay farewells of tourists, including practically all Americans who proceeded to other points in Europe, it is now almost the exclusive clearing house for England's wounded. Tens of thousands of British soldiers, battered and torn, have arrived from the continental battlefields since the war began, always at Charing Cross.

London's principal railway termini to-day all have their meaning.

A British soldier leaves for the front from Waterloo. Here he says goodbye to relatives and friends as they shed a silent tear that means they may never see him again.

He goes to France or Flanders and fights. If he isn't killed he comes back some day. If he's wounded he arrives home via Charing Cross. If he's on leave he arrives home via Victoria.

There always are crowds at these three London railway terminals. The spirit of the crowds at Waterloo and Victoria are, however, in sharp contrast to the ones at Charing Cross. It is Charing Cross that reminds London that war is not all flags and cheering. At every turn of the clock a silent party of "mourners" gathers outside the big iron gates that lead to the trains. A silent Red Cross train glides in. Before it arrives a long grey line of Red Cross ambulances has been waiting to carry away the freight of human misery.

The station platform inside is lined with nurses, orderlies, and stretcher bearers. The crowd isn't allowed inside. It waits just beyond the big iron gates. The gates finally are opened. One at a time the gray ambulances pass through, en route to hospitals. Men raise their hats as the wounded pass; sometimes women silently weep. Occasionally there is a hushed cheer as some less seriously wounded "Tommy" sits up in his ambulance bed to wave a faint hello.

When the last ambulance has passed and the big gates have clanged the crowd disperses, but not for long. The place of the former crowd, the former Red Cross train, the former ambulance procession and the former quiet work of handling the wounded is taken by another—but the scene is always the same.

It has been almost a year—the war began [illegible]. It will be on until it ends. [illegible] railway stations of London [illegible] sweet happiness.

UNAPPRECIATIVE.

A well-known merchant on George street, who is not a very early riser but loves a good joke, was asked this morning:

"Don't you like to hear the leaves whisper?"

"Huh! about as much as I like to hear the grass mow!" was the response.

BUSHELS OF LOVE LETTERS WRITTEN BY BRITISH SOLDIERS

PARIS, Sept. 1.—He came to my hotel to visit one of the odd parties one sometimes sees hanging about the fringe of war. Three youngsters in khaki uniforms with red crosses on their arms, and equipped with a little tin car in which they rode and rode. At times three lanky girls in khaki joined them. They were of the flapper age and yet not in the least flapperish. One saw not the slightest evidence of usefulness in the party, and yet they were intensely active and intensely serious.

The caller was an English subaltern on leave from the front. A most estimable young man. Immediately one discovered that he had thought deeply on many subjects. He had been tanned and scarred and thickened by the life in the trenches, but in his essentials he remained unchanged. A most estimable young man. One gathered that with him life is very serious. He had every good quality that man could have except, perhaps, a little touch of humour. Appallingly conscientious. He deprecated a certain laxity of talk common to the men at the front.

Their One Fault.

"It is their one fault," he said, looking seriously at us with his mild and thoughtful eyes. A slight frown gathered on his forehead. "Otherwise their conduct at the front is quite irreproachable."

We found no difficulty in believing that. Temptation is entirely absent from the trenches—at least, temptation of a carnal, and not of a military, sort. He spoke of his work—and most interestingly. This young man is a good officer. A courageous, kindly, conscientious soul; always shepherding his men. Except that he lacks humour. We gathered that at times the tendency of Tommy Atkins to be vulgarly funny in the face of death revolted him. He did not even hate the Germans. He said they have souls.

"I am greatly distressed," said he, "because of an incident of a fortnight ago."

He is the censor of his company. We learned that when his men are at the back of the front, to use the Atkinsism, they are not intensive correspondents. Their minds run then rather upon such purely mundane affairs as beer and baths and fags and long, recuperative, silent loafs upon some sun-warmed bit of turf. But between times in the trenches they are never-ending, indefatigable, mastodonic letter writers. During the fighting their minds are quite fully occupied, of course. But when they have nothing to do but sit in the bottom of the trench—they fairly wither for occupation. Then they write letters home. The young subaltern must read these letters, to guard against the unintentional betrayal of a military secret.

"The young unmarried men," he said, "write love letters. Some of them go to a regrettable excess."

And Their Love Letters.

In other words, they blandhandered. Many of these unmarried writers of love letters wrote to several girls. The conscientious young officer had to head these letters. Night after night, as he sat in an earth-smelling bomb proof or in some cottage that had been riddled by shells and would be again, his carefully hidden candle light revealed to him that many of his men scattered too much in the bestowal of their affections. They, too, often lacked the priceless quality of originality in their letter writing also. Having hit upon a pungent formula for the expression of affection, they had no shame in using it to each of their lady-loves.

"I could not speak to them of these things, of course," said he. "It is a great relief to me when we retire from the trenches, because then the letters are censored at the base."

In his company there was one particularly tireless lovemaker. A big, husky, lively boy. He was the particular favourite of the company. He bubbled with jokes. They were not refined jokes, but they were apt to seep along the line until even the officers heard them. All of the other officers turned their faces and grinned. He was excellent in fighting, this chap, but as a letter writer he was frightfully deficient. His amatory epithets were "sweetheart," "little tender," "bright eyes," and "Muggins." These he repeated faithfully through line after line. He brought them up in review, by column of fours, one might say. He was scrupulously fair.

"One night," said the subaltern, "he brought three letters to me to be censored. They were written to Sue and Bessie and Maybelle in the same little Hampshire village. I found nothing of a military nature in them to object to. The three letters were precisely alike except for the name of the maiden object of his affections. He had evolved what appeared to him an excellent love letter, and, instead of varying the form, he had merely copied it. I do not wish to be severe in my comments upon these letters. But I am well within the truth when I describe them as fulsome."

But the Envelopes.

The tragedy came when the overworked little subaltern had finished reading them. He was very tired that day. Twenty hours on end he had worked, and the day before another 20 hours, and the day before that 20 hours again. He had nodded over that dreary procession of "sweetheart" and "little tender" and "Muggins." At last he put them back in their envelopes and stamped them as being duly censored and sent them on their saccharine way.

"I assure you," said he earnestly, "that my mistake was an innocent one. Not for anything would I have put those letters into the wrong envelopes. I was very sleepy——"

So that in this little Hampshire village—a village you could almost cover with your hat—three girls got letters from the same man, and each letter was as like the other as are young sparrows in the nest. The unfortunate letter writer in time received a letter signed by the three jointly, and this he brought to the erring subaltern in a disciplined and respectful passion.

"I been done down, that's all," said he, mournfully. "Hall that I hasks now is a chance to throw my life away against them bleedin' Germans. You don't understand, sir, but I loved those 'ere young women."

The subaltern reasoned with him, he said, and apologized, and explained how the mistake must have happened. But it did no good. The amatory Atkins persisted in his despairing purpose. He said it wouldn't be no bleeding good to try to explain by post to the enraged damsels. They would just throw his letter away. So the subaltern went to the captain, and, although that officer displayed a most regrettable levity, he secured for Mr. Atkins a four days' home leave, that he might make his triple peace in person. We assured the subaltern that he had acted with absolute uprightness.

"I have tried to do my duty," he sighed, "but the men laugh so when they see me. All along the line. It is most depressing."

GAINS BY THE ALLIES.

Germans Have Lost 1,027,740 Square Miles of Territory.

Statisticians who have been watching the progress of the European war have completed a compilation of figures indicating the land area losses suffered by Germany since the conflict began. These figures show that the allies already have taken 1,027,740 square miles of Emperor William's colonial possessions, which include former holdings in Asia, Africa and the Pacific.

An idea of the immensity of this may be gleaned from the fact that the area taken is nearly one-third as large as the United States, or as big as the combined states of Nevada, Utah, Wyoming, South Dakota, Nebraska, Kansas, Oklahoma, Iowa, Mississippi, Arkansas, Wisconsin, Illinois, Indiana, Ohio, West Virginia, Kentucky and Tennessee.

Some idea of the financial strain on the nations may be gathered from the fact that Botha's short campaign against the Germans in southwest Africa cost Britain $67,000,000.

Better Foods for Less Money

If you use both lard and butter in your cooking—lard for ordinary occasions, and butter for the things you want especially rich and appetizing—you will find Crisco a welcome economy.

CRISCO
For Frying For Shortening For Cake Making

Cake or pastry made with the best creamery butter is not a whit more delicious than when made with Crisco. Yet Crisco costs but half as much as butter.

And foods made with lard seldom attain anything like the flavor of those made with Crisco—not to mention the superior digestibility of the latter. Yet Crisco costs less even than the best grades of lard.

It pays to use Crisco—pays in dollars and cents as well as in food that tastes better and digests easier.

Automobilists Should Lessen Speed When Approaching Gates

Speaking of the numerous wrecks of the railway gates on Charlotte Street, Mr Charlie Noyes, the veteran gateman, asserts that the majority of drivers have not yet grasped the city idea with regard to approaching these protective barriers. Only a short time ago on a visit to United States cities he was impressed with the fact that auto drivers invariably slow down when drawing near to railway and similar gates. In fact signs appear on the roadway warning the automobilists to lessen their speed. In short, these drivers approach the gates, not with the idea that they may cross tracks in a couple of jumps, but, through years of teaching they know that they must and they should drop to a slower speed. Of course there are some exceptions, but in Peterborough every autoist seems to be in the same boat.

As Mr. Noyes pointed out the local people have not yet acquired the mental attitude of city drivers. Here, they breeze along the streets and approach railway crossings with the idea that nothing shall hold them up. Whether the gates are down or not, careful drivers should put on their brakes when coming up to the crossing.

Mr Noyes might have added that Peterborough cars spin past street corners as if the intersecting street with its cars and pedestrians were not there at all. In short, the traffic by-law has not been stamped upon auto drivers. Their conduct reminds one of Lindsay conditions, where the natives all know each other, are intimately acquainted with the policeman, and if there is a traffic by-law, everyone interprets for himself. After all, traffic regulation is a criterion of cityhood, vide London and its methods.

Mr. Noyes, the soul of equanimity and good nature, recalls, with a laugh, some of the expressions he has heard from autoists. Some of the drivers become very peeved when they see the gates going down, or drive up when they are down. It is an occasion for snappy remarks from those whose natures are strongly tart. Others will jocularly "Hey, there, the train is only leaving Lindsay; it won't be here for a week." "I guess we gotta wait till she comes up from Millbrook" and so on. The wits take a delay good naturedly, although there may be a sting in some of the expressions.

One day a car was stopped by the west gate. It was the noon hour, and some train nearby was just about to start. This fact may not have been apparent to the autoist. About a minute had passed and Mr. Noyes turned to go into his cabin for some article when he suddenly recollected. "Good night," exclaimed the auto driver to a companion, "the old man's gone to dinner."

LEW FIELDS IN "OLD DUTCH"

Catchy Attraction at the Empire Theatre

In "Old Dutch," to be presented in 5 parts by the World Film Corporation, for balance of this week at the Empire Theatre, we pass, for the time being, to a lighter kind of offering with Lew Fields in a congenial role in perhaps his best known play.

Inventors belong to the genus irritable, and Ludwig Streusand was of that class. He had an idea, had an idea for years, until he forced and moulded it into something tangible. This was the teloptophone, a device by which, when you are telephoning to anybody you could also see them. The perfecting of the teloptophone, its patenting and protection, its financing by Mr Rockmorgen, made "Old Dutch" rich and placed him in a position to provide for his daughter, Violet. Resting awhile from his labours he and his daughter goes for a while to Palm Beach, under assumed names, to escape publicity. Now, Old Dutch's troubles break out with great severity. He loses his money, two crafty strangers impersonate him and his daughter, he cannot pay his hotel bill, so he and the girl are degraded to the level of kitchen help in order that they may earn their board bills.

Bings and Bings do all this. They are vaudevillians out of a job the rest is apparent Bings and Bings have the time of their lives until after many unpleasant experiences, borne with fortitude, "Old Dutch" is able to prove his identity by the aid of his partner, Mr. Rockmorgen, then Bings and Bings gracefully retire and "Old Dutch" and Violet come into their own again. Harry Rockmorgan marries Violet and we are left with the agreeable feeling that in his old age the inventor is provided for.

Altogether "Old Dutch" is an agreeable offering, witty, tender, human. As a World Film offering, "Old Dutch" will rank high — tears and laughter alternate as you look at it. "Old Dutch" is a very pretty story, prettily told and played by a fine cast, which includes Vivian Martin, the brightest little star in the World Film firmament.

See also the Keystone comedy, "Dough and Dynamite" the best comedy ever shown in the city. Balance of this week, afternoon and evening.

Alderman Green and Gilmour Street Girls

To the Editor of The Examiner

Dear Sir, I have just had shown to me (I was out of town for the week) ends a letter in the Examiner, signed by "Gilmour Street Old Girl," who gives at the end of her letter, which seemed to be more spiteful than was nestled a sly dig at Alderman Green, Chairman of the Board of Works, and, I might say, one of the best who ever held that office. Who ever knew of another alderman in that position oiling or watering St. Joseph street (and also fixing it nicely), or Babb's Lane or St Thomas street before this year, and when did Gilmour street enjoy the beautiful shade of such a dustless street as we have had this summer?

"Gilmour Street Old Girl" was right in complaining of the dust on this street lately, which was caused by the extra travel on account of Charlotte street being torn up. It does not seem fair to censure the street officials for what is an exceptional matter. I am sure it could not have been prevented or it would have been. There may have been, for a short time, a little dust on Gilmour street, but there are no flies on Alderman Green. Alderman Green, from what I have seen and heard of him, is a good man, a good citizen, and a good alderman, and if good qualities are to be rewarded we may expect after the next general election, to see him oiling the road to Ottawa.

"Gilmour Street Young Girl."

P.S. The only fault I have to find with Alderman Green is, that he isn't a bachelor.

As "Peg" in "Peg O'My Heart"

In "Peg O' My Heart," Mr Manners has employed with success a formula that will never fail to appeal to the American public. The entrancing story of the transplanting of the little Irish waif into the bosom of a cold, snobby English family with its contrasts of sham and sincerity, is quite well known to playgoers. As the play's engagement here last season was one of banner attractions, the management of "The Grand" anticipates another record engagement. The seat sale opens to-morrow morning.

As Reported on by the Census and Statistics Office of the Department of Agriculture

ONTARIO CROPS

OTTAWA, Sept. 2, 1915.— A special report issued to-day by the Census and Statistics Office, gives the following report on the conditions of field crops throughout Canada, at the end of August, as summarized from telegrams received from the Dominion Experimental Farms and Stations under arrangements made between the Departments of Trade and Commerce and Agriculture:

Nova Scotia, Kentville: Grain, corn and roots are exceptionally good, but grain in many places is badly laid by wind and rain on the 17th. Haying has been late and the quality is below average. Potatoes have blighted in many sections. River John: Owing to much broken weather a quantity of hay is not yet housed. Grain is ripening slowly and is not a very good colour. Turnips and potatoes are doing well. Antigonish: A fair bulk of a bumper crop of hay has been saved. The grain crop is excellent but much is badly laid by heavy rains of 29th and 31st. Potatoes are uneven and some blight is showing. Amherst, August proved very unseasonable. A heavy storm has broken grain grown badly; the precipitation being 3 inches within 24 hours. Haying is very backward; much yet to be cured. Root crops are doing nicely, and barley is just ripening.

New Brunswick, Fredericton: Twelve rain storms, making the total precipitation 4.11 inches, with 18 cloudy days made a poor harvest month. Grain is filling well; only a little has been cut; frost on the 28th damaged some sections. Potatoes are good, where sprayed late. Blight is prevalent. The root crop is an extra one. Much hay is yet uncut. Anagance: The harvest has commenced early; the grain has filled well; all root crops are good. Heavy frost on the 27th did considerable damage on low lands.

Quebec, Lennoxville: Precipitation amounting to 3.47 inches throughout the month retarded haying and interfered with grain harvest, which is very good. Root crop favourable, also after grass, especially young clover. Two degrees of frost on August 27th did very little damage. Knowlton: Early planted potatoes are good; late ones struck with rust. Root crops extra good; grain good, but late oats rusted. Frost August 16th and 20th hurt corn on low lands but the corn will be about an average crop. Cap Rouge: Beneficial rains fell from the 14th to the end of the month, but pastures have not yet recovered from drought. Grain will yield more than average crop. Corn for silage will also be better than usual, swedes are a normal crop but all other roots have failed.

Ontario: From Essex County excessive rainfall from the 1st to the 15th. Grain, though much damaged by rain, will give an average yield. Corn and hoed crops are later than usual, but give promise of splendid crops. Peaches, plums, apples and vegetables are splendid. In Waterloo County, the grain is practically all harvested; wheat is badly sprouted and barley is discoloured. Potatoes and turnips are spoiled by wet weather. Second crops of clover and alfalfa look fine. Ontario county: All grain crops flattened by heavy rain storms on August the 4th. The harvest will be over in a few days, if weather is fine the damage will not be serious; corn and roots are good; potatoes are rotting; apples are a poor crop. In Eastern Ontario the rainfall during August was the heaviest for 23 years, amounting to over 7 inches. The grain is practically all cut, but is not yet all in. Having been too much exposed to rain it is badly coloured, especially oats. The aftermath of hay is good, and pastures are in excellent condition.

Manitoba, Brandon: Although crops were late at the beginning of August they were ripened quickly by hot dry weather and cutting commenced at average time and was completed without delay. Threshing is in full swing at the end of the month, yield and quality are both good. Severe frost on August 23 and 25 were too late to injure grain, but killed corn and tender garden crops.

Saskatchewan, Indian Head: Weather during the month has been favourable for the crops, 80 p.c. of which are now in stook. Threshing has commenced at several points. Corn and roots are excellent. Lloydminster: No damage by frost, grain somewhat tangled owing to winds, but of fine quality, harvesting general, potatoes and roots fine. Kindersley: Grain ripened rapidly, and harvesting is well advanced, a little threshing has been done and wheat should yield 25 to 40 bushels and oats 75 to 100 bushels per acre. Flax is a good average crop. Ideal weather prevails. Rosthern: Conditions very dry, one degree of frost on the 25th injured potatoes, corn and tender vegetables in some parts, but no grain was injured. Harvesting nearly completed, operations slightly delayed through shortage of twine. Scott: Station: Weather ideal for harvesting. Frost on the 23rd left cereal crop uninjured. Cutting is well advanced, binder twine has been expected to overcome shortage and farmers are well supplied with help. Station plots of wheat threshed 37 to 54 bushels per acre.

Alberta, Lacombe: Weather ideal, harvest 90 p.c. ripe, 65 p.c. cut and stacked. Samples better grade than usual. Quality of oats and barley good, yield heavy. Edmonton: August fine and warm with more electric storms than usual. A hailstorm on August 3 did considerable damage in some districts. Grain is all ripe; cutting general on August 18 and now well advanced, with continued favourable weather bumper crops of grain and hoed crops are assured. Lethbridge: Weather of August favourable for ripening; grain cutting well advanced; over 50 p.c. of wheat cut in Southern Alberta; many districts 75 to 100 p.c. cut. Threshing begun in some localities. The average yield of spring wheat in Southern Alberta will probably be 25 bushels per acre. In Southern Alberta the crops is from one half to two thirds cut, no frost yet, threshing has started in a few districts. Rust has done considerable damage to late wheat, in some cases 25 p.c., estimated yields of wheat 25 to 28, oats 65, barley 40 bushels per acre. Corn has made exceptionally good growth, potatoes will yield high, roots are very late. South-western Saskatchewan from Maple Creek to Herbert about 60 per cent. cut.

British Columbia, Agassiz: The hottest and driest month experienced for years. All grains and second crop of clover have been harvested, giving excellent yields. Much threshing has been done. Corn and mangolds are making good growth; turnips and pasture are suffering. Kamloops: A month of splendid harvest weather. On unirrigated lands good average crops; on irrigated lands bumper crops of cereals, hay and fruit. Range and dairy cattle in fine shape. Illustration Farm commenced threshing August 20, yield and quality very satisfactory. Invermere: The weather conditions have been favourable for the harvesting of grain and second cuts of clover and alfalfa. There has as yet been no frost. Fodder corn much improved. Swede turnips are good, potatoes sound and producing heavy yield. Sidney, Vancouver Island: August very dry, all grain crops harvested in good condition, 50 p.c. of threshing done, yield good, grain of good sample, corn and roots good, pasture dry, fruit and vegetables in good condition with heavy yield.

STRIKING MONUMENT

Erected to the Memory of the Late Rev. Father O'Farrell of Frankfort

The Coughlin Monumental Works of this city have just completed the manufacture of a very imposing monument, which has been erected in the cemetery at Frankfort, on the line of the T.V.C., in memory of the late Reverend Father O'Farrell. The design is a reproduction of the Celtic cross monuments in Ireland, and was copied from some of the ancient Celtic cross tablets erected over a hundred years ago. It was cut from Barrie American grey granite, and presents a very striking appearance. It stands ten feet high. The three arms of the cross are decorated with Keltic decorative interlacing, which gives an exquisite embellishment. The monument was erected as a memorial by the united congregations of Sterling and Frankfort to the memory of their late esteemed pastor.

The Coughlin Monumental Works secured the order for this monument because of their reputation for being able to manufacture this class of work, their plant in Peterborough being fully equipped for the execution of such contracts.

BAD COLD IN THE CHEST.

"I am happy to tell you that I used Dr Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine and was promptly cured of a very bad cold in the chest," writes Miss Josephine Gauthier, Dover South, Ont. You can depend on Dr Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine to relieve and cure all inflammations and irritations of the throat and bronchial tubes.

CLAUSES OF CITY BY-LAW REGULATING CARE OF TREES

Trees Are Under Supervision of City Engineer — Certain Varieties Must Not Be Planted—Horses Must Not Be Hitched to Trees —Penalty Up to $50 Fine.

CONDITION RE TRIMMING

The City Council on Tuesday night passed a by-law regulating the conditions for the removal, trimming, and general care of trees in the city's streets and public places. Citizens should familiarize themselves with the clauses, a synopsis of which follows.

Whereas it is necessary from time to time to remove trees, shrubs, and saplings in the city of Peterborough for the purpose of public improvement, and no provision exists for the removal, protection, or planting of the same.

The first clause covers the plan in the word tree, which includes all trees, shrubs and saplings now or hereafter planted upon or in any street in the city.

All trees planted in the city shall be under the care and supervision of the City Engineer, who is hereby authorized to carry out and enforce the provisions of this by-law.

No person shall plant any tree, nor shall any person remove, cut down or injure any tree that may have been heretofore, or shall be hereafter, planted in any of the streets of the city without first obtaining permission from the Council.

The fourth clause determines the distance between trees to be planted, at not less than twenty-five feet; and at such distance from the line of street or in such places thereon as may be determined by the City Engineer. The city reserves the right to remove or cut down any tree or trees when considered necessary by the Council.

These Trees Excluded.

Trees known as silver poplar, balm of Gilead, or cotton willow, catalpa, and mountain ash shall not be planted in any street or public place in the city.

The sixth clause pertains to street and sidewalk paving, contractors avoiding injury to trees, if it is impossible to perform the work without injuring any tree it shall be the contractor's duty to apply to the said Council for instructions in the matter.

The Trimming of Trees.

The trimming of trees is dealt with in Clause 7. Trees interfering with the light of street lamps, trees dead, or partly dead, and such as are leaning over the streets, or are in any way objectionable, shall be trimmed or removed only on the sanction of the City Engineer. Where it is deemed necessary to remove any tree in any lane, street or other public place under the Council's control, the owner of adjacent lands is entitled to be notified of the Council's intention to remove such tree, which shall be indicated by resolution, and notice thereof delivered to the said owner; and no person shall remove or injure such tree without the express permission of the Council.

Must Not Tie Horses.

No person shall fasten a horse or other animal to any tree, or to any case or box around a tree, or to any post or chain enclosing any of the bulevards on the streets.

The penalty for a conviction of a breach of any of these provisions is a fine not more than fifty dollars; in default of payment or distress the penalty shall be a term in the county jail, with or without hard labour, not exceeding six calendar months.

Saved the Manitoba Maple.

The Manitoba Maple was included in the trees under the by-law's ban, but Ald. Saunders put in a plea for its retention. Ald. Duffus seconded his motion, which was carried.

LAYING THE CONCRETE BASE

Another unit of the plant of the Warren Paving Company has arrived in the city, and is now established on the siding adjacent to the C.P.R. freight sheds. As soon as sufficient of the concrete base is laid, the company will start the asphalt plant going and put on the wearing surface. In the meantime streets that have received the initial treatment will be thrown open for traffic until such time as the asphalt is laid. McDonnel street from George to Aylmer street, is one of the thoroughfares on which the concrete base has been laid. This particular piece of work was undertaken by the Standard Paving Company. Owing to the roadway being much lower than the sidewalk it was necessary to construct some unusually high entrances to the different properties. This has been done to the satisfaction of the property owners.

Y. W. C. A. NOTES

The fall work at the Association building is beginning to take shape, and there seems to be a bright outlook for many activities during the fall and winter. Full announcement to be made shortly.

Classes in 'First Aid' will begin on Monday, the 13th at 8.30, with Dr Cameron as lecturer.

Miss Carrie Littlefield of Toronto, will have charge of the physical work of the Association. Miss Littlefield comes well recommended, having taught swimming and physical work at the Eaton Athletic Association in Toronto, and is at present teaching swimming in Ottawa. It is hoped all girls in Peterborough will take advantage of the classes to be opened by vantage of the classes to be offered by winter.

TORONTO MARKETS LIVE STOCK

Examiner Special:

TORONTO, September 9—Live stock receipts were fair, market dull. Extra choice steers $7.75 to $8; good butcher steers $7.35 to $7.65, good heifers $7 to $7.25, choice butcher bulls, $6.25 to $6.75, choice veal calves, $9 to $10.50; spring lambs, $8 to $8.25.

Hebrews Celebrate The New Year

Last evening at sundown the Hebrew people of Peterborough began the two days' celebration of Roshna-shona, Jewish New Year. Until the evening of Friday night the celebration will be continued. This is the year 5676 in the Jewish calendar.

During the two days no servile work will be done. The followers of the prophets of Israel will offer up prayers and devotions in thankfulness of the goodness of the Almighty during the year has has gone. Intercessions for the good graces of God during the year to come will be made.

Ten days after Roshna-shona, the feast of Yom Kippur will be observed. This year is one of the exceptions of the Jewish calendar, for Yom Kippur falls on the Sabbath. A very strict fast is observed during this day, not even a drink of water being taken by all good Jews.

Commencing September 25, the Feast of Tabernacles will be observed. This will last for eight days. It commemorates the wandering of the Jews in the desert.

On October 1st the Feast of simchas Torah, the day on which the ten commandments were given to Moses, will be observed.

BOYS' CAMP REGATTA SATURDAY AFTERNOON

A regatta will be held on the Otonabee River on Saturday afternoon, commencing at 2 o'clock and under the auspices of the Boys' Camps which extend along the river from the foot of Park street, south west. The course will be in that vicinity and will be located in the completer details to be announced to-morrow. The boys have a complete programme and they believe there will be a large entry and a widespread interest in the events. Among those who have charge of the regatta are Ernie Parker, Frank Allen, Max Patterson and Victor Dallin.

Allies Make Progress

LONDON, Sept. 9.—There was heavy fighting throughout Tuesday on the Gallipoli Peninsula, in which the fleet of the allies joined, according to the Daily Telegraph's Hitylene correspondent. The correspondent adds that progress was made by the allies on the Suvla Bay front.

The Turkish War Office has issued the following official communication:

"During the night of the 6th, reconnitring forces were sent in the direction of Messtan Tepeh and Anzac. They penetrated enemy trenches, capturing two guns. Near Seddul Bahr enemy torpedo boats bombarded our positions on the right and left wings, but without causing any important damage. Enemy batteries which bombarded our positions on the left wing on the 7th were silenced by our batteries in the Straits."

A WARNING TO FARMERS

Thousands of farmers have lost thousands of dollars this year through smut in wheat, oats and barley.

This loss can be prevented in one way only, and that is by treating the seed. Be sure, therefore, that your fall wheat is properly treated before being put into the ground this fall.

There are two methods of treating the seed, as follows.

1. Mix one-half pint of formalin in 21 gallons of water. Place the seed to be treated in a coarse sack; a bran sack is excellent for the purpose. Fill the sack about three parts full and immerse in the formalin solution for twenty minutes. During the treatment raise the sack up and down several times in the solution to insure wetting every grain that it contains.

After treating, spread the grain out thinly on a clean floor or canvas where it can be stirred and allowed to dry sufficiently to be sown. The sooner it is sown after treatment the better. Twenty gallons of the solution will treat about twenty bushels of grain. Several treatments may be made with the same solution; each lot will require to be immersed for twenty minutes; or

2. Mix one pint of formalin with 40 gallons of water. Place the grain to be treated in a heap on a clean canvas floor. Sprinkle the formalin solution over the grain, then shovel the grain over into another pile so as to mix it thoroughly, then sprinkle and shovel again. Repeat this until every grain is moistened by the solution; then cover the pile with sacking and leave for 3 or 4 hours. At the end of this time spread the grain out thinly to dry; shovelling it over three or four times will hasten the drying. Forty gallons of the formalin solution is sufficient to sprinkle between thirty and forty bushels of grain, smaller amounts in proportion.

THE WORLD OF SPORT

FAMOUS COACHER HERE WITH CUBAN GIANTS

The Ottawa Free Press says: The Senators will be joined by the famous Cuban Giants at Toronto tomorrow, and will play exhibition games in Peterborough Thursday, Friday and Saturday, then show at Dupuis Park prior to opening the series at the exhibition The Giants are a well-known independent aggregation that tours the United States from coast to coast during the summer months and only last week defeated the Pittsburgh Federals 7 0.

The Cuban Giants are a coloured team under the management of "Ha Ha" Leavell, one of the most famous characters in baseball annals. He was a great catcher a decade ago and the Cincinatti club attempted to use him against the laws of organized ball and came near being disfranchised as a result Leavell's only part in a ball game now is on the coaching lines, and he has all the Scheaffers and Altrocks beaten to a frazzle for comedy. He gets as high as fifty dollars a game around New York to supply the comedy on the coaching line when semi-pro teams are playing. He is a big man, close to 300 pounds and blacker than Jack Johnson The Giants have three Indian players on their roster.

PITCHING CROP FROM BUSHES BIG THIS YEAR

NEW YOAK, Sept. 8 — The hard times that are popularly supposed to be haunting baseball magnates this year apparently have not reached the player crop. More pitchers came out of the tall grass at the close of last season and showed stuff enough to stick than in years. The Federals undoubtedly are partly responsible, because 16 big-league managers were in definitely more patient with the rookies this year than heretofore. It also is possible that the requirements weren't so great this year, but what ever may be the reason they're here

Out of a dozen classy-looking young workmen the effervescent Mr. Mammax of Pittsburg stands out like a headlight on a dark night. Mammaux can be classed as a rookie at the start of the present season, as he didn't do enough work for Fred Clarke last season to get his name in the official list of pitchers. But he certainly is making up for it. By his efforts alone almost, the Pirates have earned serious consideration as flag contenders Take the 19 games that he has won out of the Pirates' won column, and it'll look rather depleted.

The Pirates would be fussing with C Herzog for the cellar. Even the great Messrs. Alexander and Johnson lose a little of their lustre beside Mammaux.

Deal and Dell.

Dale of the Reds, and Dell of the Dodgers, are two more cluckers who came up this season and have earned their spurs. Both have been lingering around between 625 and 650 at season, which is a pretty hefty mark for rookies to make their first year out, especially with clubs that haven't been contenders all the time. Dale has been the steadiest pitcher the Reds have had.

The Dodgers, with Wilbert Robinson and his well known penchant for developing young pitchers, have been exceptionally fortunate in getting good pitching this season. Two more of Robinson's proteges Appleton and Smith have been giving him a good hand of slinging, and it is to this that Brooklyn fans owe their pennant hopes Smith has made good with a vengeance Recent averages show he has been pitching 700 ball.

Karl Adams, the long, lanky youngster who came to the Cubs from Jack Hendrick's Indianapolis team, also has shown stuff enough to stick under the big top, though his work hasn't been of a sensational nature. Boland of the Tigers is another whose curves have puzzled the sluggers in Ban Johnson's loop considerably. Koob and Sisler of the St Louis Browns are also worthy of mention.

Rickey's Sisler.

Branch Rickey thinks he has a wonder in this Sisler, and the youngster's work certainly has been of a nature to justify his suspicion.

Not for years has a rookie come up who had versatility enough to play three positions and play them all well, as Sisler has done The former Michigan star has pitched some gilt-edged ball for the Browns, played in the outfield and handled first base like a veteran And on top of all this he's been packing the old pill at a rate close to .350 Truly a remarkable man.

John McGraw has not failed to get a few likely-looking rumors, either. Bramell, who came from Texas, has stolen Fred Merkle's job at first, and Babbington, the young Brown university player in spite of Iwise "the only Phi Beta Kappa in the big leagues," is looking good in the outfield.

ASKS ASSISTANCE LOCAL SPORTSMEN

Mr. Leonard Smith, secretary of the Lacrosse Branch of the Sport-men's Association of Toronto, has written to Mr. Jack Sutherland, secretary of the Peterborough Lacrosse Club, seeking the assistance of local sportsmen The object of the S. P. A fund is to buy machine guns, comforts and other articles for the men at the front. Over $5000 worth of sporting goods have already been sent to the Niagara and other camps The lacrosse men are quite willing to assist in any way they can, and it is proposed to unite with the lacrosse clubs of this district for this purpose. At the same time the assistance of any other local men will be gratefully accepted.

WHAT THE SECOND YEAR OF THE WAR WILL MEAN TO CANADIAN PATRIOTIC FUND

A Fresh Appeal Will Have to Be Made to the Generosity of the People Throughout Canada—20,000 Families Being Looked After.

MORE SOON ON LIST

We have now entered upon the second year of the war, and the end seems as far off as ever. No one imagined a year ago, that by September 1915, Canada would have sent across the Atlantic nearly 100,000 men, with as many more to follow if necessary. The war may yet last a long time We can permit no "stale mate," no truce that means returning to the relative positions occupied before the war. That would only mean that all of the belligerents would at once commence preparations for another and a greater conflict, and that the children for whose heritage we are fighting to-day, would, in turn, themselves be called upon to lay down their lives in the next generation

What the Prime Minister of England said last Autumn is as true to-day as it was. This war cannot end until Belgium has been restored to all that she lost and more, until France has been given boundaries that can be protected against the menace of invasion; until the right of the little nations of Europe to live has been unquestionably established and until Prussianism has been completely crushed. To accomplish these things will require enormous sacrifice. Lord Kitchener says the war can only be ended by trained men. "Men, more men, and yet more men."

The issue to-day depends upon Britain and the British Empire. We, alone, have the reserves that permit of the creation of the prepondering army. The Germans before the war made many predictions. In respect of France and Russia, they were not far astray, but they wholly underestimated the power of the British Empire The overseas dominions which were contemptuously referred to as a negligible quantity, will probably furnish 300,000 men or more before the end of the war and a large proportion of these will consist of the contingents from Canada.

Providing for Dependents.

It is the duty of the Canadian Government to arm, train, equip and maintain its expeditionary force. The money for this purpose is raised by taxation equally distributed on the people of Canada. The task of providing for the wives and children of the men who go to the front, however, has been entirely assumed by the generous public, on the ground that he who cannot fight should pay.

For this end was inaugurated the Canadian Patriotic Fund. With the month of September, this organization enters upon the work of its second year. On that date about 20,000 families were on its list of beneficiaries, and it required over $375,000 per month to meet their needs. Although in the early months of the war, subscriptions to the Fund were in excess of the demands made upon it, and a considerable surplus accrued, this latterly has not been the case, for since May these reserves have been subject to an ever increasing drain. During June, July and August, the deficit amounted to $400,000. If the war continues for another year there will be required during that period not less than five million dollars to care for those entrusted to our care. To be sure, we have no written contract with the soldier that we will continue to provide for his wife and children, but he has gone to the front with implicit faith that we will not repudiate our obligation, and this pledge must not be broken.

New Fields of Activity.

Since the outbreak of war, new fields of activity, beyond those originally contemplated, have been opened up. Not only does the Fund care for the wives of British and Canadian soldiers, but also for those of the Allies, Belgian, French, Italian, Russian. All these nations have had reason to feel that Canada recognizes the bond of a common brotherhood in this terrible struggle. Moreover, the Patriotic Fund has taken the convalescent soldier under its care. That is, when he has a family dependent upon him. A representative of the Fund meets every returned soldier at Quebec learns of his history and condition, passes him on to the Secretary of the Branch in the town to which he is going, and on its arrival there, the local committee stands by the family until the convalescent is restored to health, and employment for him is secured.

When a year ago, the Fund made its first appeal to the public, it was on behalf of an idea, and everybody admitted that the duty of caring for the soldiers' dependents was one that could not be overlooked. To-day, the Fund appeals on a record For twelve months its directors have endeavoured, as trustees of the people of Canada, to administer the monies so freely given. The Fund now appeals to the public for money to enable the work to be continued along well tried and established lines.

Naturally, when one is asked for a second subscription, if there be any criticism, it is then that it is offered This has been the experience of the Patriotic Fund We find it desirable therefore to deal now with some of the criticisms that have been advanced.

Some Criticisms.

It is sometimes said that the Fund acts too generously towards the soldiers' dependents. Let us examine this assertion. We would in the first place point out that relief is determined by local committees These are in close contact with the soldiers' dependents and on their recommendation the amount rewarded to each family is fixed. The had office lays down general rules which are followed, for the most part, with commendable exactness Every month a statement is prepared, showing in respect of each family, the amount of assistance given. These "disbursement sheets," as they are called, are checked by the accountant of the Fund at Ottawa, and where the Head office has reason to believe that a local committee is going beyond the authorized scale that committee is requested to revise its future grants. The Fund is intended only for those who would be in need were it not in existence. Throughout Eastern Canada the average help to a soldier's wife, with children, amounts to from 50 to 60 cents per day In the Western Provinces it ranges from 70 to 80 cents per day This does not seem an extravagant amount, and yet in most instances it represents the difference between a bare existence and a reasonable degree of comfort. Occasionally the claim is made that the soldier's wife is better off than when her husband was at home. This may be the case and yet not necessarily a matter for regret or reasonable ground for reproof Prior to the enlistment of her husband, "Mrs. Bill Smith" and her children may have lived during many a month below the scale of decent subsistence, but when "William Smith" enlists in the Canadian Overseas Contingent, takes his training, and goes to the front to fight the battles of the Empire, we claim his wife is entitled to receive commensurate treatment from the community in which she lives. And further, if we are to ask the Canadian-born artisan in receipt of good wages, to enlist, we cannot expect him to leave his wife with only a bare subsistence for herself and children

The Soldier's Pay

Hitherto, in deciding what a soldier's family should receive, the Patriotic Fund has not taken into consideration the soldier's assigned pay. We have been criticised for this, but there are reasons which to us seem valid for following this course. Many men enlist whose families are in debt, and it is thought wise that the assigned pay should at first go to wipe out these obligations. Then, during the long, hard, Canadian winter, an ill-furnished home could hardly be improved or an ill-clad family adequately clothed out of the allowance paid by the Canadian Patriotic Fund, so the soldier's wife is advised to use the assigned pay to furnish the house, and clothe the children. Latterly, our committees have been preaching the doctrine of saving a gainst the day of the soldier's return. When he comes back to Canada, his pay will cease. No longer will he have any claim on the government or on the Patriotic Fund. He must henceforth earn his own living. He may not be able to find immediate employment, hence we are now advising his wife, during his absence at the front, to save a part of what he sends her, with a view of tiding the family over this period of rehabilitation. It does not necessarily follow that a frugal soldier's wife, who by denying herself can lay by something against her husband's return, is being too generously treated by the Patriotic Fund.

Sometimes we hear the assertion that the government of Canada should do the work now being carried on by the Canadian Patriotic Fund. Usually, those who advance this idea are not able to suggest how this might be done, nor do they appear to have foreseen the results The Canadian Government cannot discriminate between families The separation allowance is given, without favour, alike to the wife of the millionaire and to that of the pauper, the same sum to each. The wife in the former case has no claim because of need, while in the latter case the separation allowance alone is not sufficient to support the family even on the most economical scale Hence, the Patriotic Fund, acting with discrimination considering the special circumstances of each case, brings up each family's income to a reasonable level of subsistence thus building on the foundation which the government has laid. Further, the Patriotic Fund has been singularly fortunate in securing throughout Canada the services of a large number of our best business and professional men, who, without remuneration, give time and labour to its administration It is very questionable whether the magnificent volunteer work could be replaced by government officials with advantage either on the score of economical and efficient administration, or sympathetic treatment of the soldiers dependents.

For the most part, the work of the Fund is carried on by voluntary workers At the head office and with the larger branches there is a limited staff for the prosecution of clerical work So one need fear, however that his contribution is eaten into by large salaries of a paid staff. Hitherto, the interest allowed by the banks on the reserve deposits in their hands has more than covered all the administrative expenses of the head office and branches, and, even with the new activities to which the Fund is now committed, it seems probable that for the present at least this condition can be maintained.

A Fine Record.

The record of the past twelve months in patriotic giving is one of which Canada may be justly proud. Upwards of five million dollars have been turned in to the Patriotic Fund during the first year of the war. There is hardly a community in the Dominion that has not assumed some share in this great undertaking. True, the recognition of the responsibility has varied greatly. Some districts and many individuals have taxed themselves heavily, while others have endeavoured to escape with a minimum contribution. At first, there was a tendency on the part of certain localities to uphold the doctrine of purely local responsibility. "We will look after our own, let others do the same," was their motto. Had this been the general practice throughout Canada, there would have been, before the first year of the war had come to an end, communities in which either the soldiers' dependents would have been compelled to subsist without assistance, or a burden would have been assumed by the people altogether beyond their means. For example the Province of Alberta, from which there have enlisted about 15,000 men, or one man to every twenty-five inhabitants of the Province, having to carry a burden of nearly 3,500 soldiers' families, would have had to provide $75,000 per month to meet their needs, while on other communities, at present more able to bear so heavy a financial load than this loyal Province would have rested but a light obligation It has been the privilege of the national Fund, during the past year, to assist communities that were "long on patriotism and short on cash," and we have been able to do this through the generosity of other communities, whose subscriptions were large, though their enlistments were comparatively few.

From Many Sources.

Contributions have come from many sources. Municipal and County Councils have generously subscribed in all the provinces. Banks, railway companies, employees of industrial establishments, fraternal societies, religious bodies, athletic associations and thousands of individuals have helped to swell the Fund. Members of the North West Mounted Police give one day's pay a month Indians from many a reserve have sent in the proceeds of their grain, their cattle, or their fur Mining towns, and lumber camps cheese factories and fishing plants, have all figured on the list of subscribers. A general collection, on a given day, was taken up in all the Roman Catholic Churches throughout the Province of Quebec This Dominion, wide support, so generously accorded in the first year of the war, will probably be exceeded by the generosity that will be shown in the second and severer period of the struggle.

Steps are now about to be undertaken for a fresh appeal to the generous public throughout all Canada, Wherever possible, subscriptions will be sought, payable in monthly instalments, so that the Fund may have a continuous income to the end of the war. So few communities now remain that have not subscribed at least once, that the Executive Committee feels justified in asking all Canada to give a second time.

Until the youngest among us is grey headed, and for many long years after, the one outstanding event will be this great war. We may still continue to use the old chronology, but event of modern history will be divided into those before and those after this present year. It has been a great testing time for nations and individuals. The boasted civilization of some countries has been found to be but a tawdry mask, of others to have shown unexampled heroism For the British Empire, judged by its enemies to be decadent, money-loving, rent by dissension, it has proven a time of sublime effort As with nations so it is with individuals Hereafter the one question that will be asked regarding every man will be this: How did he stand the test of the great war? Those who can should go to fight, and those who cannot fight should pay. Those who will do neither are unworthy the liberties they enjoy, for which men by the thousands are dying.

After all, this great cloud has a silver lining. It may lead those of us who inherited privileges we little prized, to hold them hereafter at higher estimation, and to exercise the rights of self-government with greater unselfishness and purer ideals. If this be accomplished, the sacrifices will not have been in vain.

ARREST DETECTIVES WHO MADE RAID

NEW YORK, Sept. 9. — Detective Sergeants Ezekiel Keller and John W Sutter, of Inspector Dwyer's staff were arrested in the Inspector's office by Detectives Corbett and Buckley on warrants charging oppression The arrests followed a raid made at the direction of Inspector Dwyer on the club rooms of the Eugene E Duffy Association in Eighth Avenue, on Monday night, when a large amount of furniture, alleged to be gambling paraphernalia, was removed to the West Forty-Seventh street Station

The warrants, issued by Magistrate McQuade, charged that the men arrested had "illegally entered the premises at No 674 Eighth Avenue without a warrant" The detectives were admitted to bail of $500 each.

When a man's knowledge is not in order the more of it he has the greater will be his confusion.—Herbert Spencer.

Such is the world. Understand it, despise it, love it, cheerfully hold on thy way through it, with thy eye on highest lodestar.—Carlyle.

All God's people own that they must be saved by sovereign grace, and anything like righteousness of their own they pump overboard as so much bilge water.—Spurgeon.

Mankind is always happier for having.

ITALY HONORS PRINCE

Very Symbolic is Order Given Prince Edward by Ally

The King of Italy has conferred the Collar of the Annunziata upon the Prince of Wales. The bestowal of this, the highest and most ancient distinction in the gift of the Italian Crown, would have been an act of courtesy too marked to pass unnoticed; in present circumstances it acquires peculiar significance. In the ordinary course it would doubtless have been given, sooner or later, to the heir to the Throne, as it was given in 1892 to King George when he was Duke of York, in 1903 to the Duke of Connaught, and in 1904 to Prince Arthur of Connaught. But this is the first time that it has been bestowed upon a British Prince on active service in the field as an Ally of Italy.

The founder of the Order, Amadeus VI. of Savoy, instituted it in 1362, with the plea that the "Knights of the Collar" should not make war on each other for any reason whatever and should be bound to defend one another. Both of these conditions are now fulfilled, not merely negatively but positively. Though lapse of time and the multiplication of knightly Orders have deprived many "decorations" of their former meaning, the "Collar of the Most Sacred Annunciation" has continued to rank among the most coveted distinctions in the world. Those who receive it become "cousins of the King." Now that we with France and Italy, are facing a foe who has forfeited all claim to knightly consideration, the giving of the "Collar" to our fighting Prince simultaneously with its bestowal upon the President of the French Republic is at once a symbol of our unity of purpose and a pledge of the cousinly spirit in which we shall continue to discharge our common obligation.

James W. Lusk, one of the receivers for the St. Louis and San Francisco Railroad will be in New York early next week. Formal announcement of the details of the arrangement for the proposed reorganization of that road is expected soon after his arrival.

John D. Ryan, president of the Anaconda Copper Mine Company, is back in New York after several weeks in the West, extremely optimistic over the future for copper metal.

Interesting comments on American Beet Sugar are contained in a circular distributed by A. A. Housman & Co., of the New York Stock Exchange.

The Controller of the Currency issued a call to all national banks requiring them to report their condition at the close of business on Thursday, September 2.

At a meeting of the reorganization committee of the Wabash-Pittsburg Terminal Railroad Company it was decided to extend for two weeks the time for payment of the assessment on the company's first mortgage bonds under the reorganization proposal.

Directors of the Continental Can Company at a meeting declared an initial dividend of 1 1-4 per cent. on the company's common stock. In the financial district this action was generally regarded as placing the stock on a 5 per cent annual basis.

Evidence of the prosperity of chemical companies was given in press despatches from Cleveland stating that the Dow Chemical Company proposed to double its $1,500,000 stock and issue the new shares as a bonus to present holders. The new stock will be 7 per cent. cumulative preferred.

Rock Island Situation.

In line with previous reports that the Phelps-Dodge copper interests would retire from the Rock Island system, it was said in the financial district that Arthur Curtiss James and James McLean, vice-presidents of Phelps, Dodge & Co., had retired as directors of the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific Railway Company. The latter is the company now operating the Rock Island lines and is in receivership.

Neither Mr. James nor Mr. McLean was in town. Other officials of the copper company said they had heard of no resignations, but said it was possible the Phelps-Dodge group would not be represented on the Rock Island Board after the annual meeting of the Rock Island, which is to be held next month. The terms of Messrs. James and McLean as directors will expire at that time, they said.

Another report in the financial district was that the note for $1,000,000 made by the Rock Island to the Central Trust Company several months ago would not be renewed. This note bears the indorsement of D. G. Reid and other Rock Island directors. The note does not fall due until next month, and in the meantime no official statement may be made as to how it will be disposed of.

Public sentiment in the United States ought to be pretty well educated by this time to the idea of a large British credit to stabilize exchange.

The early idea there was: "What do we need to care so long as the dollar and not the pound sterling is the basis of the settlement. We have nothing to lose. Whatever loss there may be on exchange, must be paid by the Britisher or the European, whoever he may happen to be."

Now they are beginning to realize that there is a chance of losing a part of this highly profitable trade and sentiment is veering around to the idea that it would be a pity to lose it if means can be devised to retain it.

The means seems to be in the hands of the American people to bring about the desired stabilization of exchange.

Low Exchange and Silver.

That the fall and irregular movement of foreign exchange is not simply a financial phenomenon but is certain to be accompanied by adjustments in commodity prices, is claimed by some in the bullion trade. According to a well-known representative, silver is fairly certain to feel some of the effects, probably in a favourable way, of the conditions which have resulted in low exchange.

"The natural consequence" declared this authority, "of the issue of so much paper currency in European countries will be the withdrawal of gold from current use. The policy of governments to abstract gold from private holdings into public custody will have the same effect of causing a scarcity of metallic circulation. Silver, in spite of the demonetization at law, is still one of the precious metals. In the comparative absence of gold its standing should be materially improved and the demand for its possession become more general and intense. As a result, the status of the white metal may in due time enjoy something of a rehabilitation."

CHICAGO, Sept. 10.—If you don't believe it, hear O. H. Benson and be convinced. Mr. Benson is one of Uncle Sam's agriculturists, but sometimes he forgets his high-sounding title and preaches on his hobby. That's what he's doing at the Cook County Teachers Institute and Educational Conference in the Chicago Normal School, and his hobby is expressed in just three words.

"Eat an apple."

"We are coming to the time when every family in the United States will consume a quart of apples every day," he declared in the course of his lecture-demonstration before mothers and teachers. "Apples are one of the most healthful foods obtainable. Instead of patent medicines eat apples. That advice, followed out, would save thousands of dollars in doctors' and druggists' bills."

Even apple pies are healthful, Prof. Benson believes. They're most healthful and here's a tip for restaurateurs when the "filler" is thick and fresh and juicy. In other words, their food value is in direct ratio to the amount of apples in them.

Mr. Benson deplored the waste in apples. Half the crop rots on the ground annually, while the large cities of population are unable to obtain enough apples, he said.

It is largely this condition that has brought about the high cost of living, he said.

Elaborating upon home canning methods and processes, Mr. Benson declared it is just as easy and quite a profitable job to can food products extensively in the home as in the commercial factory. He advocated the use of food syrups as a preservative in canning fruits by the "cold pack" method.

ST. LOUIS Sept. 9—Dr. Ralph L. Thompson of the faculty of St. Louis University who has returned from France, where he served in a British hospital, predicted that the war would last from five to fifteen years.

Dr. Thompson said the deadlock in the western theatre seemed unbreakable and that the permanent nature of the British hospitals and of other British preparation testified to their belief that the struggle will be long.

The British have just finished building a $130,000 steam laundry back of the battle line, he said.

MAGIC BAKING POWDER

SAW BRITISH ARMADA STEAM FROM HARBOUR

Departure on Mysterious Errand an Inspiring Spectacle, Correspondent Visiking Fleet Says

OVER 20 DREADNOUGHTS

LONDON, Sept 5.—On his visit to the British battle fleet last week the present correspondent, after boarding all of the more important ships witnessed a magnificent spectacle—the whole force putting to sea.

Officers on Vice Admiral Sir David Beatty's flagship, the Lion, which has received the toughest handling in battle of any major British ship now afloat, told of the difficulty they had to persuade the young commander to descend at the opening of the action from the bridge, where he had an unhampered vision, to the armored protection of the conning tower. They told of the success of destroyers in foiling all efforts of submarines to reach the crippled Lion as she was being towed home at five knots an hour after sinking the German cruiser Blucher.

The places in which the Lion was hit in the North Sea battle were not discernible in some instances, owing to reconstruction of the sections where the shells burst. In other cases the location was evident, patches having been placed over the injured plates. A very small percentage of the German shells hit at the 18,000-yard range of the early stage of the battle officers say, but the screams of passing salvos and the crack of their own guns caused an inconceivable tumult to sound in the ears of those stationed on the bridge.

Scars on Other Great Ships.

The Tiger, sister battle cruiser of the Lion, had fewer scars to show as a result of the North Sea battle.

On the Queen Elizabeth the only signs of her experiences at the Dardanelles which were visible were a section of new planks on deck, where a shell penetrated, and a dent from a glancing shot on one of her 15-inch guns.

The Inflexible, the flagship of the Falkland Islands battle suffered less injury there than at the Dardanelles, where she was struck by a mine and was under heavy fire from shore. A piece of the mine is kept in the ward-room as a souvenir, indeed, all the ships which have been in action have fragments of German shells set in mountings as mementoes. Officers referred to the manner in which the necessity had been foreseen in British naval preparations for taking care of damage from battle, thus insuring prompt repairs when any ship returned injured in action.

"But we had few repairs to make, and our energy and resources were given to the rapid construction of new fighting units, which continues to increase our preponderance over the German fleet," one officer remarked.

The correspondent heard repeated and sympathetic references to the sacrifices and hardships of the army during the grilling year of war while the battleships marked time in their long wait.

"If battle comes for us it will not last long," an officer said. "Every day's waiting only sharpens our eagerness."

The only colour visible in that vast assembly of fighting ships, stretching into the misty horizon or standing out against the green background of the harbour, was in the blue uniforms of the crews and an occasional signal flag fluttering from a halyard.

Fleet Puts Out to Sea.

While on board the flagship of Admiral Sir John Jellico a message was brought to the Commander in Chief, who called a secretary and spoke briefly to him. Word was passed around that the whole fleet had been ordered to weigh anchor and proceed to sea. Guests on board a destroyer at the mouth of the harbour, watched that unprecedented procession of naval power make its exit, led by graceful light cruisers and flotillas of destroyers.

"But are not German submarines waiting outside?" was asked.

"No doubt two or three are always there," an officer replied, "but the destroyers know how to keep them off."

Twenty Dreadnoughts, and Still More.

The head of the column was lost in the mist of approaching nightfall and black clouds from the funnels. Eight—sixteen—twenty dreadnoughts were counted as they went past with clockwork regularity, and out of other smoke clouds in the harbour more dreadnoughts were coming forward. King Edward VII and other pre-dreadnought classes had their part.

The commander of the destroyer which the correspondent was aboard looked at his watch and said it was time to go as he must take his appointed place in the fleet. At thirty knots an hour he cut across the bows of a battleship, taking his guests to the landing place. As the destroyer rounded the headland the correspondent had a last glimpse of that seemingly endless column of ships still not free from the harbour on their way on an enterprise created in the North Sea. Its numbers and sea power were suggestive of an Armada succession which overwhelmed the imagination should it ever engage the German fleet.

ANTI-GERMAN FEELING IS AT FEVER HEAT

Horror and Resentment in London Over Slaughter of Men, Women and Children by Kaiser's Zeppelins---Serious Outbreaks by Maddened Mobs Feared by Authorities

LONDON, Eng., Sept. 10.—Serious outbreaks by maddened mobs were feared here to-day as the result of Zeppelins' latest bombardment.

Special constables were sent to guard the German shops, boarded up since the internment of enemy aliens.

The anti-German feeling reached a fever heat. No incident since the war began has aroused such horror and resentment in London as the raid over the capital on Wednesday night when men, women and children were killed or wounded by explosive bombs from the Kaiser's dirigibles.

The censor passed, without any comment as to its accuracy by the Government, the Berlin claim that the western part of the City of London, the factories near Norwich, and the harbour and iron works near Middleborough were attacked by Zeppelins.

The public was by no means terrorized by the spectacle of Wednesday, though insurance companies issuing policies against Zeppelin damages have done large business in the last 24 hours.

people letters from the soldiers appear every day in the press, probably encouraged as none appears which does not laud the army, the country, and the royal house.

The "atrocities" to call them by no milder name, of the Austrian official bulletin and the statements of the Austro-German press are perhaps one of the greatest elements in keeping up the morale of the troops and people. It is intensely galling to them after a hard won victory to read in the Teutonic papers that the Italians have been driven back and that they have to be made drunk before being induced to move at all. The Italians, like all races, nations, are somewhat thin-skinned—as shown by their attitude during the Libyan war, when they are themselves unjustly defamed—and they resent bitterly denunciatory assertions which an older nation might treat with contempt. The Italians are one of the most sober races in the world, although they drink wine every day and consider that water was only created to wash with, and as a last extreme drink to wine is never used at all.

The Italian and Austrian official bulletins contradict each other with such [illegible] that for those at a distance it must be difficult to arrive at the truth. Canadians Honored.

Two Canadians, well known in the art world of the United States, have been awarded gold medals at the Panama-Pacific Exposition at San Francisco. These are Ernest Lawson, landscape artist, and A. Phimister Proctor, sculptor. Mr. Lawson is a native of Halifax, N.S., while Mr. Proctor was born in Lambton County, Ont. Both men, while spending most of their time in New York, are members of the Canadian Art Club.

Maple Trees for Langemarck.

A large supply of Canadian maple seeds has just reached London, Eng. Negotiations are proceeding with the British Red Cross in an endeavor to have these seeds planted around the graves and cemeteries where Canadian soldiers are buried in Flanders. The Overseas Club proposes later to plant an avenue at Langemarck as a memorial to the Canadian dead.

Happy Eskimos Have No Visitors.

"The Eskimos are said to be a very happy and contented people."

"Why shouldn't they be?" rejoined Mrs. Frettles. "An Eskimo family never has visitors except when an occasional exploring party comes along. They don't care much whether the servants leave or not."

Always Somebody.

"I see that girl with the big mouth has got a beau. I never thought anybody would fall in love with her."

"She is going with a young dentist. He dislikes small mouths. Too hard to work in, he says."

No Search Necessary.

"Where do we find the most miserable of men?" exclaimed the exhorter fervently.

"You don't have to find him," responded the man in the fourth row, centre. "He hunts you up and tells you about it."

Two Press Agents.

The agent out ahead of the show usually is pretty enthusiastic, but he has nothing on the girl who has an out-of-town friend coming to visit her.

"Who let these people in?" I demanded in smothered tones from the depths of a sweater I was getting into in order to gain time by omitting a collar.

"They came in with the plumbers, sir, at half past 8. Old man Schmick tried to keep him out, but they said they didn't understand German and walked right by, leaving their donkeys in the roadway outside."

"Couldn't Rudolph and Max stop them?" I cried as my head emerged.

"They were still in bed, sir. I think they're at breakfast now."

"Good Lord!" I groaned, looking at my watch. "Nine thirty! What sort of a rest cure am I conducting here?"

We hurried downstairs so fast that I lost one of my bedroom slippers. It went clattering on ahead of us, making a shameful racket on the bare stones, but Britton caught it up in time to save it from the clutches of the curio vandals.

Two gentlemen wearing fedoras were standing in the middle of the great hall discussing the merits of a dingy old spinet that had been carried out of the music room by two fusty porters from the hotel.

As I came up I heard one of the strangers say to the other:

"Well, if you don't want it I'll take it. My wife says it can be made into a writing desk with a little"—

"I beg your pardon, gentlemen," said I, confronting them. "Will you be good enough to explain this intrusion?"

They stared at me as if I were a servant asking for higher wages. The speaker, a man with a bristly mustache and a red necktie, drew himself up haughtily.

"Who are you?" he demanded, fixing me with a glare.

CHAPTER III.
The Real Owner.

I KNEW at once that he was the kind of an American I have come to hate with a zest that knows no moderation—the kind that makes one ashamed of the national melting pot. I glared back at him.

"I happen to be the owner of this place, and you'll oblige me by clearing out."

"What's that? Here, here, none of that sort of talk, my friend! We're here to look over your stuff, and we mean business, but you won't get anywhere by talking like"—

"There is nothing for sale here," I said shortly. "And you've got a lot of nerve to come bolting into a private house"—

"Say," said the second man, advancing with a most insulting scowl, "we'll understand each other right off the reel, my friend. All you've got to do is to answer us when we ask for prices. Now, bear that in mind, and don't try any of your high and mighty tactics on us."

"Just remember that you're a junk dealer and we'll get along splendidly," said the other in a tone meant to crush me. "What do you ask for this thing?" tapping the dusty spinet with his walking stick.

It suddenly occurred to me that the situation was humorous.

"You will have to produce your references, gentlemen, before I can discuss anything with you," I said, after swallowing very hard. (It must have been my pride.)

They stared. "Good Lord!" gasped the bristly one, blinking his eyes. "Don't you know who this gentleman is? You—you appear to be an American. You must know Mr. Riley-Werkheimer of New York."

"I regret to say that I have never heard of Mr. Riley-Werkheimer. I did not know that Mrs. Riley-Werkheimer's husband was living. And may I ask who you are?"

"Oh, I am also a nobody!" said he, with a wink at his purple jowled companion. "I am only poor old Rocksworth, the president of the"—

"Oh, don't say anything more, Mr. Rocksworth!" I cried. "I have heard of you. This fine old spinet? Well, it has been reduced in price. Ten thousand dollars, Mr. Rocksworth."

"Ten thousand nothing! I'll take it at $75. And now let's talk about this here hall seat. My wife thinks it's a fake. What is its history and what sort of guarantee can you"—

"A fake!" I cried in dismay. "My dear Mr. Rocksworth, that is the very hall seat that Pontius Pilate sat in when waiting for an audience with the first of the great Teutonic barons. The treaty between the Romans and the Teutons was signed on that table over there, the one you have so judiciously selected, I perceive. Of course you know that this was the Saxon seat of government. Charlemagne lived here with his court."

They tried not to look impressed, but rather overdid it.

"That's the sort of story you fellows always put up, you scenmists from Boston. I'll bet my head you are from Boston," said Mr. Rocksworth shrewdly.

"I couldn't afford to have you lose your head, Mr. Rocksworth, so I shan't take you on," said I merrily.

"Don't get fresh now," said he stiffly.

Mr. Riley Werkheimer walked past me to take a closer look at the seat, almost treading on my toes rather than give an inch to me.

"How can you prove that it's the genuine article?" he demanded curtly.

"You have my word for it, sir," I said quietly.

"Pish tush!" said he.

Mr. Rocksworth turned in the direction of the banquet hall.

"Carrie," he shouted, "come here a minute, will you?"

"Don't shout like that, Orson," came back from the porcelain closet. "You almost made me drop this thing."

"Well, drop it and come on. This is important."

I wiped the moisture from my brow and respectfully put my clinched fists into my pockets.

A minute later three females appeared on the scene, all of them dusting their hands and curling their noses in disgust.

"I never saw such a dirty place," said the foremost, a large lady who couldn't by any circumstance of fate have been anybody's wife but Rocksworth's. "It's filthy! What do you want?"

"I've bought this thing here for seventy five. You said I couldn't get it for a nickel under a thousand. And, say, this man tells me the hall seat here belonged to Pontius Pilate in"—

"Pardon me," I interrupted, "I merely said that he sat in it. I am not trying to deceive you, sir."

"And the treaty was signed on this table," said Mr. Riley-Werkheimer. He addressed himself to a plump young lady with a distorted bust and a twenty-two inch waist. "Maude, what do you know about the Roman-Teutonic treaty? We'll catch you now, my friend," he went on, turning to me. "My daughter is up in ancient history. She's an authority."

Miss Maude appeared to be racking her brain. I undertook to assist her.

"I mean the second treaty, after the fall of Nuremburg," I explained.

"Oh," she said, instantly relieved. "Was it really signed here, right here in this hall? Oh, father, we must have that table!"

"You are sure there was a treaty, Maude?" demanded her parent accusingly.

"Certainly," she cried. "The Teutons ceded Alsace-Lorraine to"—

"Pardon me once more," I cried, and this time I plead guilty to a blush, "you are thinking of the other treaty—the one at Metz, Miss Riley-Werkheimer. This, as you will recall, antedates that one by—oh, several years."

"Thank you," she said, quite condescendingly. "I was confused for a moment. Of course, father, I can't say that it was signed here on this table as the young man says. I only know that there was a treaty. I do wish you'd come and see the fire screen I've found"—

"Let's get this out of our system first," said her father. "If you can show me statistics and the proper proof that this is the genuine table, young man, I'll"—

"Pray rest easy, sir," I said. "We can take it up later on. The facts are"—

"And this Pontius Pilate seat," interrupted Rocksworth, biting off the end of a fresh cigar—"what about it? Got a match?"

"Get the gentleman a match, Britton," I said, thereby giving my valet an opportunity to do his exploding in the pantry. "I can only affirm, sir, that it is common history that Pontius Pilate spent a portion of his exile here in the sixth century. It is reasonable to assume that he sat in this seat, being an old man unused to difficult stairways. He"—

"Buy it, Orson," said his wife, with authority. "We'll take a chance on it. If it isn't the right thing we can sell it to the secondhand dealers. What's the price?"

"A thousand dollars to you, madam," said I.

They were at once suspicious. While they were busily engaged in looking the seat over as the porters shifted it about at all angles I stepped over and ordered my workmen to resume operations.

"Here!" roared Mr. Rocksworth. "Stop this beastly noise! What the deuce do you mean, sir, permitting these scoundrels to raise the dead like this?"

I moved forward apologetically. "They are raising the dead. The place is fairly alive with dead rats and"—

"Good Lord!" gasped Riley-Werkheimer. "We'll get the bubonic plague here."

"Well, let's move on upstairs," said Rocksworth. Addressing the porters, he said: "You fellows get this lot of stuff together, and I'll take an option on it. I'll be over tomorrow to close the deal, Mr.—Mr.— Now, where is the old Florentine mirror the count was telling us about?"

"The count?" said I, frowning.

"Yes, the real owner. You can't stuff me with your talk about being the proprietor here, my friend. You see, we happen to know the count."

They all condescended to laugh at me. I don't know what I should have said or done if Britton had not returned with a box of matches at that instant.

Almost simultaneously there appeared in the lower hall a lanky youth of eighteen.

"Say, these clubs are the real stuff, all right, all right. They're as brittle as glass. See what I did to 'em. We can have 'em spliced and rewound, and I'll hang 'em on my wall. All I want is the heads anyhow."

He held up to view a headless mid-iron and brassie and triumphantly waved a splendid cleek. "My favorite clubs! I could play better from a hanging lie with that beautiful brassie than with any club I ever owned, and, as for the iron, I was deadly with it."

He lit a cigarette and threw the match into a pile of shavings. Old Conrad returned to life at that instant and stamped out the incipient blaze.

"I shouldn't consider them very good clubs, Harold, if they break off like that," said his mother.

"What do you know about clubs?" he snapped, and I at once knew what class he was in at the preparatory school.

If I was ever like one of these, said I to myself, God rest the sage soul of my Uncle Elias!

The situation was no longer humorous. I could put up with anything but the mishandling of my devoted golf clubs.

Striding up to him, I snatched the remnants from his hands.

"You infernal cub!" I roared. "Haven't you any more sense than to smash a golf club like that? For two cents I'd break this putter over your head."

"Father," he yelled indignantly, "who is this mucker?"

Mr. Rocksworth bounced toward me, his cane raised. I whirled upon him.

"How dare you?" he shouted. The ladies squealed.

If he expected me to cringe he was mightily mistaken. My blood was up. I advanced.

"Paste him, dad!" roared Harold.

But Mr. Rocksworth suddenly altered his course and put the historic treaty table between him and me. He didn't like the appearance of my rather brawny fist.

"You big stiff!" shouted Harold. Afterward it occurred to me that this inelegant appellation may have been meant for his father, but at the time I took it to be aimed at me.

Before Harold quite knew what was happening to him he was prancing down the long hall with my bony fingers grasping his collar. Coming to the door opening into the outer vestibule, I drew back my foot for a final aid to locomotion. Acutely recalling the fact that slippers are not designed for kicking purposes, I raised my foot, removed the slipper and laid it upon a taut section of his trousers with all of the melancholy force that I usually exert in slicing my drive off the tee. I shall never forget the exquisite spasm of pleasure his plaintive "Ouch!" gave me.

"How dare you?" he shouted.

Then Harold passed swiftly out of my life.

Mr. Rocksworth, re-enforced by four reluctant mercenaries in the shape of porters, was advancing upon me. Somehow I had a vague but unerring instinct that some one had fainted, but I didn't stop to inquire. Without much ado I wrested the cane from him and sent it scuttling after Harold.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

AN ESCAPE AT SEA

A Yankee Prisoner Takes to the Water

By WILLARD BLAKEMAN

In the autumn of 1914 when the German cruisers were destroying British commerce on the high seas Jack Marston, an American boy, was an ordinary seaman aboard the English ship Sea Gull. That wasn't the real name of the vessel, but there are reasons why it should be fictitious. Jack had been brought up on the Maine coast and was as much at home in the water as on shore and nearly as much at home in it as out of it. At any rate, he preferred to be in it.

Just why he shipped aboard a British vessel instead of an American does not appear, though American ships being few and far between it is probable that he would have been obliged to look for some time in order to get a berth on one. He was in Portland one day and, finding the Sea Gull there and about to make a trip to Valparaiso and return, concluded to sign for the voyage.

One morning when the Sea Gull was not a hundred miles from the port of her destination her captain espied on her port quarter a war vessel too far distant to make out to what nation she belonged. He was not long in doubt, for the ship headed for the Sea Gull, and when she came near enough the German flag was seen flying from her stern. She proved to be the Emden, one of the most remarkable of the commerce destroying cruisers of that period.

The Sea Gull being defenseless, her captain and crew realized that her sailing days were ended. They were taken aboard the Emden, and their ship was scuttled and sunk. That Jack Marston was a United States citizen was no especial advantage to him, for, being a member of the crew of a British ship, he was subject to the same terms as the others. However, there was nothing to be done with the captives until the Emden's commander could find some way of getting rid of them, and they were all kept aboard the Emden. They were considered prisoners of war, but not placed in confinement. Indeed, there were crews of two other captured ships aboard, besides a number of passengers.

Jack had not shipped to be kept aboard a German cruiser, darting hither and thither hunting for the merchant marine of Germany's enemies, and was much disgruntled. He told the captain of the Emden that he was an American citizen and asked to be furnished the means of getting ashore. But he had no proofs of his citizenship and even if he had would probably not have been entitled to different treatment from the other captives.

Jack having nothing to do, his mind turned on the problem of regaining his liberty. He did a great deal of thinking, with no practical result. There may be regularly planned escapes, but Jack, being out on the ocean, usually hundreds of miles from shore, might plan till the crack of doom without hitting upon any way of getting ashore even if he could elude the officers and crew of the Emden. If the cruiser had put into port the matter might have been feasible. But this she dared not do, for British warships were watching the harbors. Indeed, the safest place for the Emden was far out at sea, where the aren was so large that she was not likely to be found, and if sighted by an enemy too strong for her she would have plenty of room for flight.

Such being the case, Jack soon made up his mind that he must wait for an opportunity, and an opportunity would not likely arise unless the Emden found it essential to approach the coast, either for supplies or to get rid of her prisoners, who were making great inroads into her stock of provisions.

Jack one morning on awakening was surprised to see land not two miles from the ship. The Emden was steaming northward, skirting the shore. The reason for this was soon apparent. Jack saw seaward a British man-of-war, cruising along in the same direction as the Emden. It was evident that the latter was keeping within the limit of three miles from shore, which by international law is neutral waters. Jack looked at the shore longingly. He would have undertaken to swim to it, but in broad daylight it would be impossible for him to leave the ship without being seen. He resolved to wait till night. But when night came the idea of committing himself to the black, inhospitable waters to swim between two or three miles to a shore he could not see was too much for even his water pluck, and he dared not try it. He hoped for an opportunity just before dawn.

But during the midwatch a fog rolled in, and the captain of the Emden, taking advantage of it, ran out to sea, and when the next day the fog lifted she was out of sight of land. Jack ground his teeth, for he feared that he would not again get so near the shore.

That day one of the Sea Gull's crew died. The sailmaker of the Emden was engaged in making a bag in which to give the corpse a sea burial, and as Jack sat watching him at work an idea entered his head. One might put himself in the bag in place of the corpse to be thrown overboard and thus escape.

Escape where? Swimming on the bosom of an ocean unless there is a vessel near or land within reach is an undesirable change even from captivity. No; there was nothing in that idea and it was banished.

That afternoon a cloud of smoke appeared on the horizon, and soon the black hull of a war vessel loomed up. There was a commotion on board the Emden, for the vessel might be a British warship. The captain permitted her to come close enough to see that she flew the union jack of Great Britain and that she was a much larger craft than the Emden. Then he began to show his heels.

That night the lights on the Emden were darkened, and she changed her course several times. Quite likely the British ship also covered her lights. At any rate, she was not to be seen. The Emden's captain hoped that when daylight came again he would be rid of her. Unfortunately for the Emden the night was bright by the light of a full moon, so that she could be seen by her pursuers.

The next morning at dawn Jack Marston went on deck and at the first break of day descried the British ship somewhat nearer than the night before. The Britisher must have discovered the Emden at the same time, for a dense cloud of smoke issuing from her stacks indicated that she was putting fuel on her fires. The Emden followed suit and made every effort to escape. For a time it seemed that the English-man was gaining; then for an hour she neither lost nor gained. Jack, who was watching her closely, made up his mind that she was slowly losing.

Now, the crew of the Sea Gull were hoping that they would be rescued, and when Jack told them that the Britisher was slowly losing ground they were much disappointed. Jack determined to take an awful risk. That was to get himself sewed up in the burial bag and thrown overboard, with the hope of being picked up by the pursuing ship. He told his mates of his plan and asked them to help him. They looked upon his scheme as foolhardy and tried to dissuade him from it. But when they found that this was impossible they offered to do anything he suggested in their power.

Jack's plan was this: The attention of the officers and crew of the Emden was confined to getting away from the pursuing ship. The Sea Gull's men might steal the body of their dead comrade and hide it. They might then sew Jack up in the burial bag and heave him overboard without permission. They might omit the shot usually tied to the ankles for sinking purposes, and Jack would not remain long under water. On rising he would endeavor to attract the attention of the Britisher.

The crew of the Sea Gull agreed to do their part in the matter. If Jack wished to commit suicide he might do so. That was his lookout, not theirs. So when every one of the Emden's crew was intent on the pursuer they took the body out of the burial bag, and Jack got into it with pieces of cork tied under his shoulders, some provisions in a rubber bag, a bottle of water, a knife and a piece of white cotton cloth attached to a stick for signal purposes.

It was decided to ask the captain of the Emden for permission to bury their dead companion. He was too busy at the time to give any thought to their request and granted it with a nod of the head. Then the sailors carried Jack to the side of the ship and, standing about him uncovered, slid him overboard.

Jack did not mind being discovered in the water by the Germans, for he knew they would not think of stopping to pick him up. He was not below the surface more than twenty seconds, but when he reappeared the cruiser was going so fast that she was already quite a distance from him. The gaze of most of them was in his direction, but was fixed on the pursuing ship. One man caught sight of him, but Jack simply floated on the surface and was probably supposed to be the corpse that had been given burial. At any rate, no especial attention was paid to him, and he was being rapidly left astern.

Jack's main fear was that the Britisher, being in a hurry, would fail to pick him up even if he succeeded in attracting her attention. He was correctly in her line and with his white flag would likely succeed in making himself seen. She was nearly half an hour behind the Emden and losing. When a few hundred yards from him he waved his flag. He knew that he was seen, for he saw several persons pointing at him and evidently discussing him.

But Jack was horrified to see the ship proceed on her way without stopping for him. She had gone nearly a mile beyond him when a gleaming sight met his view. There was a boat being lowered. There were men in it and when in the water and headed from the ship they pulled toward him.

Jack was picked up, and the ship waited for the return of her boat. The commander was conscious of losing the Emden and had decided to save a man in the water. When Jack was taken in and he was plied with questions as to the German cruiser he could only say that she was the Emden and had aboard the crews of several vessels she had sunk.

Jack was put ashore at a South American port and determined that when he committed himself again to the deep he would go under the American flag. After waiting some three months he found a berth on a United States vessel and in due time turned up on his native shore. He says he is quite content with his experience as a sailor on the ocean in wartime and has no desire for any more of it.

FRENCH MISS COLORS

Colored Fighters Make Up For Vanished Red Trousers

The French piou-piou has hardly recovered from the surprise of finding himself without his scarlet trousers—it is always disconcerting to wake up to a lack of that kind—when he finds himself dubbed, by virtue of his present "protective coloration" a "diable bleu"—(a blue devil). One is not certain which would be the more correct phrase, "the enemy has got the blued evils," or " the blue devils have got the enemy." Both forms suggest a situation sufficiently disagreeable for the enemy. But, spite of the lost red trousers (byt the way, "The Lay of the Lost Red Trousers" would be far more pathetic than the Hymn of Hate), there is no lack of "color" in the French lines. Some of it is supplied by the sharpshooters from Morocco and Senegal, sons and nephews, some of these latter, of men who fought under Gallieni and Joffre fifteen or twenty years back, on the road to Timbuktu, which is even further off than Tipperary.

SHE GAINED 36 LBS.

Mrs. George bradshaw, Harlowe, Ont., writes: "I was troubled for many years with weak, watery blood and dropsy. I had nervous headaches, dizziness and sinking spells, and was, in fact, a semi-invalid. Doctors told me my heart and kidneys were diseased and gave me up. By using 10 boxes of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food I have been cured of many of my old complaints and gained 36 pounds in weight."

WHEN MEN WORE MUFFS.

Likewise Silk Stockings and Plaid Shawls and Capes.

In the good old days about which so many men so dreamily read and profess to reverence, and when men were believed to be more bold and dashing and daring than they are now, the muff was the thing of winter wear for men. It was a regular part of a gentleman's cold weather toilet.

Among Horace Walpole's Christmas gifts to his friend George Montagu, in 1676, were "Anecdotes of Painting," a pamphlet on "Libels," the "Castle of Otranto" and a muff. That was the period of the muff for men. It had been an article of men's apparel for many years before, and must retained the muff for long years afterward, it being cast off when men forswore colored silks and satins, rare laces and jeweled shoe buckles.

It was not so far back in American history that men wore silk stockings—not merely silk socks and knee garters and fancy garter buckles, and many men walking the streets of Washington today remember when their sex wore brilliant plaid shawls and when the cloth cape, called a "talma," was the height of masculine fashion. Now and then one sees a gentleman of the old school walking along with a gold headed cane and wearing a somewhat ostentatious tinsel or shiny "talma."—Washington Star.

BAND LED THE CHARGE

Heroic Musicians Perished to Inspire French to Conquer

Camille Decreus, the noted French composer and pianist, who served at the front until incapacitated by rheumatism, relates the following dramatic episode of the fighting in France: "It was at Vauquois that happened an incident that I suppose stands alone in this war, the charge of a regimental band at the head of troops Our men had three times attacked the Germans, and had thrice been repulsed. The colonel felt that a time for supreme effort had arrived. He summoned the leader of the band.

"'Put your men at the head of the regiment, strike up the "Marseillaise," and lead them to victory,' he commanded. The bandmaster saluted He called his musicians, and told them what was expected. Then the forty of them took their positions. Our line reformed The bandmaster waved his baton

"'Allons, enfants de la Patrie!' rang out, and the men took up the song. The band started out on the double-quick, as if on rapid parade. No musician carried a weapon. But they were carrying the 'Marseillaise' against the foe Then came the continuous rattle of the machine guns. The band marched on, their ranks thinning at every step. The leader went down The cornetists followed him. The drummers and their instruments collapsed in the same volley.

"In less than five minutes every man of the forty was lying upon the ground, killed or wounded, that is, with one exception That was a trombone player His whole instrument was shot away except the mouthpiece and the slide, to which his fingers were fastened He still blew and worked the slide It was only a ghostly 'Marseillaise' he was playing, but the spirits of his dead comrades played with him, and at the head of the regiment, and with that fragment of a trombone he led the way to victory. The trench was taken Half of the men had died on the field of honor."

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

Its War Time Aspect.

London, Eng. The women of England are doing their duty. They are taking care of the wounded, or if they cannot assist in work of that kind they are adding their savings to promote the good work. They are knitting and sewing for the soldiers at the front. The suffragists have given so little trouble to the government that it will undoubtedly soften the hearts of those in Parliament, since the "militants" have turned all their energies to aid the fighting men of England, and so sufferage may soon come after this terrible war is over.

Thousands of women in Canada have overcome their sufferings, and have been cured of woman's ills by Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription This temperance medicine, though started nearly half a century ago, sells most widely to-day, because it is made without alcohol or narcotics. It can now be had in tablet form as well as liquid, and every woman who suffers from backache, headache, nervousness, should take this "Prescription" of Dr. Pierce It is prepared from nature's roots and herbs and does not contain a particle of alcohol or any narcotic. It's not a secret prescription for its ingredients are printed on wrapper.

Many a woman is nervous and irritable, feels dragged down and worn out for no reason that she can think of. In ninety-nine per cent. of these cases it is the womanly organism that requires attention; the weak back, dizzy spells and black circles about the eyes, are only symptoms. Go to the source of trouble. When that is corrected the other symptoms disappear.

St. Thomas, Ont.—"I wish to say for the benefit of other women who suffer that I recommend Dr Pierce's Favorite Prescription as a great help. I have personally recommended the same to many who in turn have been helped a great deal by its use."—Mrs. F. J. Bowden, 19 Oliver St., St. Thomas, Ont.

WHAT IS COURAGE?

Heroes Fear and Fight—Some Never Experience Fear

The following interesting analysis of the quality of courage in connection with warfare, written by Claudine Clear, is given prominence by the British Weekly. We are living in a day of heroes and of heroism and we know it, but not as we shall know it by and by. In countless numbers our men are to the service of King and country. They belong to a nation wise enough to hate a dishonorable peace even more than it hates war. There are certain problems relating to heroism and to the first quality of the hero which is courage that are in many minds at this time.

What then is courage? The performance of a brave action does not prove the courage of the man who does it. A skilful rider to hounds take a very high fence which would disarm the ordinary horseman. There are those who would rather do anything than sleep in a haunted room. If they did such a thing with a view to testing the ghost story they would really be showing bravery of a very high and rare kind. I have seen it said that on the battlefield there are men so dull and unimaginative that they do not realize their danger. I am thoroughly incredulous as to the existence of such beings. Every fighting mans knows in his bones that he has a chance of dying and a chance of being wounded.

Sense of Duty Helps

But there are various kinds of courage, and it is not easy to say which is the highest. There is, for example the courage of soldiers who know all the risks they are running, and they reckon them very calmly, neither exaggerating nor diminishing. They are, however, perfectly fearless, because such calculations are wholly secondary in comparison with the great purpose that animates their minds. They are in the battle in order to do their duty, and their duty beckons them throughout.

There are others who do their duty perfectly, who shirk no danger, who are full of patriotism, but who are in what they call a "blue funk" before the battle and during it. They realize too distinctly what may happen to them, and are liable to invasions of terror which they manage to drive back. Which of these type are we to admire most? There can be little doubt that we admire most the imperturbably brave, those who are attired in a sudden brightness like a man inspired, in the fury of the contest. But perhaps I am confusing between admiration and moral approbation. We admire, I say, the calm and confident fighter whose inward thoughts are in perfect harmony with his outward actions. But may we not even more highly approve those who are fighting against themselves, against some natural weakness, against some tendency to apprehension, and who nevertheless go through all that war means without betraying by word or look or deed the faltering of their wills? Perhaps we admire most the gifts that imply no moral desert whatever. We admire great genius of rare and exalted loveliness. It is plain, however, that, strictly speaking, no moral credit attaches to the possessors of those enviable endowments.

Deep in their hearts men know that, as courage is the root of all good, to cowardice is the root of all evil. But in ordinary circumstances how many cowards go through without being discovered! It is only in a great national test that the sheep and the goats are parted.

The Best Treatment For Constipation

The Experience of One Who Knows and Places Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills First

It is not difficult to secure a medicine that will effect movement of the bowels. To cure Constipation and the complications which arise from it is another matter.

Constipation of the bowels is usually preceded by torpid action of the liver. Hence it follows that if Constipation is to be cured the liver must be set right. And here lies the secret of the success of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills. They awaken the action of the liver and insure a good flow of bile, which is nature's cathartic. The liver, kidneys and bowels are invigorated and regulated, and the troubles with the digestive system disappear.

Mr. H. M. Bell, Innisfail, Alta., writes: "For some considerable time I have been using Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills, which I have obtained through your firm. I suppose during my life I have used nearly all the best-known pills, as I have been subject to Constipation and digestive troubles. A friend recommended Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills, and I can honestly say that of all the pills I have tried nothing has suited me better for gripeless action always insured, and time for the kidneys. This is how I have found them after a thorough test, and you may use this statement if you like."

This letter should convince you of the merits of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills, but there is nothing like personal experience. If you do not feel like risking 25 cents for a box, write to us for a free sample box, mentioning where you saw this advertisement. Put this medicine to the test when you have indigestion, constipation, biliousness, backache or kidney derangements. The results will soon prove to you the superiority of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills. One pill a dose, 25 cents a box; all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Limited, Toronto.

EXAMINER PATTERN SERVICE

THE SIMPLEST OF DAINTY LINGERIE.

By Anabel Worthington.

When a woman is handy with her needle there is no reason in the world why she should not have the daintiest kind of undergarments. The nightgown is one article which lends itself especially to ornamental embroidery and to styles that are a little unusual. In the illustration we show how easily a simple crepe garment may be turned into a delicious Empire design merely by the addition of a bit of beading and ribbon where the high waistline would ordinarily be. Except for this artificial line the gown is all there is no division, for the material is cut in one piece, without even a seam at the shoulders, and with the short sleeves cut in one with the body of the gown. With material 40 inches wide it will not be necessary to seam the gown except where a very tiny little gore is added at the hem of the back piece.

The cap is also a one piece article, cut from a square of material, but with two corners rounded off and the two others left pointed, so that when it is gathered in a perfect round there are little pointed tabs over each ear. Some women like to make the cap of the nightgown material, while others prefer something different. The material used for the gown should influence the choice in this particular. Crepe fabrics, organdie and batiste can all be used for both gown and cap, but with silk a cap of lace or net will be prettier.

The pattern 7207 is cut in sizes 30 to 44 inches bust measure, being therefore small enough for misses' wear. To make both articles will require 4 yards of 40 inch material, 5¼ yards of edging, 3½ yards of insertion, 1½ yards of beading and 2½ yard of ribbon.

When ordering remember to give your name and address as well as the number and size of pattern required and age of a child.

Price 15 cents, or 2 for 25c.

RACED HALF WAY ROUND THE WORLD TO SEE SOLDIER HUSBAND

NEW YORK, Sept. 9.—A London cable to the Tribune says:

The story of how a young Canadian bride raced 15,000 miles from Tokio to London, across the Pacific, the American continent and the Atlantic to see her soldier husband for a few days, and of the curious string of mishaps that delayed her arrival so that she saw him for an hour only, is interesting and thrilling. London today.

The husband was adviser to a large timber concern in Canada. The honeymoon was hardly over when he was called away on a long job in England, where it was impossible to take his bride. After he had left, she decided to accompany friends on a trip to Japan. She had been in the Island Kingdom some time without hearing from her husband when she received a cable message stating that he had enlisted on the arrival at England, in a Canadian Regiment which had gone to the western front with one of the first drafts.

Making up her mind to see him immediately, the bride left Tokio the next day for the first leg of her world-encircling journey. Arriving in Vancouver she sent two more messages announcing the changes in accommodations on the steamship Philadelphia at New York, the other informing her husband at the front of her steps. Then she sped across the country in America's fastest trains.

When the husband received his wife's message he calculated that the liner would reach Liverpool on Saturday, and succeeded in getting leave from the trenches for Saturday, Sunday, and Monday.

Meanwhile the Philadelphia, her prow pointed eastward, was swiftly putting America far behind her, and the bride was happy. Three days out from New York, however, tantalizing delays began eating into the Philadelphia's schedule sailing time. First the liner had to stop to pick up a German passenger who had tried to commit suicide by drowning. Her husband in the British uniform, the bride could not quite pardon the Captain for this delay, and she began to be restless.

Then as the vessel was approaching the submarine war zone she picked up S. O. S. calls from the Hesperian and spent more valuable time looking over the sea for survivors. Next the ship's boilers went wrong just as she had entered the danger zone, and she stopped short and drifted [illegible]. And finally as a climax the Philadelphia reached Liverpool after all [illegible] on Saturday night, too late for the passengers to land. An Earthquake.

The horror of experiencing an earthquake has been set down by F. S. Lyman, who was in the Hawaiian Islands some years ago when there began a series of earthquakes on the southern flanks of a so called "quiet volcano":

"First the earth swayed to and fro from north to south, then from east to west, then round and round, up and down, and finally in every imaginable direction, for several minutes, everything crashing around and the trees thrashing as if torn by a hurricane, and there was a sound as of a mighty wind. It was impossible to stand. We had to sit on the ground, bracing with hands and feet to keep from being rolled over. The villages on the shore were swept away by the great wave that rushed upon the land immediately after the earthquake."—Exchange.

Peterborough Women Might Tell Hair Secret

A great many Peterboro women who have an abundance of beautiful hair know about a remarkable hair formula which every woman ought to know about. For a number of years Peterboro druggists have been continually called upon to mix this formula. Undoubtedly the use of this formula is largely the secret of the beauty and luxuriance of the hair of very many Peterboro women and men, too. The formula consists of six ounces of bay rum, two ounces of lavona de compose, and one half drachm of menthol crystals. Some people add a teaspoonful of perfume. A New York physician and a New York chemist were recently consulted regarding the efficacy of this mixture, and they both say that they know of nothing better to destroy dandruff, stimulate hair growth, cleanse and invigorate the scalp, stop falling hair, and to make the scalp fluffy and give it lustre. Any druggist can furnish the ingredients which you can mix at home or will mix them for you. Apply to the scalp night and morning and rub in with the finger tips.

DRIED CORN.

The following is a well-tested Southern recipe: Sew firmly into a quilting-frame a strong sheet. Gather the corn when ready for use, husk and remove silk. Put on in boiler, cover with water, and when it starts boiling let cook well for ten or fifteen minutes. Take off, allow it to cool some, then scrape and cut off, but not too close to have it chunky, and scrape off what remains on ear. Have your frame out in a sunny place, spread corn evenly upon it, cover with a mosquito netting and it will dry quickly in this way, as it dries from below just as fast as above. Then at some convenient time when the corn is piping hot put it in the oven to heat well through in order to kill any chance "microbe". When it comes time to cook the dried corn wash well in water. Put to soak in milk over night and cook in the milk it soaked in; season with sugar, salt, pepper and butter, and you will find it very good and know that it is clean.

Baked Peaches.

Pare six nice peaches and push out the stones, keeping the peaches whole. Stand them in a granite or china baking-dish; fill the cores spaces with chopped nuts; put a half-cupful of water in the dish, dust with four tablespoonfuls of sugar, and bake in a quick oven for 20 minutes, until the peaches are soft, but whole.

THE U. S. MAY BREAK WITH AUSTRIA

GERMANS ARE USING GAS AND FIERY LIQUIDS

RELATIONS BETWEEN U. S. AND AUSTRIA AT BREAKING POINT

Uncle Sam's Request for the Recall of Ambassador Dumba is Likely to Be Refused By Austria and He Will Be Then Handed His Passports, Breaking Off Diplomatic Relations—May Raise Similar Issue With Berlin.

GERMANY'S ARABIC NOTE DISAPPOINTMENT

WASHINGTON, Sept. 10.—The relations between the United States and Austria-Hungary were strained to the breaking point to-day.

A breach between the two countries, which may sever all diplomatic relations, but not necessarily result in war, was reached.

The Administration's request on Vienna for Ambassador Constantine Dumba's recall, it was admitted in high circles, was pregnant with possibilities of an open break with Austria.

If his government refuses to recall Dumba this country will hand him his passports.

If the Administration is forced to dismiss Dumba it was regarded certain that American Ambassador Penfield, at Vienna, would likewise receive his passports, ending diplomatic relations between the two countries.

There was good ground for the belief that the Austrian Government will back Dumba and force a more serious issue than merely the elimination of its envoy.

The news of the Administration's request regarding Dumba created a furoro in diplomatic circles.

The possibility was suggested that a similar issue would be raised with Berlin on the use by one of the officials of the Kaiser's embassy of the services of the American correspondent, Jas. F. Archibald as a messenger for official documents.

If Austria supports Dumba by insisting that it was not only his right, but his duty to warn Austrian subjects against continuing work in American war supply plans, a crisis will be reached.

It was unofficially stated to-day that the President was most reluctant to act against Dumba, desiring to avoid a breach with Austria, particularly at a time when relations with her ally, Germany, are already strained over the Arabic case.

The United States has also been acting as Austria's representative in the countries at war with the Teutonic allies.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 10.—Secretary Lansing said to-day that the United States will wait "a reasonable time" for Austria to comply with the request for Dumba's removal. Intimation was plain that the Government is prepared to hand Dumba his passports if Austria does not respond.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 10.—The German-American tension over the sinking of the Arabic and also the Lusitania, was partially revised to-day.

It became known that the Administration is greatly disappointed at Germany's new position in the Arabic case. The disavowal by Germany of liability to make new reparations for the lives lost on the Arabic, and inferentially ,on the Lusitania, too, the officials admitted, presents a fresh dispute which may embarrass the settlement of negotiations over the general subject of submarine warfare.

Prospects to-day were that the United States Government will send a note in reply to the Arabic communication which will sharply indivate the United States' displeasure over Germany's new stand.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 10.—The German statement that the Kaiser was "unable to acknowledge any obligation to grant indemnity in the Arabic case," was believed in official circles to be entirely unacceptable.

The added clause that this was the German view "even if the 'submarine' commander should have been mistaken as to the aggressive intention of the Arabic," was looked on as making matters even worse.

If "mistakes" were to be accepted uniformly as justification for unwarned submarine attacks on passenger ships, there might, it was pointed out, be an indefinite continuation of such "accidents."

News has been received that another note had been handed by the German Foreign Office to Ambassador Gerard.

It was thought likely the second communication was an amplification of the submarine warfare discussion, which, as had already been noticed, was touched on very light in the message received here.

LONDON, Sept. 9.—Field Marshal Sir John French, Commander-in-Chief of the British army in the field, has sent the following report on recent operations:

"There has been no change in the situation since my last communication. There has been mining activity on both sides without important result. Our own artillery and that of the enemy has been active east of Ypres. Elsewhere on our front conditions are normal.

"A German aeroplane was brought down by rifle and machine gun fire on September 1, falling close behind the German lines southeast of Hooge. A second German aeroplane on September 5 was brought down by one of our fighting machines. It fell behind the enemy's lines opposite the southern portions of our front."

LONDON, Sept. 10.—Thirty-seven persons were killed in the Zeppelin raids on London Tuesday and Wednesday nights, it was officially announced this afternoon.

Four persons wounded in Tuesday night's raid died last night and early to-day.

The bodies of three persons recorded as "missing" following the Tuesday night raid, were found beneath debris of wrecked buildings to-day.

LONDON, Sept. 10.—A portion of the London press to-day demanded that the Allies make retaliatory raids upon the larger cities of Germany, naming Strassburg and Cologne as within striking distance of the French lines.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 10.—Since the European war began America's relations towards the Teutons have not been more awkward than they were to-day. Officials confidently admitted as much this afternoon.

There have been times when actual hostilities between the United States and Germany seemed nearer, it was said, but at no time have complications been so numerous.

To-day there were at issue between three governments—the American request for Ambassador Dumba's recall; the Washington Government's interrogation concerning Austria's interference with American industries; and the question of the extent to which Captain Von Papen, the German military attache was involved in the J. F. J. Archibald incident.

BUFFALO, N.Y., Sept. 10.—Firing by snipers at sentries and patrols of the 44th Canadian infantry at Ridgeway and Crystal Beach, Ont., during the last few nights, has given the soldiers a taste of one type of warfare. In all cases the soldiers have returned the fire, but so far no one has been hurt.

The soldiers believe men in a motor car did the shooting.

ATHENS, Greece, Sept. 10.—Since the landing of the Allies on the shore of Suvla Bay, there has been continuous artillery and infantry fighting, with heavy losses on both sides. Fresh ground of immense importance has been gained by the Australian and New Zealand forces.

The British are advancing a few yards daily and the Australians are now in full view of the waters of the Dardanelles.

REFUSES TO PAY INDEMNITY FOR ARABIC'S VICTIMS

Germany's Note to the United States Merely Expresses Regrets That Lives Were Lost In Sinking of Liner

"AFRAID OF AN ATTACK"

BERLIN, Sept. 9. — Germany's note to the United States bearing on the sinking of the White Star Line steamer Arabic on Aug. 19, which was communicated to the American Ambassador, James W. Gerard, for transmission to Washington, is in the form of a memorandum under date of Sept. 7, the text of which follows:

"On Aug 19 a German submarine stopped the English steamer Dunsley about 16 nautical miles south of Kinsale, and was on the point of sinking the prize by gun fire after the crew had left the vessel. At this moment the commander saw a large steamer making directly towards him. This steamer, as developed later, was the Arabic. She was recognized as an enemy, as she did not fly and flag and bore no neutral markings.

"When she approached she altered her original course, but then again pointed directly towards the submarine. From this the commander became convinced that the steamer had the intention of attacking and ramming him. In order to anticipate this attack he gave orders for the submarine to dive, and fired a torpedo at the steamer. After firing he convinced himself that the people on board were being rescued in fifteen boats.

"According to his instructions the commander was not allowed to attack the Arabic without warning and without saving the lives unless the ship attempted to escape or offered resistance. He was forced, however, to conclude from the attendant circumstances that the Arabic planned a violent attack on the submarine

Fired on by a Liner.

"This conclusion is all the more obvious as he had been fired upon at a great distance in the Irish Sea on Aug. 14—that is, a few days before—by a large passenger steamer, apparently belonging to the British Royal Mail Steamer Packet Company, which he had neither attacked nor stopped.

"The German Government most deeply regrets that lives were lost through the action of the commander It particularly expresses this regret to the Government of the United States on account of the death of its citizens.

"The German Government is unable, however, to acknowledge any obligation to grant indemnity in the matter of course, the arbitral decis should have been mistaken as to the aggressive intentions of the Arabic

"If it should prove to be the case that it is impossible for the German and American Governments to reach a harmonious opinion on this point, the German Government would be prepared to submit the difference of opinion, as being a question of international law, to The Hague Tribunal for arbitration, pursuant to article 38 of The Hague Convention for the pacific settlement of international disputes

"In so doing, it assumes that, as a matetr of course, the arbitral decision shall not be admitted to have the importance of a general decision on the permissibility or the converse under international law of German submarine warfare."

RUSSIANS WIN AGAIN

Follow Up Their Decisive Victory at Tarnopol—Slavs Have Captured 150 Officers and 7000 Men in Galicia

ENEMY IN RETREAT

LONDON, Sept. 9.—An official communication received from Petrograd to-night announces another big success for the Russians in Eastern Galicia. Following their victory at Tarnopol it is stated that south-west of Trembowla during the 7th and 8th the Russians took as prisoners 150 officers and 7,000 men, and that the Teutons retreated hastily toward the River Stryps.

The communication adds that the Russian captures since Sept. 3 on the Sereth front total 383 officers and over 17,000 men and a great quantity of guns.

A despatch from Vienna says it is officially announced that the Austrian landwehr cavalry entered the fortress of Dubno, in the Lutsk-Dubno-Rovno triangle of fortresses yesterday. Dubno, with a population of some 15,000, is in the government of Volhynia, on the Ivka River, a short distance north of the East Galician frontier. Lutsk, another of the forts of the triangle, was taken recently.

From the Gulf of Riga to Olita, south of Kovno, the Germans state the situation is unchanged, while their centre from that point to and beyond the Pripet marshes continues to advance Thence to the Roumanian frontier the Russians are still the aggressors; they are endeavouring to prevent the invasion of Bessarabia. On the whole the Russians appear, with fresh supplies of ammunition, to be making a better stand. They are aided, doubtless, by the rains which are turning the roads, especially in the region of the Pripet and its affluents, into quagmires.

Conditions Are Unusually Severe

Work of Constructing the Outfall Sewer Presents Many Difficulties

Ald. Green, chairman of the Board of Works, has invited the members of the City Council to familiarize themselves with the work that is being undertaken in connection with the sewerage disposal scheme. At last night's meeting of the Council Ald. Greer urged every alderman to visit the south end of the city and inspect the work The conditions under which the outfall sewer is being constructed are unusually severe and the work is costing a large amount of money. Ald Green assured the Council that the cost of the work was being kept within the bounds of the estimate. The excavation is about seventeen feet deep. The work has now reached a point to the south of the Exhibition grounds.

SOLDIER BOYS AT BALL GAME

Men of the 80th Are the Guests of Manager Frank Shaughnessy at Riverside Park This Afternoon

TO-DAY'S MILITARY NEWS

The members of the Peterborough detachment of the 80th are the guests of Manager Frank Shaughnessy this afternoon at game between Ottawa and the Cuban Giants. Manager Shaughnessy visited the armouries this afternoon and extended the invitation, which is, to say the least, highly appreciated by the men of the battalion. Headed by their own band the soldier lads paraded to Riverside Park at 3.45 p.m.

To-day's orders contained the announcement that Col. Sergeant Jack Williams of No. 3 Company of the 57th Regiment, is appointed acting company quartermaster sergeant of the local detachment of the 80th He succeeded Col. Sergt. Fred Howarth of No. 3 Co. when the latter went to the front with the 2nd Battalion

The squad, under Sergt Oxley, which is to give an exhibition of physical drill at the Peterborough Industrial is making fine progress. They practised the movements to music furnished by the 80th band to-day.

Kingston Standard: Lieut. Huycke of the 33rd Battery is getting the baseball players of his battery in good shape, and they are prepared to challenge anything in sight to a game of baseball. Judging from the work they were doing yesterday any team that tackles them will be kept busy defending their honours, and even the city teams would have a lively tussle.

The 59th Battalion will attend church parade at St. John's church on Sunday morning.

Mr. Burnham, M.P., received a very cordial wire from Sir Sam Hughes this morning, and left for Ottawa on the Mayor Bolton Avenue car and the meeting went to Ottawa on the 11 o'clock train to meet Mr. Burnham with him and "the boys" there.

In reply to wires from the members the military secretary expresses great surprise that recruits for the 80th have not been supplied with uniforms as he says he had given orders to that effect some time ago. The director of contracts confirms this statement, but the local officers say they have had nothing about it. The matter will be attended to at once.

Y. M. C. A. NOTES

Saturday afternoon at 2 o'clock the members of the Boys Department will meet at the building for the purpose of distributing flowers to the sick of the city. Every member is requested to take part in this noble work of cheer and brighten the lives of those who are sick.

The gymnasium schedule has been drawn up and everything is in good shape for the opening of the classes.

A special feature of the work this year is the organization of a leaders' corps for the different grades of boys. The boys making the best showing will be chosen as leaders. This means that the boys will have to get an early start in their classes, which commence Monday Sept 20th.

HIS FINGER CUT BY SAW

Mr. E. Leonard, Mark street, an employee of the Vermont Marble Co., was the victim of a painful accident yesterday afternoon while at work in the company's plant. In some manner his left hand came into contact with a saw, with the result that his fingers were badly cut. He is now in St. Joseph's Hospital.

TRIP TO LAKE HAD MANY WOMEN AND CHILDREN

A street railway conductor expressed the opinion to-day that the excursion crowds this year would compare favourably with last year's. The morning quite a number of women and children took the Geneva's special trip to Rice Lake. Apart from other considerations this is a later trip than in recent years and splendid weather was provided. Doubtless the women carried their knitting bags even on a recreation outing. On Labour Day every boat is said to have had capacity crowds and many persons were turned back. The main feature of a September sail is the autumnal beauty that borders the river and lake.

Progressing Favourably

OTTAWA, Sept. 10 Sir Wilfrid Laurier is to-day progressing favourably after the operation at Water street hospital. Temperature normal and he rested well the night through the night.

Germans Use Gas Bombs and Fiery Liquid in Furious Attacks on French Positions—Assaults Were Fruitless.

TWO AVIATORS KILLED

PARIS, Sept 10.—Two French aviators, bent on a raid on German positions in Alsace, met death when they collided with a barbed wire fence as they were landing, causing their bomb cargoes to explode, according to Geneva despatches to-day.

The mountain slopes west of Colmar were the scene of furious fighting throughout last night. At Lingekopf, Barrenkopf and Scratzmaenele the Teutons launched heavy attacks in efforts to dislodge the French from their positions.

At Scratzmaenele the Germans drove the French from their trenches on the lower slopes by spraying streams of fiery liquid over the parapets. An impetuous charge by the French "blue devils" hurled the enemy out of the captured works with heavy losses.

Near Hartmannsweilerkopf, the French front was attacked with gas bombs and the Chasseurs forced to retire. When the gas had been swept down the slope they attacked and retook the positions.

The Germans continued their attacks in the Argonne. Trench fighting with grenades and bombs was particularly violent around Vienne Le Chateu and Hararee during the night, but without important results. The artillery duel around Arras and in the Champaigne region continued throughout the night.

French aviators bombarded German batteries at Nonnebruck and the railway stations at Lutterbache and Grand Pre during the night

FRIDAY, SEPT. 10, 1915

THE CZAR'S INFLUENCE.

We shall now have an opportunity of seeing how, what the French call, morale, affects the fighting qualities and capacity of an army. The Czar of Russia has placed himself at the head of the Russian army, nominally, at least, replacing Grand Duke Nicholas. The Grand Duke has won glory in the masterly strategy by which he has safely withdrawn from difficult positions. But something more than that is needed; he must come back, and though he has done that before, it seems a little difficult now. Coming back is the need of the hour. We all know the blind devotion of the Russian people for the "Little Father," as they affectionately call their Czar. His presence at the head of the army will likely give a tremendous impulse to the loyalty and enthusiasm of the people as a whole, and nerve anew the arms of the soldiers of the army, giving one the fighting spirit and capacity for fighting of two or three. It will be a disappointment if the Czar at the head of the Russian armies, will not, his influence cooperating with a more abundant supply of "dry powder" — available munitions of war—give a new aspect to the titanic struggle in the east of Europe.

SUPPOSE.

Suppose that a British ambassador to the United States, had acted as Dr. Dumba, the Austrian ambassador has done — conspire to subvert United States industrial institutions and "disorganize and hold up for months the manufacture of munitions," and deliberately plot to depose the Government of the United Sattes to the extent of overturning its policy, by bribery with "foreign gold"—the diplomatic guest of the country corrupting the source of government and defying the people it represents. A few years ago a British ambassador Sackville, West, permitted himself to say a few imprudent words in a private letter, and a tremendous row was raised; in nautical language there "was the devil to pay and no pitch hot"—for it was in the piping times of peace, and the alleged outrage affected only a matter of petty local politics. For a few words, which derived their chief gravity from United States sensitiveness, his recall was demanded. Now we have the same government, and same people, meekly submitting, so far, to something far more damaging than a few diplomatically undesirable words —to overt acts of conspiracy against the material fundamentals of United States interests, her industrial integrity and its control by the government and people. What would be the conditions, if, in the present case, the Austrian ambassador had been the British ambassadar? The different attitude of the United States under the circumstances would be excusable. The government and people of the United States expect diplomatic decency from Great Britain; but regard Teptonic diplomacy, which takes the form of conspiracy against the sovereign power of the people, as the system of outlaws. The United States has stood a good deal at the hands of the Hun, but fires up at an inconsidered word from its kinsmen and the father and fountain of all the liberties it enjoys. There must be a limit to the complaisance of Uncle Sam; and it is not difficult to give credit to the despatch received this morning stating that the Austrian ambassador has received his "walking papers."

AN EMINENT EXAMPLE.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier is a Grit and he deserves the name. He shows his grit by doing his bit as zealously, and more zealously than many younger men. The grand old man of Canada has nearly scored his seventy-fourth year, and he is still in harness, after nearly half a century of strenuous political life; still holding a steady poise as party leader, public-spirited publicist, and staunch friend and defender of the interests of Canada and the Empire. At an age when he might be expected to welcome rest and relaxation of effort, and though as regards the country he holds no official position and incurs no official responsibility, he is actively engaged addressing recruiting meetings, and making a sacrifice such as few younger men can be found to make. At the last meeting he addressed, a few days ago at Napanee, he was suffering so greatly from an ulcerated jaw, that he was compelled to interrupt his address for a few minutes' rest. Then he pluckily resumed his speech and made a strong appeal to the manhood of his audience to join the ranks in the interests of the Empire. As an evidence of Sir Wilfrid's sacrifice in doing his duty under distressing circumstances, his disease was found to be so serious that yesterday he had to submit to a surgical operation in an Ottawa hospital; and the country will be glad to learn that it was successful, and the distinguished patient is doing well, and has every chance of a good recovery. From the spirit Sir Wilfrid has shown, we should not be surprised, nor disappointed, in seeing him again on the platform doing his bit to stimulate recruiting and furnishing a living example of high sense of duty—a man of seventy-four showing the way, in this regard, to the man of twenty-four. Rabid partizanship, which impeaches Sir Wilfrid's national origin, and flouts his loyalty, has its crushing answer in his great personality, his life as citizen and statesman, and his fight to the last breath, for the interests of the Canada and Empire he loves so well, for the integrity and maintenance of the British institutions, he has made the charter of his political faith and the animating influence life.

"THE COUNCIL CHAMBER."

The Examiner willingly gives space to the following communication, sent in under the heading "The Council Chamber":

As usual, when the Editor of the "Examiner" rises to criticise somebody's conduct, good or bad, he appears incapable of expressing himself otherwise than in scornful or extravagant terms, and this often with little cause indeed. On the present occasion, the "Examiner" states that it is proposed to exclude all organizations, but the City Council, from the restored Council Chamber. Such was not the suggestion of the City Trust, nor I am quite certain, intended by the City Council, but instead, the respectful proposal of the City Trust was in the words of my letter to the Mayor, to "reserve its use for the Council nad other departments of City Government," and it was not fair to pass remarks on the incorrect data, when the correct were at hand, just that the Editor might enjoy the satisfaction of having a fling at some one. "City Government" I take it, would include, as it was intended to do, and cover the various public interests of the city, but not of those who contributed nothing to the new furnishings, nor will they, towards keeping it in proper and decent order, but who mostly when they close their meetings, leave the Chamber in much disorder, the last thing they seem to think of being to make clean what they have soiled. For particulars in these respects, I am pleased to refer you to the caretaker of the Chamber. The object of the City Trust in what they have done, was not only to give the Chamber in your words, "an approximate degree of decency," but to regulate its use so that decency should continue to prevail.

Yours truly,
W. H. MOORE.

Sept. 10th, 1915.

The Examiner has, notwithstanding the above indictment, a tenable defence, which is not a defence in the sense that there is anything to recall or apologize for. The published report was used, and that gave the impression, which was evidently shared by the aldermen, that the suggestion regerred to, was to generally exclude all bodies except the City Council from use of the Chamber. On that understanding alone, the comments complained of were made, not in "scornful or extravagant terms," but in language considered necessary to emphasize the true idea of the relationship of public servants to the public. There was nothing personal in the comments; the necessary mention of names only being used in an official sense. Mr. Moore himself admits that some exclusion was intended; for he complains of the disorder left after some meetings, which give the caretaker—as if that were not his business—something to do. It is impossible to conceive a meeting of "those who contributed nothing to the new furnishings." The Examiner's only object in making the comments complained of was with a view of asserting the rights, and promoting the interests and welfare of the citizens who constitute the city and who all, from the babe in arms to the heaviest taxpayer contribute, indirectly or directly, to the furnishing of the Council Chamber and all the material possesions standing in the name of the city.

A REMARKABLE PARADOX.

A remarkable paradox is offered by the statement as to Russian losses given out at Berlin by the Overseas news agency. Since May 2 it is said, the number of Russians directly engaged has been 1,400,000. But in the fighting since May 1, 1,100,000 men have been captured and 300,000 killed or wounded, this is a very conservative estimate. It may be conservative, but none the less it provokes curiosity that the total Russian losses should exactly equal all who have been engaged, and that there should none the less be still a Russian army in the field. Is it not engaged or were the men wounded or captured not engaged? If it had been said that the Russian forces on May 2nd came to 1,400,000 the riddle would be easy to solve up, it is not so clear now how all the Russians who have taken part up to the present can have been disposed of while fighting still goes on along several extended fronts.—Springfield Republican.

A CLERGYMAN'S DROP.

The new clergyman was sent for by an elderly woman. "Oh, sir," she said, "I hope that you will excuse my asking you to call but when I heard you preach and pray last Sunday you did so remind me of my poor brother who was took from me that I felt that I must speak to you." "And how long ago did your poor brother die?" asked the clergyman sympathetically. "Oh, sir, he isn't dead," was the reply, "he was took to the asylum."

Economy in Expenditure; Expenditure in Right Ways A Measure of Patriotism

Premier Asquith, Mr. Lloyd George and other British statesmen are constantly preaching at this time the necessity of economy on the part of the whole British people in order that "the war of exhaustion" may not go against the Allies. The parliamentary commission on thrift is preaching the same thing. This question is discussed elaborately in The Round Table for September, in which the necessity for national economy is presented in the following succinct statement.

The financial problems before all the belligerents are, speaking usually identical. The first concerns particularly the respective governments. They are incurring huge expenditure; their credit is being more and more strained; how are they to raise from their people the immense sums required? The second concerns the financial position of each nation as a whole, including its government, in relation to other nations. Most belligerent nations, the Allies to an enormously greater degree than their opponents, are buying from foreign countries far more than they can pay for by the ordinary means at their disposal. They usually pay by exports, but their exports have to a great extent ceased. How are they to pay? The question is of vital importance. A man who buys what he cannot pay for is bankrupt. If, finding himself near Queer street, he can effect a revolution in his way of life, and live on his own resources he can recover. If he cannot live on his own resources and yet cannot pay for what he must have, his position is clearly not enviable. A nation is not different.

The war expenditure of all the belligerents is gigantic, and for all of them, therefore, the most rigid economy is necessary to escape exhaustion. But for two reasons it is more vital for this country than for any other. Both our total expenditure and our foreign obligations are undoubtedly greater than those of any other country.

The writer in the Round Table then proceeds to review the enormous expenditures which Great Britain has to meet, and particularly the fact that every dollar sent out of the country, whether for shot and shell or for the necessities or luxuries of the home, leaves the country the poorer to that extent. Furthermore, the fact that Great Britain pays every soldier 1s 2d a day, while the German soldier only receives 2 1-2d and the Frenchman only a half-penny, means that Great Britain is handicapped by her greater liberality to her fighters unless the soldier saves his money to lend it to the government. The same is true of the contractor, the shipowner, the shell-maker, and every other man in the country who is making money out of the war. Every day not less than £2,000,000 is paid by the British Government in the form of payments to contractors, pay to soldiers, separation allowances, and in countless other ways. If those into whose pockets this huge stream of wealth flows save and lend it again to the state, well and good, but if they spend it on themselves they are doing no less harm to their country than the man who runs away in battle. Brantford Expositor.

Germany's Economic Stress Forcing Her to Seek Premature Peace

In all the peace proposals —or, as one English paper calls it, the peace intrigue which Germany is fostering through her Press Bureau, one main idea is always insisted on, namely, that Germany must in some way be compensated for all the blood and treasure she has expended. That seems to be the chief anxiety of Germany now. The prospect of getting nothing is a staggering one to her, and well it might be, for Germany is in the position of a man who has borrowed heavily on a highly problematical windfall. She started out in the sure and certain hope of crushing France and Russia and fattening herself on enormous indemnities. The prospect of an early victory along these lines have long ago been shattered, and Germany is now fighting solely for "terms," the said terms being some form of more or less adequate compensation.

Meanwhile economic dangers of considerable magnitude confront her. She has to depend almost entirely on her own resources, but as the New York Journal of Commerce rightly says:

"That these are extremely rich and varied does not alter the fact that they are undergoing a process of gradual exhaustion. Foreign markets which cost Germany so much time and pains to acquire are temporarily closed to her. Of an export trade of $2,500,000,000, only a fraction remains. The import trade, of somewhat larger dimensions, is practically dead, and with it has disappeared about $170,000,000 of customs duties. The mercantile marine of the Empire, in point of tonnage the second in the world, is lying idle in port, while that of Great Great Britain is pursuing its normal course."

If Germany were making any appreciable headway against the superiority of the British fleet, these economic difficulties would be of minor importance. But as time goes on, and Germany sees the prospect of any kind of victory becoming fainter and fainter, the economic problem becomes for her the most menacing feature of the situation. It means that peace, without compensation, will have to result in sweeping and heavy new taxation for a people already taxed to the limit for armaments. Only in that way can Germany preserve herself from national bankruptcy. Our contemporary already quoted remarks on this point:

The world has already forgotten, but the German taxpayer has not, that before the war a special levy was imposed for the purpose of facilitating the execution of the new army law. This was a graduated tax, both on property and income, and it fell heavily on the owners of big fortunes and on the richer incorporated companies. The necessity for heavier taxation is the more to be dreaded in Germany because of the collapse of her foreign trade. For while the manufacturer is earning very much less, he is being called upon to pay very much more.

These considerations will indicate how desperate are the efforts for a peace which will afford "compensation," and how terrible is the thought of mighty long-drawn-out efforts with nothing to look forward to but defeat. Montreal Herald-Telegraph.

WEALTHY WIDOW WAS MURDERED

New York Scene of Brutal Crime —Rings Stripped From Dead Fingers

NEW YORK, Sept 10. Half the police detectives in New York are at work trying to find who murdered Mrs. Elizabeth Nichols, a wealthy widow, and looted her house of a small fortune in jewels. Mrs. Nichols, after a desperate struggle was strangled to death in her home on East 70th street just off Fifth Avenue in the heart of the millionaire residential district.

The murderers stripped the diamond rings from the woman's fingers and tore valuable jewels from her ears. It was reported that they carried away a strong box containing jewels worth several hundred thousand dollars. Regarding the phase of the crime however, the police were reticent and no definite announcement has been made as to the value of the booty.

It was known however, that Mrs. Nichol's collection of jewels was worth nearly half a million dollars and the key to the casket that contained them was missing from the place where she always had worn it on a ribbon around her neck.

The murdered woman was the widow of James E. Nichols, one of the founders of the wholesale grocery house of Austin, Nichols and Company. She was sixty years of age. When her husband died a year ago he left her property valued at nearly $2,000,000.

Owiny Talas, a Russian Finn, for two and one-half months a hall boy in the home, was arrested today after he had confessed, the police assert to having played a part in the crime. He was formally charged with the murder.

"I Am Going to Find Out"

"I have been reading and hearing about Columbia Records so much and so often--that I am going to decide right now for myself whether they are better recorded and have a better and more lasting surface than any I have ever heard.

"I have been told time and again that they will fit my machine, and that there are hundreds of Columbia Records at the standard price of 85 cents. I am going to prove it.

"Within a very short distance of where I am right now there is a Columbia dealer. And I am going to see him. I own a talking machine, and if there's anything new or better in the way of records, I want it."

Now you've said it---do it.

CELEBRATED THEIR GOLDEN WEDDING

Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Lonergan, two of Asphodel's most well known and esteemed residents celebrated their "Golden Wedding" on Tuesday at their residence, "Sunnyside Farm." The occasion was a most festive and enjoyable one to the family and many guests, who were present from different points in Ontario and the United States. Among the number was their bridesmaid of fifty years ago. Interest was further added by the attendance of another bridal party — one of the sons and his bride, viz., Joseph of Toronto, whose marriage to Miss Gertrude White of that city took place only on the day previous. The other seven sons, Michael, Thomas, William, James, Frank, Fred and Egbert, were also present, and two daughters, Mrs. J. Ryan and Miss Ellen, besides several grandchildren.

The attractively set and decorated wedding dinner and supper tables were taxed to their capacity with the most bountiful array of edibles. Short speeches were given by the Rev. Father Galvin the local pastor, and Rev. Father McNulty, of Owen Sound, and Rev. Father Fitzpatrick of Emsmore, and Mr. James Lonergan of Toronto while a reply was also elicited from the genial groom. Norwood Register.

God Save Our Men!

Australia has a new version of "God Save the King"; not a substitute for, but a supplement to the National Anthem. The lines are sung at the close of "God Save the King."

They are the first attempt yet made to successfully adapt the metre and tune and general sentiment of our National Anthem to the conditions and circumstances of any overseas Dominion. They are as follows:

God save our splendid men!
Send them safe home again!
God save our men.
Keep them victorious
Patient and chivalrous
They are so dear to us,
God save our men.

The lines were printed in the Argus Extraordinary, and they are the production of Mrs. Nester Blennerhassett, one of the Red Cross ladies attached to the Hospital Carrier Yacht Grianaig, owned by the Earl of Dunraven.

URIC ACID SUFFERING.

Uric acid is an accumulation of poison which finds lodgment in the system when the kidneys fail to remove it from the blood. In the kidneys and bladder it forms stones, in the joints and muscles it causes rheumatism. In any case the pain and suffering is almost beyond human endurance. Uric acid is promptly removed from the system when the kidneys are kept healthy and active by using Dr Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills.

Russia Has Large Reserves Of Fine Fighting Material

LONDON, Sept 8. The new that the Tsar has called to the colours young men of nineteen years might lead to an erroneous conception in other countries than Russia with a Russian correspondent, who has been in touch on official subjects. It might seem, he says, that all the reserve of men from 20 to 24, the age at which, according to Russian law, one is exempt from further military service, have already been exhausted. It would be so in Germany or France, but it is quite different in Russia.

The Russian law of compulsory military service, introduced in 1874, and reconstructed in 1912 entirely excludes from compulsion the only son of a family, as well as the tallest, if he is the only breadwinner. These are called in extreme necessity. Thus, while the young men of nineteen years of age are now in training there are plenty of capable and strong men between twenty and forty who are not yet called. Every one who can goes to Russia during the war has noticed how many vigorous porters are on duty at each station, the cafés restaurants and the like are full of waiters of serviceable age.

Roughly speaking, the population of Russia is about 170,000,000. According to official statistics persons between nineteen and forty amount approximately to twenty per cent. If women and unfit are excluded, there will still be at least 5,000,000 available for military service and quite fit. It may be estimated that at the commencement of the war about 4,000,000 were mobilized. Even on the German estimate of Russian losses we have already nearly exhausted [illegible] present moment.

[illegible] of nineteen years [illegible] approximately 4,000,000 [illegible] 20,000,000 [illegible] present moment. There are still three million young men available for service. The War Minister has said in the Duma that the second rank of the Opolchenie will also be immediately called up. This means that persons up to now exempt from service will have to serve.

Great as these reserves are, they by no means represent all the fighting material of which Russia is possessed. There are whole tribes, mostly nomads on the Ural, the borders of the Caspian Sea and in Turkestan, that are exempt from the service. There are many reasons for this, the chief being that military service in Russia is considered a the most honourable career for the country. The members of the staff of the Army Corps are not even the honour. However, the late General Skobeleff the hero of the Russo-Turkish war has already urged that many of these tribes being born horsemen could render valuable service, especially on outpost duty.

During the present war an experiment has been made by introducing the Turkoman cavalry, and it has proved a splendid success. This drew the attention of the Russian military authorities to another tribe, the Kalmuks. It is probable that these also will be called for the defence of the common country as they are very anxious to take part in the war, and lately sent a petition to the Tsar demanding to be enlisted.

These Kalmucks [illegible] horseback when other tribes [illegible] steep. Their chief occupation is [illegible] so that they [illegible] almost impossible to introduce discipline among them so as to make them regular troops. But as irregulars they might excel even the Cossacks. The Cossack when he does not serve, is an agriculturist. The Kalmuk is attached to a horse; sometimes a robber and also a [illegible].

Russia has at her disposal a [illegible] also [illegible] of the Grand Duchy of Finland. Well known Finland had her own army up to 1902 when for political reasons it was dissolved [illegible] Tsar. The army formed [illegible] of Russia in 1863, [illegible] of Poland and in 1877 [illegible] Russo-Turkish War [illegible] one of the most [illegible] When this war [illegible] of the four Finnish [illegible] accepted the Tsar and [illegible] Russian regiments [illegible] ready have been killed [illegible] some have received [illegible] gallantry during the [illegible] General [illegible] commander of Osowetz [illegible] fortress which for eight months withstood all German attacks [illegible] Finnish subject.

It has now been decided to ask the Finnish Senate for recruits to fight for the common Fatherland. Possibly the Finnish army will be restored to its former numbers. In that case about half a million men fully trained, would be available. Certainly Finland will demand some guarantee for the restoration of her complete autonomy.

RICHARD HALL & SON LIMITED

21 DECLARATIONS OF WAR SINCE 1914

COLOGNE, Aug. 20, 1915—Since the beginning of the great war, which now enters its second year, the following twenty-one declarations of war have been made, says the semi-official Cologne Gazette.

July 28, 1914—Austria-Hungary on Servia.

August 1, 1914—Germany on Russia.

August 3, 1914 — Germany on France.

August 3, 1914—Germany on Belgium.

August 4, 1914—Britain on Germany.

August 5, 1914 — Austria Hungary on Russia.

August 6, 1914—Servia on Germany.

August 11, 1914—Montenegro on Austria Hungary.

August 11, 1914—Montenegro on Germany.

August 11, 1914—France on Austria-Hungary.

August 13, 1914—Britain on Austria-Hungary.

August 23, 1914—Japan on Germany.

August 25, 1914—Austria Hungary on Japan.

August 28, 1914—Austria-Hungary on Belgium.

November 2, 1914—Russia on Turkey.

November 3, 1914—France on Turkey.

November 5, 1914—Britain on Turkey.

November 7, 1914—Belgium on Turkey.

November 7, 1914—Servia on Turkey.

May 23, 1915—Italy on Austria-Hungary.

August 22, 1915—Italy on Turkey.

Owing to the fact that on the side of Germany's enemies altogether eight States are standing, twenty-four war declarations should have been made. There are three lacking—namely, Italy has not yet declared war on Germany, and Montenegro and Japan have declared war only on the two central Powers. Diplomatic relations between Montenegro and Turkey have been broken off. Between Japan and Turkey there were no diplomatic relations before the war.

"PEG O'MY HEART"

Playgoers who have seen "Peg O' My Heart" and may wish to see it again, as well as those who have never seen this tremendous success will do well to take advantage of the forthcoming appearance of Oliver Morosco's production of the Manners' comedy, which will be seen at the Grand next Monday, Sept. 13.

In organizing this season's "city" company, the one that appears here, Mr. Morosco has assembled a cast that he believes to be superior to any that has ever appeared in this popular play. Rea Martin, one of the latest "finds" will be seen in the title role, supported by several members of the New York cast, and it is worthy of note that critics everywhere proclaim the performance to be superior to any that has been seen either outside or in New York.

HITTING THE SPOT

We advertise in newspapers because they hit the spot we want to reach—says a large manufacturer of chewing gum.

His particular spot was a later consumer demand that would result at the counters of retailers and call for his product by name.

His sales were multiplied over and over again and his brand is now a household word.

What newspaper advertising has done for the manufacturer it will do for any other manufacturer with a good product.

It will not only hit the spot of consumer demand, but it will also directly influence dealers in favour of that product.

AN APPEAL ON BEHALF OF THE PATRIOTIC FUND

We have now entered upon the second year of the war, and the end seems as far off as ever. No one imagined, a year ago, that by September of 1915, Canada would have sent across the Atlantic nearly one hundred thousand men with as many more to follow, if necessary. This magnificent enlistment, while primarily due to the loyalty of our people, has been, in a large measure, made possible by the Canadian Patriotic Fund.

This greatest of all the national benefactions is now assisting twenty thousand families of men who have enlisted for over-seas service. These men have gone forward with the full assurance that the people of Canada will see to it that during their absence, their wives, widowed mothers, and little children shall be maintained in comfort. We hear that the drain upon the Fund is assuming large proportions, that to meet the needs of July and August $700,000 was expended, that the reserves are being materially decreased, and that the national Executive Committee now finds it necessary to make a further appeal to the Canadian Public.

There are many funds, most of them worthy, but of them all the Patriotic Fund is the one we cannot allow to fail. It is the duty of the Government to arm, equip and maintain the troops. Not a dollar do the Federal authorities give to the Patriotic Fund. This work depends solely on the patriotism and generosity of our own people. Thousands of brave men are holding our battle lines believing that we meant what we said when we told them as they went forward. Go and we will care for the wife and children. It would be to our everlasting shame if these sacred pledges were broken.

The national organization with headquarters at Ottawa and branches or affiliated associations in every part of the Dominion, is worthy of our most generous support in the months and years to come. Back that it has undertaken.

Germans in Warsaw Take Hostages and Put Several Citizens to Death

PETROGRAD, via London, Sept. 9.] A prominent Polish lawyer, who made his escape from Warsaw after its capture by the Germans, made the following statement today:

"Two days after the Germans entered the city more than four hundred of the most prominent citizens who remained were arrested without warning or interrogation and sent to Germany. About seven hundred families were deprived of their heads and of knowledge of their whereabouts.

"Arrests continued daily. The only known reason was that the names of the victims appeared on a list compiled by informers and sent to Germany months ago.

"The Germans displayed their usual thoroughness. Within a few days after they entered the city three temporary bridges were thrown across the Vistula in place of the structures blown up by the Russians. The electric light, gas and water plants were restored and there was early evidence of industrial activity. A house to house search was made and every copper vessel was confiscated. Metal was stripped from many places in which it had been left.

SIGNIFICANT LETTER FROM AUSTRIAN IN N.Y.

The following is from the New York Herald and is self-explanatory:

To the Editor of the Herald:

The United States newspapers are very smart to say the 2,500,000 Austro-German reservists here should go help their country. Must you know? We help our country all our time here, in more ways than one. I have sent home from my savings already enough to buy a nice little farm, but one quarter what we would have to pay here. H. C. FREUND.

Commander of German Submarine To Be Honoured With Wooden Statue

COPENHAGEN, via London, Sept. 8.—The next popular hero in Germany to be honoured by the erection of a wooden statue, which will be converted into metal by gold, silver and iron nails contributed by admirers, will be Captain Otto Weddigen, who commanded the submarine U-9 when she sank three British cruisers in the North Sea last September—and who later lost his life while in command of the U-29.

The Kiel Zeitung, which announces the project, says the monument will be erected at Kiel. The model of the U-9 will be made of the Kreppe and will be unveiled on September 22. The proceeds from the sale of the nails which will be hammered into the soft wood until the model is covered with them, will be devoted to the relief of distress in East Prussia.

MORAL PRESSURE TO BE USED ON SLACKERS

LONDON, Sept. 9.—It is officially announced that a Government committee under the chairmanship of the Marquis of Lansdowne, which was recently appointed to advise as to the best method of using national registration for the successful prosecution of the war, has agreed upon an interim report dealing provisionally with the conditions under which the registration returns from men of military age will be available by use of the departments concerned. The report also indicates approximately the classes which in the public interest should not be approached by the recruiting authorities.

The foregoing is regarded as confirming reports of a prospective recruiting campaign by moral pressure. Men of military age have been classified from the registration returns and their records entered in special pa[illegible]

The GRESSMAN Company Limited

DEPOSIT CHEQUES WILL BE RETURNED TO PAVING COMPANIES

This Action Was Decided Upon at a Special Meeting of the City Council That Was Held Last Evening—More Money Needed For Sewer Construction Owing to Difference Between Capital Cost and Fixed Rate.

Two deposit cheques representing sums of six thousand dollars each will be returned to the Standard Paving Company of Ottawa and the Warren Paving Company of Toronto, respectively. A resolution to this effect was passed at a special meeting of the City Council that was held last evening. City Solicitor Gordon said the return of the cheques would not invalidate the contracts now existing between the city and the two companies named. No provision was made for the return of the cheques at the time the contracts were drawn. The matter rested with the Council.

Mr Gordon was asked by Ald Stratton if he would recommend the return of the cheques. The City Solicitor replied in the negative.

Ald Stratton suggested that it was the duty of the City Solicitor to advise the Council. To this Mr Gordon replied that the matter of returning the cheques was a matter of municipal administration.

On motion of Ald Edgar and Ald Saunder it was decided to return the cheques. City Engineer Parsons informed the Council that the work completed by the paving contractors was considerably in excess of the amount represented by the cheques.

Sewer By-law.

At Tuesday night's meeting of the City Council a by-law respecting certain sewer debentures was presented, but owing to a request made by Ald Stratton for further information concerning the matter involved, the third and final reading was delayed. The matter was revived at last night's meeting and after some discussion City Solicitor Gordon was instructed to take the matter before the Chairman of the Railway Board and endeavor to have the necessary changes made. It appears that in the year 1912, the Council passed a by-law fixing the cost of constructing sewers at one dollar and four cents a foot. One half of this was chargeable to property owners and the remainder to the city. When the annual assessment respecting the cost of constructing sewers subsequent to the passage of the by-law was made, the by-law was given effect whereas the actual cost of constructing such sewers increased each year. The assessment for the city's share of the work should have been made in accordance with the capital cost of construction, whereas it was based on the original rate of fifty-two cents as specified in the by-law. In one year since the passage of the by-law the cost of constructing sewers increased by fifteen and a half cents. This increased cost was not provided for when debentures for the work were issued so that to-day the city finds it necessary to provide an extra four thousand five hundred dollars to cover the difference. This spread over a period of thirty years amounts to one hundred and fifty dollars a year.

According to the explanation made by City Engineer Parsons and City Clerk Armstrong, the city will not have to pay any more had the assessment been based on the capital cost instead of the amount specified in the by-law. Whereas in one year the capital cost figured out at sixty-seven cents a foot, the rate of fifty-two cents as specified in the by-law was given effect when the assessment was made.

It was intimated that it might be necessary to have the by-law repealed. The reason for passing a by-law introducing a fixed rate was to establish the cost of sewer construction to the property owners, as it represents a public service from which the city derives a benefit.

Dr. Frederick Sees Queer Life in East

Dr. E. V. Frederick in a letter to remembrancer from Alexandria, Egypt to Dr. S. P. Lee of Norwood writes:

"How little I thought a year ago I would be here now. Such a lot of life I might have missed. Imagine for instance yesterday I saw a man take a pail to wash his hands and feet before saying his prayers at noon before us all and the next minute another drinking out of the same pail. SACRIFICED SKIN TO SAVE GIRL'S LIFE

Chicago Fireman Yields Up Over Hundred and Fifty Square Inches

CHICAGO, Sept. 10—When Edward J. McNamara engineer of engine company No. 101, Sixty-ninth street and Justine Avenue, decided to take his summer furlough he did so for the purpose of sacrificing more than 150 square inches of his skin to save the life of a child he had never met until he was taken into her presence in the children's ward at Mercy Hospital.

He is now recuperating at his home 695 Yale Avenue. Katherine the 5 1-2 year old daughter of James Beggs, a board of trade operator 7347 Kenwood Avenue, is the sufferer for whom Engineer McNamara made the sacrifice.

Ten weeks ago the Beggs child's frock caught fire from a gas stove, and before a maid could reach her she was badly burned. Her left leg from her knees to the thigh, was a mass of blisters.

Relatives Volunteer.

Physicians decided skin grafting would have to be done if a recovery was to be assured. The father of the girl offered himself, as did William Green and John Burns, uncles of the girl. Burns, who is a fireman, mentioned the subject to his station mate, McNamara, and the latter became interested. He is married, but with no children of his own. With Mr. Beggs and Green and Burns, they visited the doctor.

The operation was performed by Dr. John Golden. Each of the men asked to be accepted. Each was given a physical examination. It was found that while each was in good health, yet McNamara proved the better subject.

In less than half an hour the suffering girl was prepared to undergo her part, while on a cot near by the sturdy fireman lay ready for the scalpel. Each was given an anaesthetic, and the transfer of the strips was successfully made.

Can't Get Too Many Socks Writes Nurse

Miss Helen Fowlds of Hastings and a graduate of the Norwood High School, has written an interesting letter to the Hastings I.O.D.E. from France where she is a nurse in one of the British military hospitals. Miss Fowlds acknowledges the receipt of a consignment of socks and says they are much needed. Wimereux hospital, in which she is engaged, is a clearing station, and the patients are sent away to England or Rouen as soon as possible to get ready for the next rush. In one instance four hundred men were admitted in less than twelve hours and in less than twelve hours they were all gone. At the hospitals they exchange uniforms for new ones, if necessary. They hand in their underwear and receive fresh and a pair of socks. She says: "We can never get too many socks. I hope you will thank every one who knitted a pair of those socks and tell them that they are blessed by the soldiers." Norwood Register.

WRITTEN JUST BEFORE ST. JULIEN, LETTER HAS JUST ARRIVED HERE

The following letter from Pte. Stuart Hayes of the Peterborough detachment, 2nd Battalion, although evidently written on the eve of the battle of St. Julien, has only recently been received. Pte. Hayes, who is a son of Judge Hayes, now of Guelph, is a prisoner of war in Germany.

His letter is as follows:

Dear Aunt L. Just received your letter and was more than glad to hear from you. We are all having a rare old time to-night reading home papers, which have just arrived. A good deal of amusement was caused by reading an account of a 3rd contingent regiment running for home because they did not like sleeping in a canning factory. If they could only see some of the billets, which are on the whole splendid, but a canning factory in a city would be a palace. One we went into had part of the roof blown off and the walls full of bullet blown off and the walls full of bullet blankets. Everyone laughed and thought it a whale of a joke. If could see the sights and things that we see here every day, he would not wait for any such things as armoured cars, but enlist in the first regiment handy. We passed a long line of refugees yesterday, old men, women and children, the women crying and all carrying what little was left of their belongings. I think every man said a little "prayer" for the Kaiser. I have not seen Hugh or Harold lately and do not know when I shall.

You should see us in our war paint (as you call it) when we come out of the trenches for a rest, unshaven and unwashed, covered with mud, marching as if the next step were the last, but it's a great game for all of that. Just now about a dozen big guns are playing a lively waltz and Pat Fritzi is dancing to the music. Tell uncle will soon give his best to Kaiser Bill and be home to give him a hand.

With love to you and all,
STUART.

SULTAN BLAMES GERMANY FOR DESERTING TURKEY

LONDON, Sept. 8.—The Times' Mytilene correspondent, in a despatch printed recently, gives what he says are the particulars of the first call of Prince Ernst von Hohenlohe-Langenburg, Acting German Ambassador to Turkey, to the Sultan in Constantinople on August 10. "Prince Ernst," says the despatch, "had to listen to a string of complaints and reproaches. The Sultan taxed Germany with indifference to the fate of the Ottoman Empire, which, he said, had been abandoned by its allies bereft of munitions and money, and was sustaining single-handed the desperate and unequal struggle in the Dardanelles and the Caucasus, whereas Emperor William had promised to come to Turkey's aid."

"Prince von Hohenlohe-Langenburg, completely taken aback by the Sultan's outspokenness, replied that German action in the Balkans had been delayed because the Central Powers had had to devote their main strength to the Eastern front."

CHAUFFEUR THINKS HE SHOULD HAVE $500 A YEAR

TORONTO, Sept. 9.—To ascertain whether he is entitled to an annuity of $500 or a legacy of that amount Ignace Peruzzini has filed in the Surrogate Court a caveat against the will of Mrs. Amy Gertrude Cox, widow of the late Senator George A. Cox, being probated.

This document has been filed, according to an affidavit, to ascertain whether the "alterations and interlineations appearing on the will were made before or after completion and execution of the said will."

Peruzzini was the deceased's chauffeur and, according to the construction placed upon the will by the National Trust Co., executors, he receives the house at 93 Bleecker street and $500. The trust company says that the will contains a direction to pay to Peruzzini $500 yearly, but that it is questionable whether the yearly payment has been legally and effectively made by the will.

The original will, which has been filed, reads: "The sum of $500 to Ada Rowe, now living with me as my maid. The sum of $500 to Alfred Ward, my gardener, and the sum of $400 to Ignace Peruzzini."

Since the will was typewritten it has been interlined and now these clauses read: "The sum of $500 to Ada Rowe, now living with me as my maid, and the house and land known as 71 Wineva avenue, Toronto, for her sole benefit." The next sentence, providing for the bequest to her gardener is struck out and the will continues.

The house known as 93 Bleecker street, and the sum of $500 to my chauffeur, Ignace Peruzzini, yours, Amy G. Cox."

In an affidavit Mr. T. Malone, one of the witnesses to the will, says that there were when he signed the document no alterations or interlineations as now appear.

Filed with the will are three codicils, the first written October 1, 1912 gives a list of household goods, which the testatrix had purchased with her own money, and which were contained at 430 Sherbourne street. These are to be divided between two sisters, Irene Cockburn and Marie Sterling.

The other codicils written by Mr. Cox on February 3, 1914 set out the furniture in each room of her residence and provide for its distribution. One of these documents written on a page torn from a ledger

EFFICIENT WORK ACCOMPLISHED BY THE MERCANTILE MARINE

The responsible part played by the Mercantile Marine in the present war was discussed in an address delivered the other day at the Sailors' Club in Montreal by Captain Walsh, Marine Superintendent of the C.P.R. Atlantic Steamships. "At one time," said Captain Walsh, "it was considered that on account of the officers and men being distributed all over the globe, the number procurable at short notice would be so small that their value as a naval reserve would not be very great. On this account, a short service scheme was created in the naval service, from which men passed into the Royal Fleet Reserve, and through it an immediate reserve was always available. It was found, however, that directly the R. N. R. was called upon, they flocked to the rendezvous in such numbers that it was difficult to place them all. Not only did they return from ships all over the world, but also in very large numbers from positions on shore, even from farms on which they had settled in Western Canada and other places. Of these men, however, it may be said they only did their duty. That is quite true, but it is the way in which they did it that calls for special appreciation, and they have earned the right to special consideration after the war.

"The British Admiralty were considerate, and, where possible, allowed the masters and officers to remain in their ships. In a general way the steamship owners did not suffer so badly as was generally expected. When we consider there are probably over 2,000 captains and officers of the Mercantile Marine, and, including men employed in the trawlers and other mine laying and mine sweeping operations, considerably over 20,000 men with the work of the ocean-carrying passenger and freight services going on as usual, it is indeed an honour to belong to a service that has done such excellent work for the cause of Right, Justice and Freedom.

"I can readily understand how men feel. They, like ourselves, would rather be dead than be ground under the heel of a relentless foe and forced to learn the 'Goose Step.'

"The work done by the armed merchant cruisers, whose crews were mostly R. N. R. and Mercantile Marine men, also calls for special praise. In September last the SS. 'Carmania' and 'Cap Trafalgar' met in fair fight, evenly matched. The 'Carmania' was commanded by Captain Noel, R.N., with Captain Barr, second in command. The Britons' skill at his own work secured them the victory in a little over one hour's battle. The 'Carmania' was holed in over 300 places, being hit by almost 100 projectiles. Lieut. Murray, late Chief Officer of the Canadian Pacific SS. 'Lake Manitoba,' was working a gun on the forward decks, when a projectile struck the forward winch, a splinter from which struck him down, injuring his spine. He is one of the many whom this dreadful war has maimed. Captain Barr was gazetted a Companion of the Order of the Bath.

"Over 50 vessels were commissioned as armed cruisers. The 'Orvieto' was with the 'Monmouth' and 'Good Hope' under Admiral Craddock. The 'Orama,' a ship of the Orient Line, was with one of the vessels that cornered the 'Emden.' The P. & O. 'Macedonia' was with Admiral Sturdee at the Falkland Island fight and helped to sink the 'Baden,' and the steamers 'Isabel Transport' and the 'Empress of Japan,' of the C.P.R. captured the collier 'Oxford' when served the 'Emden.'

"Mercantile cruisers suffered much from one reason and another. The 'Oceanic,' early in the war, stranded in a fog. The 'Bayano' was torpedoed with all on board, and was indeed a sad loss as she was mostly manned by R.N.R. seamen and fishermen of the Newfoundland branch of the R.N.R.

"Probably the most dangerous and comfortless of all the naval and auxiliary naval services is the mine sweeping and mine laying fleet manned almost altogether with R. N. R. officers and mercantile seamen and fishermen. An officer (Lieut. Boothby), late of the C.P.R. service, was blown up on three different occasions and escaped. He has since been decorated by the King. In May, Lieut. Sub. Lieut. Kerseley, R. N. R., commanding the trawler 'Mentor,' with three other armed trawlers, engaged two German torpedo boats. Sub Lieut. Kerseley rammed one of them, the Germans then fled, but were chased and overhauled and sunk by a division of fast destroyers. This latter affair was carried out by the trawlers with a coolness worthy of the best traditions of the R. N. and showed the bull dog fighting value of the British seaman. Without doubt, the mine laying and mine sweeping fleet on account of their specially dangerous duties, deserve perhaps a greater measure of praise and appreciation than any other unit of the service.

"With regard to masters, officers and men who were not in the R. N. R. and who were free agents at liberty to do what they liked, no praise would be too great. They have done their wives, their children and their country a service. The German submarine 'U21' not 'Hotzendorf' them; they knew they had a duty to their country, to their homes to their wives, their children and their parents, but they put their Country's honour first and left home and friends, to man their ships and to transport troops, ammunition, horses and food-stuffs the world over, not to England or the British Isles only but also to the several distant parts of the world in which the Empire and her Allies were fighting for their God their Country and their Ideals. Apart from all this the masters, officers and men of the Mercantile Marine have done some excellent effective patriotic work. Take the case of the SS. 'Hostilius.' Captain Bell, when chased by a submarine, instead of running away, turned his ship round and rammed her, leaving one less pirate to prey on unarmed, helpless ships carrying in some cases between 1,500 and 2,000 women and children whom the Huns would ruthlessly murder without giving them a chance for their lives.

"The officers and men of the Mercantile Marine take great pleasure in knowing that the Admiral, Sir John Jellicoe, in supreme command afloat of His Majesty's Naval Services, is the son of a ship master of the British Mercantile Marine, and one who gave the people whom he served for a long number of years extreme satisfaction, and who always stood out as a fine example of the British Mercantile Marine ship master.

"Many of the great steamship companies of to-day were built up from a very small beginning by men who themselves, the Allans, Johnstons and others too numerous to mention are very notable examples.

"Before closing I would quote one more notable example of the cool courage, pluck and devotion to duty which was shown by Captain Parslow and his officers, while in the 'Anglo-Californian,' carrying horses for the British Admiralty. The ship was overhauled by a German submarine but the commander refused to surrender and endeavoured to outmanoeuvre the pirates. For four hours the Germans bombarded the defenceless 'Anglo-Californian' and Captain Parslow was killed. Then she hove to and was an officer under him assumed command and piloted the ship to Queenstown.

"The 'get, quickly' notice, which seems to be the established time given to abandon a ship and take to the boats is red colour, as it would take fully an hour in fine weather with all boats ready to get say 1,500 women and children into them. If the ship was still carry on, even continuing themselves to the sinking of ships after the warning is given the promise to the United States would be of no value whatever," was clearly understood that time sufficient to get all

CITY HALL PARAGRAPHS

His Worship Mayor Butler, Ald. Edgar and Mr. J. H. Burnham, M.P., are in Ottawa today in connection with Peterborough's claim for military recognition.

"Brevity is the Soul of Wit."

"Brevity" was easily the feature of last night's meeting of the City Council. Some of the aldermen acted as though they were still suffering from the after effects of Tuesday night's oratorical contest.

A Distinction With a Difference.

City Solicitor Gordon is willing to advise the Council, but he declines to "recommend," believing that such a course constitutes a question of municipal administration. This point was raised last night.

WITH OTHER MUNICIPALITIES.

The City of Guelph has decided to investigate the prices charged the city by certain firms for materials and supplies for the sewers and works department, and also the construction of the macadam pavement which was laid last year on Waterloo avenue.

Will Acquire Railways.

Definite steps for the acquisition of the street railway lines in Windsor, Walkerville, and Sandwich by the municipal interest will shortly be taken at the recommendation of the Ontario Hydro Commission meets with the approval of the Councils of the three town ship

Work For the Police.

The Hamilton Harbour Commissioners have announced that arrangements have been made whereby city police would attend to the checking of passengers carried on boats plying between that city and Toronto, and also the ferry boats running between that city and Wabasha Park, to prevent overloading.

Main Building of the Millbrook Exhibition Will Not Be Rebuilt This Fall

MILLBROOK, Sept. 10.—A meeting of the directors of the Millbrook Central Exhibition was held, when it was decided to defer until next spring the reconstruction of the exhibition buildings that were destroyed by fire a few nights ago. Two large tents will be secured for the coming show.

The necessary repairs will be done at once and everything put in good order for the fall fair. There was an insurance of $700 on the building burned.

ODD COINCIDENCE IN GASOLINE PRICE

BAYONNE, Sept. 6.—The Standard Oil Company has granted an eight-hour day to all its operatives, thereby sacrificing $10,000 a day.

New York, Sept. 7.—The Standard Oil Company has raised the price of gasoline twenty cents a gallon, thereby increasing its profits by $25,000 a day.

SUCCESSFUL PICNIC AT CHANDOS CHURCH

Rev. Father Meagher of St. Mary's Church and His Congregation Provided Big Day for a Large Crowd

The annual picnic under the auspices of St. Mary's Church, Chandos, in honor of Rev. Father Meagher, parish priest, was held on Wednesday, Sept. [illegible] the church grounds. The event proved a pronounced success in every respect. It was a perfect day, and the country side from as far as Peterborough [illegible] Lakefield was represented. Lunch was served on the grounds, and a sports programme which included many events of a novel character was carried out. The various committees had the affair in charge, and were ably assisted by the ladies of the congregation.

The success of the picnic was reflected in the addresses of a number of speakers who were the centre of a large audience. Rev. Father McFadden of Westben, Mr. Davey Campbell, ex-Reeve Chantler, Mr. Fred Barker, the present reeve, and Rev. Mr. Coburn, of one of the Peterborough churches, were the principal speakers. In their addresses they congratulated St. Mary's parish and Rev. Father Meagher on the success of the picnic. In reply, Rev. Father Meagher acknowledged these compliments and expressed his appreciation of the attendance of so many of the residents of Chandos. The financial returns were about $1,000.

SAFETY IN PASTEURIZED MILK

"Is pure milk better than purified milk?" "It is; but it is so difficult to get pure milk that our only real safety lies in pasteurization."

"What is the solution of the milk problem?" "Inspection and pasteurization. We need inspection to keep milk clean, we need pasteurization to render milk safe."

Ottawa Team Won First Game of Series From Giants

Four-time Champions of the Canadian League Look Stronger Than Ever—Beat Coloured Team 6 to 1 in Yesterday's Game.

WILL PLAY TO-MORROW

Frank Shaughnessy - Ottawas, who cannot break themselves off the habit of winning the Canadian League championship, opened their three-game series with the Cuban Giants yesterday at Riverside Park by beating the coloured team 6 to 1. The Giants who had been riding on the train since early morning, were in poor shape, but did the best they could considering their condition. They look like a good team and will likely give the Senators a battle in the next two games.

Ottawa has a grand team, undoubtedly the best that Shag has piloted in the Canadian League, and that is saying something. The infield is fast and clever, and with Shag, Powers and Bashang, the outfield leaves nothing to be desired. The veteran "Freddy" Payne, the ex-Detroit star, is still a fine catcher as his all-round work yesterday showed. He pegged nicely, cracked out two solid hits and made several fine running catches of foul flies. Roberts, who pitched yesterday, was a mystery to the Giants, who collected only four hits.

Barnes, the third baseman, and Mallette at second, did some nice fielding for the coloured team, the former's stop of Shag's smash over third base, being the feature play of the day. Smith, who performed on the rubber, had nice speed and good control.

"Ha Ha" Leavell, who made his appearance on the coaching lines late in the game, had a brand of chatter that kept the crowd thoroughly amused.

To-morrow's game is called for 3 o'clock with Shocker pitching for Ottawa.

Ottawa practically won the game in the first innings. Bashang opened the session by beating out a bunt and stole second getting generous assistance from Umpire Belting. Dolan was hit in the shins. Fuller forced Bashang at third with a tap to the pitcher, but Bullock came through with a crashing double to right centre, scoring two runs. He tried to stretch it to three bases, but was nipped on a fast relay. Shag ended the innings with a grounder to Smith.

Two more were counted in the second. With two out, Payne singled through the box and Roberts doubled to left scoring Payne. The play was made to the plate, and the veteran catcher looked out by feet, but Belting called him safe. Then Land dropped Bashang's fly and Roberts scored. The left fielder went out stealing to wind up the fracas.

Payne opened the fifth with a ringing double to left, advanced on Roberts' infield out and scored on Bashang's sacrifice fly. Dolan's fly to Barnes ended the innings.

In the sixth, with one out, Bullock singled and stole second, scoring on Shaughnessy's timely smash. Smykal fouled to the catcher in trying to sacrifice and Powers rolled to Barnes.

The Giants' only run was put over in the fourth. With one out Barnes drew a pass. Land flied to Bashang, a nice catch by the left fielder, but Mallette planted a pretty single along the right field foul line, sending Barnes to third. Then Mallette caught the Ottawa infield asleep with a delayed steal, and when Bullock heaved one high over second, Barnes counted.

The score:—

LAWN BOWLING

The fob contests have rounded the last turn and there remain only about a dozen more games to play. Each team is playing remarkably tight bowls and it is very seldom Mr. Bowler lays down a poor shot. J. Maynard's rink are leading with six to their credit and T. Brightman's is next with four.

Mr. Brightman defeated Mr. Dayman last eve with the final score 10-8. A very close, tight game. Mr. Brightman had a five end, and even with that, the score at the finish was less than the number of ends.

T. Brightman	0	0	0	1	0	0	2	2	0	10
W. Dayman	1	1	1	0	1	0	0	1	1	8

At a meeting of the bowlers after the games it was decided to hold a patriotic tournament to help the patriotic societies on Monday and Tuesday, the 20th, and 21st of September. The original tournament teams will play as they were in the early season games. This means a full two nights of grand bowling and they will certainly be chuck full of enjoyment for everyone. The tournament directors request that every skip get after his men and have them on the green, ready to play, sharp at 7 o'clock next Monday week.

812 TOTAL DEAD IN EASTLAND DISASTER

CHICAGO, Sept. 9.—Final tabulations made public by the coroner's office show that 812 persons lost their lives when the steamship Eastland, with 2,500 on board, capsized in the Chicago River July 24. Of this number 451 were women and 361 men. Of the total, 226 were married and ninety-eight were under sixteen years old.

Announcement is made that the $360,000 relief fund will be distributed among the relatives of the victims this month.

Stock Markets

Application was made to the New York Stock Exchange to list the Guaranty Trust Company's and the Old Colony Trust Company's interchangeable certificates of deposit for $40,000,000 preferred and $20,000,000 common stock of the American Woollen Company.

The property of the Du Pont de Nemours Powder Company was formally sold to the new Du Pont company in accordance with the arrangement for the financial reorganization of the corporation announced some weeks ago.

Contrary to expectations the stock of the International Nickel Company was not listed on the New York Stock Exchange Wednesday. Quotations for the shares were marked up ten points on Tuesday in anticipation of the listing.

Directors of the Western Union Telegraph Company declared a quarterly dividend of 1¼ per cent. on the company's stock, placing it on an annual basis of 5 per cent., as compared with the previous rate of 4 per cent.

The stockholders' committee of the International Steam Pump Company of which Lewis L. Clarke is chairman, announced that it has not approved the efforts of the Hawkes committee to get preferred stockholders to oppose the proposed reorganization of the company.

Five hundred stock cars have been ordered from the Pullman Company by the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway.

Under the reorganization of the M Rumely Company the new corporation, according to press despatches from La Porte, Ind., will be known as the Advance Rumely Company.

Stock Exchange circles were greatly interested in the decision of the Massachusetts Public Service Commission reported in the case of the sale of Stock Exchange quotations. According to the decision, no discrimination can be made by the New York Stock Exchange in the sale of its quotation service in Massachusetts. A case similar to that decided in Massachusetts is to come up before the Public Service Commission in this State next month.

Wabash Bonds Assessed.

The joint reorganization committee of the Wabash Railroad Company gave notice to holders of certificates of deposit issued by the Equitable Trust Company and the Central Trust Company, representing the first refunding and extension mortgage bonds that they are required to make payment by October 8 next of $651.92 for each $1,000 bond, the pro rata share of the underwriting payments received under the plan of reorganization. This heavy charge against the bonds was due to the fact that holders of only four per cent of the railroad's stock were willing to pay the assessment called for under the reorganization scheme.

Good Greek Currant Crop.

Consul A. B. Cooke, who is stationed at Patras, reports to the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce that there is every prospect of a good Greek currant crop this year, in spite of rumours of injury to the fruit from bad weather and disease. Reports from the principal growing provinces show the crop satisfactory both as to quantity and quality. It is believed that the present year's crop will amount to about 150,000 tons of dried fruit, or about 2,000 tons more than the supply available in 1914. It was expected that all of the 1914 supply would be exhausted by late August.—New York Times.

SEPTEMBER IN NATURE'S WILDS.

Algonquin Park, 250 miles west of Montreal and 200 miles north of Toronto, is 2000 feet above sea level and offers attractions to those desiring rest and recreation that no other place in Canada does. September is one of the most delightful months of the year in this 2,000 square miles Government reserve. A good hotel, the Highland Inn, affords comfortable accommodation at reasonable rates. The fishing this month is at its best. Ask any Grand Trunk Railway Agent for handsomely illustrated descriptive literature telling you all about it.

The official Gazette has announced that Sir David Beatty has been promoted to be a vice-admiral.

RED CROSS RENDERS DETAILED ACCOUNT OF STEWARDSHIP

The regular monthly meeting of the Peterborough Branch of the Red Cross Society was held in the Teachers' Room at the Public Library on Thursday afternoon, the President being in the chair.

The minutes were read and confirmed.

A letter was read from Surgeon-in-Chief Ryerson, stating that he would lecture in Peterborough on Friday evening, Oct. 25, when it is hoped there will be a large attendance of all citizens to hear this prominent worker in the Canadian Red Cross Society.

The Treasurer reported as follows:

July 14th, total receipts	$3022.94
By new members fees	115.00
Sale of material	51.94

3 dozen first-aid bandages
3 flannel shirts
7 1-2 dozen eye sponges
1 cake
1,578 rolled bandages

The Publicity Committee reported a trip to Millbrook with an address on Red Cross work by Mrs. John Allin.

No report from Committee regarding the jam shower which is to be held Sept. 20th to 25th inclusive, but all citizens are reminded to make preparations of jam for our sick and wounded soldiers.

A nominating committee was appointed to bring in names for officers to the annual meeting to be held in October.

It was decided to send $1000.00 to headquarters this month.

Resolutions of hearty thanks were unanimously carried to the Peterborough Floral Co. for their kind donation of flowers and for the loan of their store from which to sell them on Saturday, Aug. 28, and also to citizens who contributed towards this sale; and to Mr. J. E. A. Fitzgerald for his most generous cheque for $250 sent to the Red Cross Society this week.

The meeting was closed by singing the National Anthem.

Miss Minnie Webster spent Monday in Peterborough.

FIRST SHIPMENT

The first shipment from the South End Auxiliary of the Peterborough Red Cross Society was forwarded last week. It consisted of 126 1-2 doz sponges, 10 doz rolled bandages, 10 many tail bandages, 273 compresses, 8 pair sox, 4 night shirts.

WEDDING BELLS

McINTYRE—VARLEY
The marriage took place in Toronto on Wednesday of Miss Gertrude Varley, to Mr. Jacob Spence McIntyre, son of Ald. A. A. McIntyre, of Peterborough. The ceremony, which was held at the home of the bride's parents, was performed by the Rev. J. D. Morrow, Pastor of Dale Presbyterian Church.

GOACHER—MARSHALL.
A very quiet wedding was solemnized at the home of the bride's sister, Mrs. Joseph Rawnsley, 32 Majory avenue, Toronto, on Tuesday, Aug. 31st, 1915, when Miss Sadie E. Marshall, formerly of 284 Brock street, Peterborough, and Mr. John Goacher, were united in holy bonds of matrimony by the Rev. J. M. Scott of St. John's Presbyterian church, Toronto. The happy couple, who were unattended, will reside at 18 Shuddell avenue, Toronto.

DALY—GIBBONS.
A very pretty wedding took place this morning at 6.45 o'clock in St. Patrick's church, when the Very Rev. Dean Bloomer united in marriage Irene Frances Daly, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James F. Daly, of Peterborough, Ont., Canada, and Walter H. Gibbons, of 861 Davis street, this city. A nuptial high mass was celebrated and the beautiful solemn ring service of the Catholic church was performed. During the mass Mr. Bambury sang "Oh, Promise Me," and the "Ave Maria." They were attended by Miss Sarah Gibbons and James Hughes.

The bride wore a myrtle green tailored suit and a black picture hat. She carried bride's roses. The bridesmaid, Miss Sarah Gibbons, wore a dark blue tailored suit, black hat with black plumes and carried pink roses. A wedding breakfast was served at the home of Mrs. Thomas Gibbons, after the ceremony.

Mr. Gibbons is a well known business man of this city, being a member of the firm of Gibbons & Furey, and Miss Daly is a popular nurse of this city, and a graduate of St. Joseph's hospital. Mr. and Mrs. Gibbons left at 9.25 o'clock over the Lackawanna for an extended trip to Canada. They will be at home after September 21st at 475 Wellesley—Elmira, N.Y. Herald.

Missing Since Ypres Now Regarded Dead

It was learned to-day that Mr. Arthur White, Sr., of Albert street, has received a communication from the Militia Department to the effect that her son, Arthur White, who has been missing since the 24th of April, is regarded by the authorities as dead. Private White was a recruit, three chosen from the 2nd Battalion. Nothing has been heard from him since the battle of Ypres. His relatives and friends have not yet given up all hope. As a result of the Militia Department's decision, Private White's pay which has been coming to his mother, will cease.

BIG MEETING WAS SUCCESS

North Monaghan Gathering Honoured a Bright Young Pupil and Also Heard the Call to the Colours

SOME FINE ADDRESSES

There was a [illegible] in North Monaghan on Thursday night when the presentation of the watch given by Mr. Bonnerman for the pupil taking the highest entrance marks was made to Geo. Whitfield. At the same time advantage was taken of the opportunity to present the local Orangemen and country Reeve McIntyre [illegible] the chair as chairman. After [illegible] Rev. Geo. Craw [illegible] God for the great victories we enjoyed the presentation took place.

The Presentation

In calling upon Mr. Bonnerman to present his watch the chairman referred to the great victories the troops and people of North Monaghan had in the success of Geo. Whitfield who had taken a high place in passing the watch the chairman said that he would not make his usual address upon the value of education as a useful and [illegible] was in training the mind for greater efforts but would content himself with saying that he heartily congratulated young Whitfield, the teacher Mr. Purdy, and the trustees. That the teacher is a good one he believes he can very well see by the [illegible] amist a number of pupils. If God extended an invitation to the pupils on the programme he would present and speak, because he thought that they might feel interested in coming into a meeting called for another purpose. But he felt sure they were highly pleased at the honor conferred by the invitation to the [illegible] Mr. [illegible] A. Gosnell, B.A. Hall, M.P. Mr. A. H. [illegible] Mr. Walter Green, Mr. Dan [illegible] Mr. J. D. Kelly, [illegible] Mr. [illegible] Scollen.

Urgency of Action

The chairman then called on Hon. Hewson Jeffs, Hall who impressed upon the people the urgency of the present [illegible] facts and [illegible] Many boys and [illegible] the call of the duty, and the old men [illegible] some men had yet to realize that they must imitate their [illegible] example.

WOMAN REFUSES OPERATION

Tells How She Was Saved by Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Logansport, Ind. — "My baby was over a year old and I bloated till I was a burden to myself. I suffered from female trouble so I could not stand on my feet and I felt like millions of needles were pricking me all over. At last my doctor told me that all that would save me was an operation, but this I refused. I told my husband to get me a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and I would try it before I would submit to any operation. He did so and I improved right along. I am now doing all my work and feeling fine.

"I hope other suffering women will try your Compound. I will recommend it to all I know." — Mrs. DANIEL D. B. DAVIS, 110 Franklin St., Logansport, Ind.

Since we guarantee that all testimonials which we publish are genuine, is it not fair to suppose that if Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has the virtue to help these women it will help any other woman who is suffering in a like manner?

If you are ill do not drag along until an operation is necessary, but at once take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., (confidential) Lynn, Mass. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman and held in strict confidence.

Getting On.

"How are you getting on with your photography?"

"Well," answered the young man with brown finger tips, "I'm doing better. The snapshot portrait I took of Mr. Curmudge must have been recognizable."

"You are sure of that?"

"Perfectly. For as soon as Curmudge saw it he said he could whip the man who made that picture."

Reason Enough.

"Now get out!" I roared.

"You shall pay for this!" he sputtered, quite black in the face. "Grab him, you infernal cowards!"

But the four porters slunk away, and Mr. Rocksworth faced me alone. Rudolph and Max, thoroughly fed and most prodigious, were bearing down upon us, accounting for the flight of the mercenaries.

"Get out!" I repeated. "I am the owner of this place, Mr. Rocksworth, and I am mad through and through! Skip!"

They skipped

CHAPTER IV.

I Converse With a Mystery.

LATE in the afternoon I opened my door, hoping that the banging of hammers and the buzz of industry would have ceased; but, alas, the noise was even more deafening than before. Espying Britton in the gloomy corridor, I shouted to him, and he came at once.

"Britton," said I as he closed the door, "do you think they will carry out their threat to have the law on me? Mr. Rocksworth was very angry—and put out. He is a power, as you know."

"I think you are quite safe, sir," said he. "Shortly before 2, sir, one of the porters from the hotel came over to recover a gold purse Mrs. Riley-Werkheimer had dropped in the excitement, and he informed Mr. Poopendyke that the whole party was leaving at 4 for Dresden."

Later on, somewhat refreshed and relieved, I made my way to the little balcony, first having issued numerous orders and directions to the still stupefied Schmicks, chief among which was an inflexible command to keep the gates locked against all comers.

Suddenly as I sat there ruminating I became acutely aware of something white on the ledge of the topmost window in the eastern tower. Even as I fixed my gaze upon it something else transpired. A cloud of soft, wavy, luxurious brown hair eclipsed the narrow white strip and hung with spreading splendor over the casement ledge plainly, indubitably to dry in the sun.

My neighbor had washed her hair!

And it was really a most wonderful head of hair. I can't remember ever having seen anything like it except in the advertisements.

What a glorious, appealing, sensuous thing a crown of hair—but just then Mr. Poopendyke came to my window.

"May I interrupt you for a moment, Mr. Smart?" he inquired, as he squinted at me through his ugly bone rimmed glasses.

"Come here, Poopendyke," I commanded in low, excited tones. He hesitated. "You won't fall off," I said sharply.

Although the window is at least nine feet high, Poopendyke stooped as he came through. He always does it, no matter how tall the door. It is a lifelong habit with him. Have I mentioned that my worthy secretary is six feet four and as thin as a reed? I remember speaking of his knees. He is also a bachelor.

"It is a dreadful distance down there," he murmured, flattening himself against the wall and closing his eyes.

A pair of slim white hands at that instant indolently readjusted the thick mass of hair and quite as casually disappeared. I failed to hear Mr. Poopendyke's remark.

"I think, sir," he proceeded, "it would be a very good idea to get some of our correspondence off our hands. A great deal of it has accumulated in the past few weeks. I wish to say that I am quite ready to attend to it whenever"—

"Time enough for letters," said I, still staring.

"First of all, we must have a ladder," I went on. "Have you seen to that?"

"A ladder?" he faltered, putting one foot back through the window in a most suggestive way.

"Oh," said I, remembering, "I haven't told you, have I? Look! Up there, in that window. Do you see that?"

"What is it, sir? A rug?"

"Rug! Great Scott, man, don't you know a woman's hair when you see it?"

"I've never—er—never seen it—you might say—just like that. Is it hair?"

"It is. You do see it, don't you?"

"How did it get there?"

"Good! Now I know I'm not dreaming. Come! There's no time to be lost. We may be able to get up there before she hears us!"

I instructed old Conrad to have the tallest ladder brought to me in the courtyard at once.

"There is no such thing about the castle," he announced blandly.

"Where are your sons?" I demanded.

The old couple held up their hands in great distress.

"Herr Britton has them wearing their souls out, turning a windlass outside the gates—ach, that terrible invention of his!" groaned old Conrad. "My poor sons are faint with fatigue, mein herr. You should see them perspire and hear them pant for breath."

Happily a new idea struck me almost at once.

In a jiffy half a dozen carpenters were at work constructing a substantial ladder out of scantlings, while I stood over them in serene command of the situation.

When the ladder was completed I mounted to the top and peered through the sashless window. It was quite black and repelling beyond. Instructing Britton and the two brothers to follow me in turn, I clambered over the wide stone sill and lowered myself gingerly to the floor.

I will not take up the time or the space to relate my experiences on this first fruitless visit to the east wing of my abiding place. Suffice to say, we got as far as the top of the stairs in the vast middle corridor after stumbling through a series of dim, damp rooms, and then found our way effectually blocked by a stout door which was not only locked and bolted, but bore a most startling admonition to would be trespassers.

Pinned to one of the panels there was a dainty bit of white note paper, with these satiric words written across its surface in a bold feminine hand:

"Please keep out. This is private property."

Most property owners no doubt would have been incensed by this calm defiance on the part of a squatter, either male or female, but not I. The very impudence of the usurper appealed to me. What could be more delicious than her serene courage in dispossessing me with the stroke of a pen of at least two-thirds of my domicile and what more exciting than the thought of waging war against her in the effort to regain possession of it? Really it was quite glorious! Here was a happy, enchanting bit of feudalism that stirred my romantic soul to its very depths.

We returned to the courtyard and held a counsel of war. I put all of the Schmicks on the grill, but they stubbornly disclaimed all interest in or knowledge of the extraordinary occupant of the east wing.

"We can smoke her out, sir," said Britton.

I could scarcely believe my ears.

"Britton," said I severely, "you are a brute. I am surprised. You forget there is an innocent babe, maybe a collection of them, over there and a dog. We shan't do anything heathenish, Britton. Please bear that in mind. There is but one way—we must storm the place. I will not be defied to my very nose." I felt it to see if it was not a little out of joint. "It is a good nose."

"It is, sir," said Britton. And Poopendyke in a perfect ecstasy of loyalty shouted, "Long live your nose, sir!"

My German vassals waved their hats, perceiving that a demonstration was required without in the least knowing what it was about.

That night was very black and tragic, swift storm clouds having raced up to cover the moon and stars. With a radiant lantborn in the window behind me, I sat down with my pad and my pipe and my pencil. The storm was not far away.

I was scribbling away in serene contempt for the physical world when there came to my ears a sound that gave me a greater shock than any streak of lightning could have produced and yet left sufficient life in me to appreciate the sensation of being electrified.

A woman's voice, speaking to me out of the darkness and from some point quite near at hand!

"I beg your pardon, but would you mind doing me a very slight favor?"

Those were the words, uttered in a clear, sweet, perfectly confident voice as of one who never asked for favors but exacted them.

I looked about me, blinking, utterly bewildered. No one was to be seen. She laughed. Without really meaning to do so, I also laughed—nervously, of course.

"Can't you see me?" she asked. I looked intently at the spot from which the sound seemed to come—a perfectly solid stone block less than three feet from my right shoulder. It must have been very amusing. She laughed again. I flushed resentfully.

"Where are you?" I cried out rather tartly.

"I can see you quite plainly, and you are very ugly when you scowl, sir. Are you scowling at me?"

"I don't know," I replied truthfully, still searching for her. "Does it seem so to you?"

"Yes."

"Then I must be looking in the right direction," I cried impolitely. "You must be—Ah!"

My straining eyes had located a small, oblong blotch in the curve of the tower not more than twenty feet from where I stood, and on a direct line with my balcony. True, I could not at first see a face, but as my eyes grew a little more accustomed to the darkness, I fancied I could distinguish a shadow that might pass for one.

"I didn't know that little window was there," I cried, puzzled.

"It isn't," she said. "It is a secret loophole, and it isn't here except in times of great duress. See, I can close it!" The oblong blotch abruptly disappeared, only to reappear an instant later. I was beginning to understand. Of course it was in the beleaguered east wing! "I hope I didn't startle you a moment ago."

I resolved to be very stiff and formal about it. "May I inquire, madam, what you are doing in my hou—my castle?"

"You may."

"Well," said I, seeing the point, "what are you doing here?"

"I am living here," she answered distinctly.

"So I perceive," said I, rather too distinctly.

"And I have come down to ask a simple, tiny little favor of you, Mr. Smart," she resumed.

"You know my name?" I cried, surprised.

"I am reading your last book— Are you going?"

"Just a moment, please," I called out, struck by a splendid idea. Reaching inside the window, I grasped the lanthorn and brought its rays to bear upon the—perfectly blank wall! I stared open mouthed and unbelieving. "Good heaven! Have I been dreaming all this?" I cried aloud.

My gaze fell upon two tiny holes in the wall, exposed to view by the bright light of my lamp. They appeared to be precisely in the center of the spot so recently marked by the elusive oblong. Even as I stared at the holes a slim object that I at once recognized as a finger protruded from one of them and wiggled at me in a merry but exceedingly irritating manner.

Sensibly I restored the lanthorn to its place inside the window and waited for the mysterious voice to resume.

"Are you so homely as all that?" I demanded when the shadowy face looked out once more. Very clever of me, I thought.

"I am considered rather good looking," she replied serenely. "Please don't do that again. It was very rude of you, Mr. Smart."

"Oh, I've seen something of you before this," I said. "You have long, beautiful brown hair—and a dog."

She was silent.

"I am sure you will pardon me if I very politely ask who you are?" I went on.

"That question takes me back to the favor. Will you be so very, very kind as to cease bothering me, Mr. Smart? It is dreadfully upsetting, don't you know, feeling that at any moment you may rush in and"—

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

THE GREEN MANIKIN

A Story With "Heart Interest"

By AGNES G. BROGAN

When David Bronson heard an American speaking voice in that little far away Parisian restaurant an emotion that was surprising surged within him. "So this was what had been the trouble of late, this the cause of his unfinished book—homesickness, pure old fashioned homesickness."

Long ago, as a lad, he had realized this desperate feeling. Now the sound of that familiar tongue brought back a longing to be "among his own" which was almost unbearable, back again in "little old New York," for from her accent the speaker had also lived in that vicinity. Bronson whirled about to look at her. Demure and unaware of admiring glances, she sat at a nearby table, "conspicuously simple" in her close fitting black suit and turban.

Bronson struggled against an uncontrollable desire to hear again that soft voicing of his mother tongue, then with a muttered, "May I?" sank into a seat at the opposite side of the table. The restaurant being unduly crowded, his intrusion was calmly taken for granted. Happily absorbed, he gazed at the lovely, downcast face of his companion, and she, glancing up at last, smiled. A frank, engaging smile it was, like that of a friendly child.

"The salt?" Bronson asked politely, while the girl's smile deepened.

"So you, too, are American," she said. All the pentup longings of the man's home yearning soul broke forth at her question.

"American—yes," he answered, "and if you could but know the joy it gives me merely to be again in the presence of an American! I might have sought out my countrymen here, I suppose, but"—he laughed shortly—"I did not recognize my need until I heard your voice."

The girl leaned impulsively forward. "I know," she breathed. "Oh, I know! For weeks I've been fighting off the desire to go back. Sometimes it was almost too strong for me. I've got to stay here, you see. I must, until"—

"Until," he prompted gently. The girl drew back, continuing her meal. "Until I make good," she answered quietly.

"Student?" the man questioned. She nodded her head.

"There are so many of us," she said ruefully, "'would be' artists, musicians—mostly failures!"

"And you?"

The girl's low laughter ended in a wry smile. "I'm an art failure," she replied, with a shrug of the shoulders.

Bronson's quick glance was sympathetic.

"Perhaps not," he encouraged. "Better stick it out a little longer and see." She arose, drawing on her gloves, and stood looking now on the gloves, now on him.

"I intend to," she answered brightly. With visible regret the author also arose.

"Pardon the boldness of a fellow American," he entreated, "but may I not hope to see you again?"

"Why not?" the girl carelessly responded. "I dine here every day."

So it happened that the small table beneath the window came quite naturally to be a place of meeting, a place for the exchange of simple confidences, for comforting recollections of home beloved scenes and home happy times. To the man this one hour was a sort of panacea for all the trials of a troubled day. About it his dreams centered as a reward for nightly hours of writing. And the girl's open pleasure in these meetings was a constant growing joy.

"Do you know," she asked in her ingenuous way, "I cannot get over the idea that I have known your face before? It was strangely familiar from the first, and yet"—

Then David Bronson knew that his hour of announcement had come. It had been a gratifying thing to hide for a time from the paths of fame and to feel that his unknown personality had powers of its own to awaken interest and pleasure. With a sigh he drew forth his card and placed it before her.

"David B. Bronson," the girl read aloud, while recollection widened in her eyes.

"Not," she said in a tone of awe—"not David Bronson, the author?"

He nodded abruptly.

"And you are writing a book over here," she went on slowly, "a book with a French setting perhaps and one of your wonderful American heroines?"

"The heroine," he confessed, "proves a disappointment. She is so exactly what she seems to be—commonplace, no human heart interest."

The girl turned wearily aside. His admission of greatness seemed all at once to put him far from her presumption of friendship.

"Look about you," she said. "You'll find human heart stories among us all."

Bronson got hastily into his coat. "Just this once," he begged, "allow me to walk with you."

Heretofore this request had been refused. Now the girl deliberated.

"You may come," she agreed.

Down the sunlit narrow street they went, crowds jostling her slim figure against the shelter of his arm—or through poorer districts and poorer until where the limit of dingy shabbiness seemed to have been reached the girl paused.

"There"—she pointed at the top of the tenement—"is my home."

"Home!" the man breathed contemptuously; then, with wondering pity he repeated the word, "Home!"

"Goodby," said the girl and extended her hand.

"Goodby until tomorrow," reminded the man, his smile unchanged.

Smiling, too, she went up the narrow stair, but when tomorrow came she was absent from her place at the restaurant table. An atmosphere of unaccountable cheerlessness pervaded the sunny niche near the window. Bronson fretted impatiently at the girl's delay. He had intended to inquire today more particularly into her manner of living. His night had been troubled and wakeful at the thought of her bright presence, braving the struggle for existence. What sacrifice and deprivation might she not be undergoing for a dream of art which might be no more than a dream! This, at least, his own knowledge could decide for her if she would come. But the opposite chair remained vacant.

"Mademoiselle comes not today," the garrulous waiter remarked. "Mademoiselle, 'the green manikin,' is absent."

Bronson sat up with a start.

"Mademoiselle who?" he asked rather sharply.

"She who dines with you," the waiter imperturbably replied, "mademoiselle who is what you call 'manikin' or model for the great modiste. Surely monsieur has heard of the green manikin from Franquetta's."

Yes, Bronson had heard, remembered having seen the model pictured in Franquetta's window, a graceful figure clad always in garments soft tinted as the ocean's foam, and the model was his frank faced student—she of the tenement room. The two seemed irreconcilable.

Abruptly he left his untasted meal; a satirical smile curled his lips. So his sympathy had all been wasted, imposed upon. The green model of Franquetta's was evidently in no need of pity.

For a moment he hesitated before the glittering letters of the modiste's sign, then passed into the miniature theater. Before the parted curtain he waited, watching tensely the girlish figure framed in the gleaming lights. Clad in bright green from shoulder to satin heel stood the girl whose appealing presence had so deeply stirred his heart.

Mechanically, automatically, like some manikin in a play, she moved across the brilliant stage, displaying to an admiring audience the beauties of her costume. Bitterly the man turned from her steady painted smile to pass out again into the street. So the struggling art student, the beloved little student, had never been. Across his very memory of her must ever flash that crimson painted smile. He frowned disapproval when next day the girl herself slipped quietly into her accustomed seat.

"May I tell you," she asked, "the story of a green model who, unlike your difficult heroine, is not exactly as she seems, not exactly commonplace? Her story may even have heart interest."

Wondering, he silently bowed his head. The girl laughed tremulously.

"Fame is an illusive thing," she quoted. "One may more quickly find her because of one's ability to wear a certain color than for the reward of tireless years of study. Over in America my old father and my mother and the sister who has always been sick wait for a success in art which was prophesied surely for me. To this purpose were carefully—oh, so carefully—hoarded the savings of years. This had also been my father's youthful dream—to go abroad and perfect his own sketches, to achieve fame which critics promised. Marriage and later cares had forced this dream aside, but now it was to be fulfilled, gloriously fulfilled, in myself, the daughter.

"But that which had seemed an assured inherited talent at home became here a doubtful promise, and at length the savings were gone—all gone! Do you see, then," she cried passionately, "what I have been doing? Deceiving them all along; writing, as I fancied the glow on their faces, of how one sketch had been accepted, of how another brought the check inclosed, and all the time—all the time I was but a dressmaker's model, a manikin in green. How else could one make money here alone in a foreign land? But now"—her voice broke despairingly—"how dare I go back, I with my mocking boast of art?"

Something gripped hard at the man's throat, and his hand reached out to clasp the girl's.

"Tomorrow," he said slowly—"tomorrow I want to see those sketches."

Tomorrow he saw them. As he turned them over, looking intently at each, an expression of admiration gathered on his face. When he came to the last he looked up at her and said:

"It's the old story—genius stooping to feed on crumbs from the rich man's table while it secured recognition."

And to two old people seated before their farmhouse door there came one eve a letter. "Read it," said the mother. "It's from our girl beyond the sea."

The old man glanced quickly back from the closely written page. "Why," he cried—"why, she's to illustrate that great author's new book, mother, our own little girl!"

In speechless joy they gazed into each other's face. Then together they finished the letter.

"Books and pictures must ever wait for love," wrote the girl, "so David Bronson and I are coming home together. Your daughter has married the author."

Hard to Choose.

"Why can't she make a choice between her suitors?"

"Well, one of them is a press agent. His language is very attractive. But the other is a traveling salesman, and he treats her as if she were a big buyer."—Kansas City Journal.

BODY BLOWN UP WITH AIR HOSE, YOUTH DIES

Employees of Bethlehem Steel Works Engage in a "Joke"

SOUTH BETHLEHEM, Pa., Sept. 10—Joseph Weant, aged 18, with his body swollen to the proportions of a balloon, died at the local hospital as the result of rough pastimes worked at the Bethlehem Steel Works during the noon hour.

The employees in the shipping department of the plant had finished their lunch, when John Grecki, aged 25, seized a pneumatic air hose and placing the nozzle against Weant's body opened the air cock. The air, under an enormous pressure, forced into the lad's body caused it to swell to abnormal proportions. He became unconscious almost immediately.

The county detective force is looking for Grecki, who escaped, and the coroner has empaneled a jury to investigate the case.

EXAMINER PATTERN SERVICE

A SMART DESIGN FOR HOME MAKING.

By Anabel Worthington.

The young girl who cannot make herself several pretty dresses by the aid of this design, and perhaps a little help from mother, certainly cannot be called clever with her hands. It is so plain, and yet so smart that merely by choosing suitable materials it can be made a dress for the morning or for the afternoon, for the home or for the street.

The blouse is untrimmed except for the small collar which trims the neck, and this can always be bought ready made and basted on pinned on when the dress is worn. The sleeves are in one piece and are to be either full length or shorter. The addition of cuffs of embroidery to match the collar will be effective if the sleeves are short. The skirt has three gores. It is neatly fitted, without fulness at the top and with either the high or the regulation waistline. A narrow belt with small pockets as part of it is a feature of the new styles. The roll which is shown some distance above the hem is a matter of taste, for nearly all skirts are trimmed just now and the addition of the fold is decorative.

For morning wear there is nothing better than a fine gingham or a plain colored chambray. For afternoon, linen is very nice and pongee silk is not as costly as it sounds. Simple woollen fabrics may be used. These can be trimmed with silk.

The dress pattern, No. 7219, is cut in sizes 14, 16, 18 and 20 years. Medium size requires, with skirt fold, 4¾ yards of 36-inch material.

When ordering remember to give your name and address as well as the number and size of pattern required and age if a child.

Price 15 cents or 2 for 25c.

New Remedies. We are [illegible] with the [illegible] and [illegible] forms of [illegible] and [illegible] for every ailment under the sun. Many of these remedies are valuable, but better of course is absolutely true and I don't know why one could not say that the best is not also true a month many of the modern inventions will appear to contradict it.

Last March, advertisements came in the Paris papers telling of a new serum recently discovered which would cure wounds in a few days. It is up to the present time it does not seem to have become as famous as the promise would indicate. I think I can tell you why. The cure was in the form of a serum and 25 horses were required from which to get 40,000 [illegible] cubic centimetres per month. The horses from which a serum is taken must be in perfect health, well nourished condition. Horses are at a premium in all of the countries at war and men are being wounded in numbers so vast that even the improvised hospitals are taxed to their utmost capacity.

Nature however always comes to the rescue and in her gentle yet powerful way forces us to recognize the healing power which she supplies so freely and without the aid of the complicated processes used by the chemist in producing serums equal in healing power to the saliva from the tongue of a healthy dog.

Many months ago a man came to me whom I found to be suffering with an ulcer on his leg. It had been in a horrible condition for over 2 years and although many doctors had tried to help the poor fellow, he was in despair. Although a poor man he was about to go South and live for the winter on a small piece of land that he owned there. I told him what to eat and drink and for special treatment. [illegible] I am a thorough believer in Natures remedies and especially in the herbs and roots fresh air sunshine and pure water. These remedies are always new.

THRILL RESTORES SPEECH

Private of Princess Pats Benefitted by Zeppelin Raid.

LONDON Sept. 10—A report in the case of Private Harrison, who [illegible] gained his sight in the wreck of the Hesperian, is that of a private of the Princess Patricias. Gassed and injured by shock at Ypres in April, he has been deprived of his speech ever since. When he came to London Wednesday on a holiday a comrade had to write all his questions on paper. Roused from his sleep by the excitement of the Zeppelin raid, he suddenly regained his lost faculty and, delighted, then [illegible] to converse in a whisper.

A VETERAN OF MONS

Picturesque Narrative of Modern War by Badly-gassed Hero

Pte. Thomas James Jackson, a regular of the Fifteenth Hussars, and a former navy man, was at the Khaki League headquarters in Montreal recently because he was "gassed" in France. He was in the retreat from Mons, fought at Lille and many other places, then he was made unfit for duty and came to Canada. He had then tried to enlist in a Canadian battalion but the gas had made him unfit.

"I got into this little scrap," he said, "early in the game, and it was as a cavalryman that I took part in the retreat from Mons. It was march twenty or thirty miles, then turn on the beggars and hold them for a while, fall back a bit further, go at them again, fall back some more. Apart from everything else, we hadn't got so used to the Jack Johnsons and the coalboxes as we became later on, and they didn't allow you much sleep, even if you got the chance for a nap. How I came through those weeks without a scratch is a marvel. Even when they got me at last with the gas I didn't know what had happened, for it put me out at once. They got me with it in the trenches outside Lille, and I woke up to find myself in a hospital in Folkestone. How I got here I do not know and when I had to go through the agony of coming out of the gas I can assure you I didn't care.

"In the whole of the time I was in the fighting I only had two chances to actually get at the enemy face to face. We were able to use our bayonets at Neuve Chapelle and at Dixmude, and I found that all I had heard about the way in which the Germans would run from cold steel was actually true. It is strange for the Germans are good fighters otherwise but it is hands up with them as soon as they see the bayonets.

SOCIALIST FOR WAR

Until Militarism is Crushed, is Splendid Stand of Frenchmen

The 4,000,000 workingmen who vote in France are not all Socialists and only 400,000 of them are Syndicalists writes the Paris correspondent of the New York Evening Post. But these organizations with a label have to speak the mind of workingmen in general. Remember, too, that the United Socialist party is the "French section of the Labor Internationale." All this gives unusual importance to the resolutions of their National Council. Among the delegates were the two Socialist Ministers, Jules Guesde, who first organized French Socialists into a political party, and Marcel Sembat, who was the companion of Jaures. Gustave Herve, in the Guerre Sociale, sums up these resolutions.

"If the Kaiser's Socialists have been counting on French Socialists being taken in by their sheep's eyes and beginning to bleat for immediate peace, they have only to read the declaration voted unanimously by our Socialist party. They will have their minds settled. Unanimously, the French Socialist party gives them to know that it is for war, to the crushing of Austro-German militarism.

Basis For Lasting Peace

"Once again the Socialist party asserts its unshakeable confidence in the cause of the Allies and of Republican France. The National Council considers there can be no durable peace unless it is based: (1) On the principle of nationalities, which implies the will to put aside all policy of annexation and, at the same time, the re-establishment of the right which the oppressed populations of Europe have to dispose of themselves and return to the nation from which they have been brutally separated. (2) On the absolute respect of the political and economic independence of nations. (3) On the organization of obligatory arbitration among peoples which would allow of the limitation of armaments, democratic control of the engagements taken by each government, and the constitution of an international force as sanction.

"To obtain these results and to drive from the world the accursed dreams of a hegemony which would end in putting Europe under the heel of Imperialism, the most brutal and aggressive and the least scrupulous, the Socialist party once again declares itself ready to continue giving its unreserved and unfailing and tireless aid to the work of National Defence.

Through Terror to Triumph

"It knows the losses, the countless sorrows brought about by war. It knows they cannot disappear from present nor from future preoccupations until German Imperialism is vanquished. With the whole country and its Allies, it persists in the effort for the liberation of heroic and loyal Belgium and the invaded regions of France as well as the reparation of right for Alsace-Lorraine. The struggle imposed on the Allies by the directing classes of Germany must be carried out to its logical end—that there may be given to the world the grand and necessary lesson of attempted hegemony broken by the resistance of free peoples. And that from this war—in order that it may be the last—must spring forth a new Europe founded on the respect of treaties and the independence of nationalities wherein the peoples, having recovered the right of disposing of themselves, shall at last be able to cast off the crushing burden of militarism."

The official inventory of the clocks at Windsor Castle fills two large volumes, and contains entries of 230 timepieces.

THE FIGHTING FOR RIGA IS RESUMED

THRILLING STORY OF ZEPPELIN ATTACK

BATTLE FOR RIGA HAS BEEN RESUMED GROWING IN VIOLENCE

Germans Are Attacking on the Whole Front From Friedrichstadt to Dirnsk---For the Third Time in Three Days Russians Have Beaten the Austrians in the South.

PETROGRAD, Sept. 11.—The battle for Riga has been renewed after several days' lull. The Germans under Gen Besseler, are violently attacking on the entire front from Friedrichstadt to Dvinsk, and northwest of Friedrichstadt are again attempting to cross the Dwina.

All enemy attacks thus far have been beaten back, but official despatches indicate that the assault is growing more violent. The War Office has every confidence that Gen. Russky will hold the Dwina line without reinforcements.

At the other wing of the Baltic to the Bessarabia battle line, the Slavs have beaten the Austrians for the third time in three days.

The official statement issued tarly to-day estimated that about 5,000 prisoners including sixteen officers, were taken above Trembowla and near Chortkoff.

At Pruzhany the Germans rivalled their infamy in Belgium by using civilians as a screen for their advance. Brutal Uhlans drove men, women and children in front of them to prevent the Russians firing on them.

WILL MEAN WAR.

NEW YORK, Sept. 11.—Ambassador Bernstorff is quoted in an interview published in the Evening Sun this afternoon, as declaring that a diplomatic break between Germany and the United States will mean war.

"If diplomatic relations are broken off," the German Ambassador is quoted as having said, "German submarine commanders would be instructed to sink everything they see, and of course, this means war within two or three days."

The interview, according to the Sun, was given by Count Von Bernstorff through a person close to him.

The statements credited to the Ambassador in the quotation above, according to the Sun, were made to a man who acted as intermediary.

BERNSTORFF DENIES STATEMENT.

NEW YORK, Sept. 11.—Interviewed this afternoon Count Bernstorff denied that he made the statement credited to him in the New York "Sun" interview. He declined to express his sentiments in the matter.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 11.—A general "clean up" of all German and Austrian agents who can be convicted of participation to cripple American industries has been decided on by the Government, it was learned to-day.

Austria-Hungary's answer to the American request for Ambassador Dumba's recall, is expected at the State Department some time to-day. Early fears that Austria might object, were dissipated. It was regarded certain that the State Department's demand would be granted. Upon excellent authority it was learned to-day that German Ambassador Bernstorff will soon be told that Von Papen's continued presence in this country is objectionable to the Government.

LONDON, Sept. 11.—Petrograd has officially announced important educational and citizenship privileges to Hebrews, who are now permitted to buy property in all the cities of Russia except capitals and imperial residential towns.

FANCY DANCING

During the past few years there has been a great revival of Folk Dances and fancy steps, especially in the cities of New York, Boston and Toronto. This movement is something more than a fad and [illegible] encouraged by cultured people [illegible] educational value. It is especially advisable that young children, and even ladies should learn [illegible] is a fact that many students at professors at Harvard University take up this as a study for recreation. It is a well-known fact that fancy dancing develops ease and grace. Some people are naturally graceful, but others who are not so fortunate can certainly acquire it. The study of fancy steps is the way. There are other benefits which follow the study of fancy steps.

All well-meaning parents would like their children to learn to play the piano or some other instrument. But many young children although they are bright and have talent some how don't get ahead well. There is usually some handicap which could be removed. Perhaps a sense of rhythm need to be awakened, perhaps they cannot grasp the idea of keeping time and most common of all, they may not have the application and concentration necessary to advancement.

Any or all of these handicaps can be overcome by having the child attend regularly a class in Fancy Dancing and almost every child would love to attend such a class.

ANKLE WATCH THE LATEST

Despite their action in banning the wrist watch for men the American National Association of Retail Jewellers have carefully reframed from casting aside the new ankle watch which appeared lately on Broadway. ALLIES ARE MORE CLOSELY UNITED Recent Events Proclaim to Germany That Her Enemies Are Prepared to Go Whatever May Be the Cost in Time, Men and Money.

WORKERS PLEDGE SUPPORT

(Copyright, 1915, Central News, by I. P. O'Connor.)

LONDON, Sept. 11.—More important than military operations is the abounding evidence on every quarter of an even closer tightening of the bonds which unite the Allies.

Russia's courageous declaration of her readiness to fight to the death, the Czar's assumption of supreme command, Joffre's visit to Italy, and the presence of the great French journalists with our fleet combine to proclaim to Germany that her enemies are prepared to go on, whatever may be the cost in time, men and money, until they have beaten her.

More remarkable than the repudiation, and thereby the suppression, of Lord Northcliffe's conscription boom by the Trades Union Congress is the emphatic unanimity with which these representatives of the Labour men pledged the support of the working classes to the Allies' cause.

An eloquent object lesson is supplied in the contrast between the Irish at home and the venal and insane minority which, in America, by supporting the Lusitania and Hesperian murders, brings the same peril to the Irish cause. Cables from the United States describe an Irishman declaring in a pro-German convention in Chicago that Germany kept her word and that no life was lost on the Hesperian. On the contrary the latest figures show that there were actually twenty-six lives lost, including an infant and four women.

In most eloquent contrast to the "crank" and venal minority in America are the scenes witnessed in Ireland when one of the Irish heroes who has received the Victoria Cross returned.

Fifty years ago Westmeath, in Leinster, was one of the hottest spots in the civil war between landlord and tenant. Rochefort, leader of the landlords, was one of the most hated of the class.

Last week the Nationalists of Mullingar rushed the railway station triumphantly to receive another Rochefort. It was Boyd Rochefort, son of the former landlord, who was so tumultously welcomed because he had brought honour to Ireland by winning the Victoria Cross. His was the fifth of the entire number of awards of the Cross, which have gone to Irishmen.

A Remarkable Letter.

A remarkable letter from Bishop O'Donnell of Raphoe may mark a new departure in Irish life. Bishop O'Donnell, who is kept constantly informed by Redmond and was especially in close touch with him during the closing days of the Home Rule fight, notes that Irish unity at home and valour abroad has produced an entire change of heart toward Home Rule among the English and even among the Irish opponents of it.

Bishop O'Donnell makes the valuable and fruitful suggestion that when an amending bill is introduced it should not take the form of a provision of dividing Ireland, one part to profit by the newly gained privilege and the other to remain under the English-appointed Lord Lieutenant, but of broadening the powers of the Irish parliament.

This appeal will probably produce little effect upon the official politicians, who still exploit the foolish prejudices of the Orangemen, but it will probably lead to a united declaration by the Unionists of southern Ireland and by the same business men of Belfast.

Despite the activities of the censorship bureau, with its ever-watchful eye upon the journals, not only of Great Britain, but of neutral countries, the war has brought to the front prominently more than one man who laid the foundation for his present writings as the work of a journalist before the war.

The Daily Telegraph in one of its recent numbers contained a series of articles on the German penetration of Italy through her splendidly organized financial system. Beginning with the foundation of a small bank with an Italian name, although the money and the control were entirely German, these able German financiers managed in time to extend the roots of this institution all over Italy until they succeeded in the end in getting a hold over all the big businesses, over all the banks and indeed over all the economical life of the entire kingdom.

CANADIAN SNIPERS MAINTAIN SUPERIORITY

Situation Along the Front Held by First Canadian Contingent Has Been Normal For Some Days Past

EXPLODED MINE

Special to The Examiner

OTTAWA, Ont., Sept. 11. The following cable from Sir Max Aitken was given out by Major-General Sir Sam Hughes this morning: "During the period from September 1st to 7th the situation along the front held by the first Canadian contingent has been normal, except that the artillery was somewhat more active than usual. Our snipers successfully maintained superiority over enemy snipers. Large working parties are employed day and night improving the lines. On August 31 we exploded one of our defensive mines between our front trenches and those of the enemy. The crater formed was immediately occupied by our troops."

Local Interest in the "Hesperian" Incident

A George Street Dry Goods Firm's Anxiety For the Safety of the Vessel

It is not generally known that considerable anxiety was felt in the city by one of our largest dry goods firms regarding the fate of the steamship Hesperian, which was torpedoed by a German submarine a short time ago off the coast of Ireland.

It appears that on the occasion of the Hesperian's previous trip she carried a large direct import order of fall and winter dress goods and silks from various foreign manufacturers consigned to Messrs. Richard Hall & Son of this city. These were all landed safely and have been on sale as part of their early fall importations. When the Hesperian next sailed on her fatal trip it was presumed that the balance of this firm's order of fine silks, linens, millinery ribbons and drapery goods was being forwarded on this vessel. The news that reached here of the disaster to the Hesperian was the cause of many anxious moments for Richard Hall & Son, as the loss of this valuable stock would cause a serious handicap to their fall business. After much anxious telegraphy and waiting, it fortunately turned out that these goods were not on the Hesperian, but on the steamship Metagama, which arrived at the port of Montreal a few days ago.

SOLDIER LADS ARE WELL BEHAVED

Their Splendid Conduct is the Subject of Favourable Comment Throughout the City - No Complaints Anywhere.

TO-DAY'S MILITARY NEWS

The good behaviour of Peterborough's soldier boys in the 57th Battalion is being favourably commented everywhere in the city. Although some of the men have been stationed here for five weeks, there has not been a complaint. There is also no fuss and drunkenness and the Khaki clad lads have deported themselves like the gentlemanly citizen soldiers they are. Needless to say the commanding officers are delighted with their conduct. The 80th detachment, headed by their band, marched through the down town streets this morning.

Bandsman Supper, formerly of the 57th Band and now with the 71st Battalion Band, marched with the 80th band this morning.

The 80th men will attend divine service at St. John's church to-morrow.

Sir Sam Hughes Invited to the Peterboro' Fair

There is a possibility that Sir Sam Hughes will attend the Peterborough Industrial Exhibition. The directors co-operating with the Speakers' Patriotic League, are endeavouring to secure a prominent Canadian to give an address in connection with the patriotic campaign and last night Mr. R. M. Glover acted Mr. Burnham who is in Ottawa, to invite Sir Sam Hughes to Peterborough. In the event of the Minister of Militia being unable to accept the invitation, some other well known personage will be invited.

The Fair directors held a meeting last night, when general routine business was considered. At present the entry list bids fair to be considerably larger than last year in practically every department. The citizens are reminded of the big evening performance on Friday night. In addition to a fine display of fire works there will be a military programme in which a detachment of the 80th Battalion will participate. The bands of the 80th Battalion, the 57th Regiment and the Salvation Army will also take part. There will be only one night performance this year with the above features and the grand stand performance.

Street Paving Had Good Effect On Many Other Streets

The street paving activity has been partially responsible for the Board of Works' attention to many city streets which have been graded, rolled and generally smoothed into fairly respectable roadways. In preparing roads for the cement base the removal of the layer of macadam is necessary. Naturally this material could not be wasted. Mr. Greenaway and the Works Department turned to some of the wet-conditioned streets ploughed them up where necessary, drew in gravel and sent the road rollers over them for a finishing massage. Quite a number of streets received this treatment and today they present well rolled and smooth surfaces. If they could only withstand the destructive weather changes. Most of the streets that have been put in by the Works Department activities have been reduced to a succession of ruts.

THIS MORNING'S MARKET

The farmers' market was crowded around this morning. Tomatoes were particularly scarce. Quotations were a basket they hung heavily with very little demand. At 5 cents they were slow and even at 30 cents a peck after the rush was the prevailing price and quite a few baskets were sold. Potatoes were quoted at 5 cents a bag. Green and blue plums were fairly plentiful and Lump Butter sold from 28 to 30 cents, eggs around 22 cents, chickens 90 to $1.00 a pair. There was a fair showing of apples.

How London Looks When Under Fire

RAIDER OF THE AIR DESTROYED

LONDON, Sept. 11. [illegible] Morning Post reports [illegible] that a British aeroplane recently destroyed a Zeppelin which was manoeuvring near Brussels and that the entire crew was killed. The Admiralty has not confirmed the report.

Vivid Story of Wednesday's Zeppelin Raid on London by United Press Correspondent— Millions Gazed at the Pale Form of Monster of the Skies.

BUT THERE WAS NO PANIC

Note - The British censor has passed for publication the following "personal experience" story of the latest Zeppelin raid over London by Wm. G. Shepherd, U. P. staff correspondent. It is the first story that has yet been thus approved. It is the first story which gives a complete insight into the British public's behaviour "under fire." It confirms the announcement by the United Press, on Thursday that Wednesday night's air raid was over the heart of London, although Shepherd is not permitted to state what theatre he attended, nor to identify the section of the city where he was.

REMEMBER THE BOYS ABROAD.

Everybody who has a relative or friend anywhere in the war zone, can now send through the Red Cross any article up to 7 pounds in weight free of charge. The privilege should be freely used. If one hasn't a son or brother, or sweetheart there, one can remember somebody else's son or brother, or sweetheart. We can't conceive how welcome will be the "from home" and personally direct, gift of handkerchiefs, socks, chocolates, pipe or tobacco, or cigarettes, or other articles, to the lonely watcher in the trenches. All that is needed is the will, and to leave the packet properly addressed with the Red Cross here, and the Red Cross will do the rest. Remember the boys abroad.

PATIENCE IS FINITE.

The pitcher that goes often to the well, incurs the danger of being broken, says the proverb. In dealing with the United States Germany may find that she can try Uncle Sam's patience to the breaking point. It has so far been very elastic; but if strained, it may snap. Germany may learn that Uncle Sam is like the Yankee in on of Charles Reade's stories—"treat me gentle and I'm 'ile; rile me and I'm thunder stuffed with pizen." The United States has treated German representatives and German machinations and outlawry with patronizing tolerance, a mode that may overlie a dangerous mood. If Germany thinks that United States' patience is another term for cowardice or weakness, a stern awakening may be due her.

REMEMBER THE JAM SHOWER

It is hoped that the good housewives of the city will not forget the jam shower in the interests of the soldier boys abroad, which begins to fall on Sept. 20th. There is reason to believe that this hope is justified. At the same time, even among housewives, there may be found some that are inclined to forget and procrastinate—perhaps too much. So that a little reminder, of the time and occasion may not be out of place. We are sure there is no necessity of appealing to the generosity or kind-heartedness of the housekeepers of Peterborough—only don't forget, that the time begins on Sept. 20th, and lasts till Saturday, and that the place to send jam for the sick and wounded Peterborough soldiers, is Messrs. Richard Hall & Sons, 351-355 George street.

THE CHORAL SOCIETY.

In another place in this issue is an article dealing with the season programme of the Peterborough Choral Society. It is hoped it will be carefully read and heeded. Apart from the momentary pleasure the public will derive from the presentation of the immortal musical masterpiece now under study — "The Messiah," the permanent influence on the community is to be noted as a very important matter. The work of the society is educative in the highest and most delightful sense. If, as Congreve tells us "music hath charms to soothe a savage breast," will it not have a greater elevating and refining influence upon minds fitted by our higher civilization, with greater refinement of receptivety? All this will be conceded without argument, as will be conceded the practical advantages that come from the work of, and association with, the society. The educative influence will not be confined to the active participants, but the work studied will by its performance strengthen the public in appreciation of the beauty, dignity and desirableness of the highest music—classical, in the present case, by being, for excellence and character, in a class by itself. In a still more practical sense the work of the society will be beneficial. The chorus is largely representative, in personnel, of the several church choirs, and the skilled training they will receive in the society rehearsals will make them more efficient in their regular work. In a word the Choral Society fills a most important place in our social and civic life, and the sympathy, assistance and support of the public is confidently bespoken for the society and its work.

A BEGINNING OF TREE INTEREST.

A report states that the City Council passed a by-law "regulating the conditions for the removal, trimming and general care of trees in the city's streets and public places."

This is well since it shows a beginning of official civic interest in the trees that make the chief beauty and utility of comfort of Peterborough.

While the beginning made is an admirable departure, subject to some reserve of opinion regarding some features of its provisions and requirements, it doesn't begin at the beginning.

In the first place the preamble "gets in wrong." It places the chief emphasis upon the destruction of trees—the details and conditions of their removal, and says not a word upon the main point—the planting of trees by the city, which should alone be responsible for, and do this work.

The streets are in other respects in charge of the city authorities, and the city has sole responsibility for the construction and maintenance of streets in respect of pavements, walks and roadways — paid for, of course, by the people.

It would be just as reasonable and logical to expect the private citizen to build the streets and walks in front of his own residence on his own initiative and in his own way, according to his own plans, as to expect him to plant trees in the street.

It is easy to see what impossible conditions would result from each citizen building his own walk, with any material he might prefer, and at any line or any level he might think proper.

It is only by having the streets for these purposes, under one authority and control that good conditions, can be, as they generally are, secured.

In the matter of trees it is only possible to have the best results, by placing the planting of trees under one authority and control, and that the only authority that is entitled, and under obligations, to do the work.

Only by the city, or some body or commission authorized by the city, taking charge of the work of planting and care of street trees, can we have desirable conditions, or conditions in any degree approximating the conditions of beauty and comfort we should have associated with our street trees.

The new city by-law is a beginning; but it is the play of Hamlet with Hamlet left out. The chief point, that of recognizing the city's responsibility, in regard to street tree planting, is omitted.

In fact the by-law, in effect, evades the city's responsibility by throwing the onus of the planting of trees upon individuals. It provides what trees they may plant in the streets, and the distances at which they are to be placed.

It is probable that the by-law won't have any good effect. It is probable it will not be enforced; it is probable that it has seen the only daylight it ever will see; will receive the only attention—the same attention that hundreds of dead or moribund by-laws that are mouldering in the vaults of the city buildings — more honoured in the neglect than the observance—have received.

The tree-planting—no, the tree-destroying by-law — will perhaps soon be forgotten and become a dead letter, as dead as some of the street trees—unsuitable trees planted upon unsuitable soil.

The aldermen showed their good intentions in passing the by-law, but they neglected the main point, in failing to recognize the sole responsibility in a matter dealing with streets, and public places—placed by law and practice—under the sole responsible custody of the city.

There are other features of the by-law that will bear future reference.

HIGH-PRICED TURPS.

An indication of the growing famine in turpentine and resin in Germany is shown by the prices quoted by The Savannah (Ga.) Naval Stores Review of September 4. This shows that turpentine, which brings 36 cents per gallon in Savannah, is worth $3.25 in Hamburg, while K resin, worth $4.00 per barrel of 280 pounds on this side, is quoted at $4 per barrel in Germany. This is good evidence of the effectiveness of the British naval blockade.—Globe.

DON'T PLAY POLITICS.

The country is at war. Every man and every dollar available are needed in the great cause, and it ought to be plain to Sir Robert Borden and his colleagues that it is their bounden duty to devote their undivided attention to Canada's efforts in the great struggle. There is much to be done—much that would remain undone or be done too late, if the country should be thrown into the chaos of a political party. Canada should know no party strife to-day; it has more important work in hand. The Liberal party has urged the Government to adopt this course; and stands ready to refrain from all partisan criticism while the agreement is in force. But it does not propose to agree to a "political truce" covering two or three years after the war is over. This is no time for the Borden Government to play politics. The people want a Government that will have no programme but the vigorous prosecution of the war.—St. John Telegraph.

POSSIBLE COMMERCIAL AND FINANCIAL DISASTER FROM THE GERMAN PROPAGANDA

The activities of German sympathizers in the United States have a very wide range from newspaper publicity to bomb planting, from criminal work to threats of political retaliation. The Government at Washington is now investigating serious charges made by the New York World as to the wide-spread propaganda by Germans in the United States and directed by Germans in high official positions in the United States and in the Fatherland. The American Truth Society with headquarters in New York, have distributed a circular advising the withdrawal of gold from banks as a protest against the manufacture and shipment of war munitions to the Allies. The result of even a limited compliance with this suggestion would mean commercial and financial disaster to the country. The deposit liabilities of banks are more than four times greater than the supply of all kinds of money and currency in the country. It is not expected that there will be even limited compliance with the treasonable suggestion but it is important to know that the pro-German element is well organized and busy. In relation to the incident, the journal of the American Bankers' Association says that it is important to know to what extent it may be carried before American tolerance ceases to be a virtue and free speech and a free press cease to be the cloaks behind which conspirators and traitors may hide.—Monetary Times.

A TEUTONIC SET-BACK FOR UNITED STATES DIPLOMACY

Those American papers who saw in Count von Bernstorff's note, following the sinking of the Arabic, a moral triumph for American diplomacy, will have their enthusiasm considerably subdued by the note which the German Government has just forwarded to Washington on the matter. In effect, the note says Germany will carry on her submarine war in her own way, regardless of international law, and regardless alike of the rights of neutrals and non-combatants. She considers she has done her whole duty to neutrals by warning them off the sea, but if neutrals do not obey her in this respect they must take their chances. Germany, as a concession to the United States, has ordered her submarine commanders not to sink passenger ships unless they resist capture or try to escape. But submarine commanders must nevertheless use their discretion as to what they think such vessels are "about" to do, and torpedo them without warning of they think they are "about" to resist capture or try to escape.

This, in effect, is what happened in regard to the Arabic. She was torpedoed without warning not for what she did, but for what the subordinate commander considered she was "about to do." Is not that a beautiful specimen of German logic? As to the American lives lost by this attack without warning, Germany admits that the United States is entitled to compensation in the way of a copious expression of Germany's regrets, but will not admit that such murders call for the acknowledgement of any other obligation. If the American Government cannot "harmonize" with Germany on this point, Germany is willing to submit the question of compensation—but certainly not the right to continuing the murders to The Hague! Germany, in fact, has revised international law without consulting any other nation, and if the new version rules roughshod over the most sacred rights of humanity, well so much the worse for humanity. Belgium had a like pronouncement delivered to her at the outset of the war. Germany is now experimenting to see how far the United States will submit to being dosed with the same medicine.

Sir George Foster's "Heart Cries Out" For the Closed Bar

Special to The Examiner.

TORONTO, Sept. 11. — Sir George Foster's strong plea for the abolition of the bar, made in his speech to the Life Underwriters' Association of Canada, has created a deep impression. Sir George has always been an advocate of temperance, but this is the first occasion for some time that Sir George has made any public references to the subject, and his statements all the more noteworthy coming, as it does, from him as a Minister of the Crown. He said:

"I confess to you that every time I see the open bar and see the young soldiers of this country coming in and going out every time I pass the open door and see the unemployed, who perchance have got a few days employment, making a beeline, I confess that my soul cries out for the closed bar in Canada."

Another significant feature of the incident is the fact that neither of the two government organs, the Mail and World, in their account of the banquet the following morning had a single line about Sir George's references to the temperance situation and this, too, in spite of the fact that it was this part of Sir George's speech which aroused the most pronounced and spontaneous applause from his audience which, it must be remembered, included leading insurance men from all parts of Canada.

Sir George's reference to the partial war part of his plea for increased thrift in Canada during the war and the necessity for stricter conservation of monies and energy all along the line.

Mr. N. W. Rowell followed Sir George on the speakers' list and he, too, took the opportunity of urging the adoption of a traffic which he said was demanding large sums of money for its perpetuation, was sterile in its return in value and was impairing the earning capacity of the men who patronized it.

HE STRUCK IT RIGHT AT LAST

After Suffering Almost Two Years, "Fruit-a-tives" Brought Relief.

MR. H. WHITMAN
1674 Esplanade Avenue, Montreal.

"In 1912, I was taken suddenly ill with Acute Stomach Trouble and dropped in the street. I was treated by several physicians for nearly two years. I was in constant misery from my stomach and my weight dropped down from 225 pounds to 160 pounds. Several of my friends advised me to try 'Fruit-a-tives' and I did so. That was eight months ago. I began to improve almost with the first dose. No other medicine I ever used acted so pleasantly and quickly as 'Fruit-a-tives', and by using it I recovered from the distressing Stomach Trouble, and all pain and Constipation and misery were cured. I completely recovered by the use of 'Fruit-a-tives' and now I weigh 208 pounds. I cannot praise 'Fruit-a-tives' enough". H. WHITMAN.

50c. a box, 6 for $2.50, trial size, 25c. At all dealers or sent postpaid by Fruit-a-tives Limited, Ottawa.

FASHIONS FOR SCHOOL GIRLS

Norfolk Suits in Tweed and Serge

AWORD ON SPORT CLOTHES

NEW YORK, Sept. 11.—Vacation's over! The Pattys and Julias and Sally are coming from everywhere—mountains, shore and far-away homes with pretty frocks and bright, alert brains ready to absorb all the learning possible between now and next summer. The time has come for Latin, Greek, geometry and incidentally fudge parties, candy pulls and midnight lunches, not included in the regular curriculum, therefore far more fascinating, and, of course, basket-ball and the various other gymnasium stunts to help out the physical and mental machinery.

The Morning Walk.

The streets are gay with them in the early morning; these bright faced happy schoolgirls. They stride by in smart, straight-heeled shoes. Norfolk suits of tweed or serge, set off by chic velvet tams, hats of velour or a softly coloured felt. As the days are still bright and warm, one often sees a trim serge frock with bretelles, worn with a blouse of contrasting crepe de Chine, or one of the brightly striped or dotted voiles.

Bretelle Frock of Serge.

Our exclusive schools frown upon an elaborate wardrobe no matter how prosperous papa may be; many of them give out a list of clothing required, with one thing uppermost — simplicity. This does not necessarily mean that the clothing must be ugly. The smart little suits and dresses of serge, tweed, or the attractive checks and novelty fabrics with contrasting collars and cuffs, are smart and becoming to a degree. One particularly smart little dress, worn the other morning, was of dark blue gabardine, that practical sister of serge, which wears so well and sheds dust and dirt so effectively. It had bretelles and a wide stitched belt of the material of the skirt and was worn with an under-blouse of herringbone striped crepe de Chine, cuffed with the material of the skirt and collared with sheer, crisp organdy. The wearer, who was a smart New York day-school girl, carried her bundle of books nonchalantly over one shoulder and wore her velvet tam on the back of her bright hair so carelessly that more than I turned for a second look.

The Second Suit.

On matinee days and Sundays the suit is a trifle more dressy, of French serge, gabardine, broadcloth, or one of the new satin finished materials, and is trimmed with a line or two of braid or a band of fur. An attractive hat of velvet, or satin and velvet with the soft, drooping brim, now modish, and just a suggestion of trimming, is most becoming to young girls. The soft, graceful tilt to the brim this season is particularly pretty and youthful. An attractive little Miss from the southland, whose eyes are as dark as the oft quoted Spanish maiden's, wore a suit of midnight blue velours de laine with high military collar of black silk braid, with scarlet and gold; the scarlet and gold was repeated in the carved buttons which closed the coat, Russian fashion, on the left shoulder, in the braided girdle, and again heading the hem of the short, full skirt. With this suit, which was worn one afternoon at a concert, she wore a very simple blouse of baby-flesh pink Georgette crepe. The costume was simplicity itself, but chic, well thought out simplicity.

GET AFTER THESE DOLLARS

OUR town should get ALL of the trade in our trade area. We don't worry about our neighboring town's business. We have enough to do to take care of our OWN. But we should get ALL of our own. How about these dollars that are GETTING away from us? How about the dollars that are SLIPPING through our fingers? We have the GOODS. We have the values. Our prices are RIGHT. And yet there is a LOT of money slipping AWAY from us constantly. The best way to get AFTER this money is to tell the truth about the man or the system that is taking it away. When She Failed To Get Fat He Wanted His $400 Ring Back

NEW YORK, Sept 7.—When Frederick L. Gahn, general agent for the Prudential Life Insurance Company at Orange, N.J., slipped a $400 diamond engagement ring upon the finger of Miss Mary E. Viche one night last April he stipulated that she must become fat.

She was slender then, and was yesterday when she appeared in the Magistrate's Court at Orange to answer Mr. Gahn's replevin demand for the return of the engagement ring. He insisted she was positively "skinny" and that as she had not fulfilled his demands he was entitled to the return of the ring.

Miss Viche, who lives at No. 808 Bergen Street, Newark, testified that although all the fashion magazines specified that the feminine figure must be slender to be fashionable, she had made the heroic sacrifice of trying to become fat by eating six and eight meals a day, eating cereals by the truckload, potatoes by the ton and all other fat-forming foods until she became ill. All her efforts resulted in accentuated slenderness, as she put it, but Mr. Gahn called it "skinniness."

As the wedding had been set for early autumn Mr. Gahn testified that he looked with scrutiny upon the girl as the weeks rolled by and she did not seem to take on any fat. He felt of her ribs, but still just as many ribs were apparent. The fattening of a bride for the altar became such a serious thing with Mr. Gahn that a quarrel resulted.

"He said that as I did not seem to be getting fat and as he wanted a plump young bride I would not do," said Miss Viche yesterday. "Then he began this action to get the ring back. In the first place, he gave the ring to me on my birthday as a double birthday and wedding present. By that he saved considerable."

The jury deliberated upon a verdict only fifteen minutes and then found against Mr. Gahn holding that the ring was a birthday present to Miss Viche and that he was the one who broke the engagement to marry.

ECZEMA AND SORE EYES.

"My daughter suffered from inflamed eyelids and eczema on her head," writes Mr. H. W. Lear, Port Hanford, Sask. "The child was in a bad state and suffered greatly. The doctor failed to help her, and on recommendation of a friend, I used Dr Chase's Ointment, which made a complete cure. With a grateful heart I write you this letter."

Conservatory Open For Season

Splendid Year is Augured For Well Known Local Institution

The Peterborough Conservatory of Music reopened for the season on Thursday, Sept. 2nd, with every prospect of a most successful season, a large number of pupils having already registered. The results of the examinations held during the past year show a splendid record for the Conservatory, some forty pupils being successful in passing the Toronto Conservatory and College examinations in Piano and Vocal and Violin, held in June last. As in former years, regular weekly recitals will be held for the Junior pupils, under the supervision of their respective teachers. There will also be evening recitals for the more advanced students. The musical director of the Conservatory may be consulted at any time by all interested in musical studies of their children.

Public Charges Are Not Beneficiaries of Life Assurance

A census was taken about a year ago of the inmates of alms houses, of prisons, of asylums for the care of the helpless, in an eastern state. It was found but three of the occupants of these institutions, who numbered altogether over fifteen hundred, had been beneficiaries of life insurance.

It was somebody's neglect that forced the public to pay higher taxes in order to take care of nearly all these people.

Life insurance limits the needs of poorhouses, prisons, old folks' homes. Life insurance, therefore, reduces the needs of the State in maintaining institutions for the care of the needy.

The man who has sufficient insurance to take care of his own future if he reaches old age, and of his dependents, should anything happen to him, is doing his duty, not only to his family, but to his State.

WOULD YOU CONSIDER

a proposition making provision for your family in the event of death, or, if living, provision for old age?

Full particulars will be cheerfully given by addressing

Secretary of the Canadian War Contingent Association Points Out the Need in Interesting Letter to the Local Soldiers' Wives' and Mothers' Club.

Mrs. F. A. Thomas, president of Peterborough Soldiers' Wives and Mothers' Club, has received the following letter from the Canadian War Contingent Association:

Westminster Palace Hotel
Victoria Street,
London, S.W.
August 26, 1915.

Mrs. F. A. Thomas,
Pres. The Soldiers' Wives and Mothers' Club,
Brownsea, P.O.,
Peterborough, Canada.

Dear Mrs. Thomas,

I am directed by the committee of the Canadian War Contingent Association, as secretary to convey to you our very grateful thanks for the box of comforts which have been received at the Queen's Canadian Military Hospital.

As you probably know, the Queen's Canadian Military Hospital, Beachborough Park, Shorncliffe, Kent, was equipped and is maintained by the Canadian War Contingent Association. By special permission it was named after the Queen, who has shown the most kindly interest in its welfare. Recently the Association, at the urgent request of the War Office, have added two large wings to the hospital, bringing its capacity up to 130 beds. The hospital, which was Beachborough Park was presented to the Canadian War Contingent Association by Sir Arthur Markham. This gentleman has added to this munificent gift, by many others, of equipment and hospital essentials. Lady Markham herself is the superintendent of the hospital.

I notice that you say that you will be kind enough to send us another gift later on. May I say that all donations whatever for the Association's hospital, or for the troops in camp or at the Front, should be addressed to the Canadian War Contingent Association, Westminster Palace Hotel, Victoria Street, London S.W. Owing to every available inch of room being required for the hospital patients, the main depot for its stores is at the above address. Owing to the great congestion of traffic, incidental to the war, we find it much better and quicker to send our supplies to the hospital by motor van from London rather than by railway. Moreover, the unpacking, sorting and registering of consignments requires a staff and an amount of bookkeeping which it would be impossible to carry on in the hospital. The Canadian War Contingent Association is under the chairmanship of Sir George Perley, and is, as you probably know, the medium through which comforts are sent to the troops at the Front.

As Hon. Secretary of the committee which receives and unpacks all consignments, I am in a position to know whereof I speak, when I say that the efforts of the Canadian women to send comforts to their soldiers in the camps and in hospitals are beyond all praise.

Sir Robert Borden visited the Association rooms the other day, and I was glad to be able to tell him that the quantity and quality of comforts sent forward from Canada is worthy of the very greatest admiration.

I will send you in a day or two, a little booklet dealing with some of the work of the committee, in which your society may be interested.

I hope that you will allow me to suggest that tobacco and gum are needed by the association in very large quantities. We forward to the Front alone every month enormous quantities of these things. Though we have made excellent contracts with wholesale firms for the purchase of them, nevertheless we need in addition all that Canada can send us.

The kind and number of comforts which go forward every month to the Front depends, of course, upon the requisitions we receive from the officers in command of the different units there. We keep a book for each battalion. Some, of course, requisition oftener than others, but the total consignments each month run in value to many hundreds of pounds. Socks and small-size light-weight Turkish hand towels are things asked for. Some months we forward as many as eighteen thousand pairs of socks.

Trusting that the information in this letter may be of interest to your society, and with the grateful thanks of the association,

Sincerely yours,
ELEANOR McLAREN BROWN,
Hon. Secy. Ladies' Committee,
C.W.C. Association.

crisis and the rise of one minister and the downfall of another, were, for reasons unknown to the Italian people, to be traced to the influence of the German financier, while his power in turn was employed for the benefit of the fatherland. It is one of the most startling revelations yet made of the thoroughness with which Germany has worked for the domination of Europe by the German nation.

These articles were from the pen of one of the most remarkable, and one of the most powerful personalities in Europe. The personality is the more remarkable and the more powerful because it is so apparently shy, abashed and even secret. Imagine a man of small stature, with a short beard turning grey, a head rather bald, with somewhat shaggy short locks on the side and a pair of eyes, brilliant, searching, grey-blue, with infinite depths of reflection, observation and memories; and you have some idea of what the man is like externally. You might take him for a German professor or for the General of the Jesuits, and he flits through Europe with the rapidity and the constant changefulness of a member of the Order going on those secret missions that change the face of Europe. The one thing you wouldn't take him for is an Irishman; yet he is Irish to the last drop of his blood, and, indeed, was born in the good old city of Dublin.

Dr. E. J. Dillon, for he is the potent person, is one of the marvels of erudition combined with the up-to-dateness of the most modern American journalist. How many languages he knows I have never tried to calculate. Russian he certainly speaks like a native. Sometimes, indeed, when he is among Russians, he gives the impression that he is Russian to the core; even in appearance he begins to look Russian. He might be a son of Tolstoy, to whom he has a certain resemblance.

A Master of Oriental Languages.

When he was a young man he was professor of Oriental languages in the University of Fief, and nobody will know what that mastery of Oriental languages must mean in industry and in the natural born genius for languages. This knowledge of Oriental languages has stood in good stead with Dr. Dillon, for he is able to write learned articles about the old Testament, and amid his other controversies had many a joust with the learned theologians of Rome and Canterbury on some of the outstanding disputes in the interpretation of the Scriptures. French I have heard him speak with French people like one of themselves. German he knows thoroughly; also Spanish; also Italian; also Greek; both ancient and modern.

What you would expect this man to have been is a professor in a German university. He has the wide knowledge, the broad culture, which you expect from one of the scholars of the Fatherland. But once he happened to meet Harry Lawson, the editor and, with his father, chief proprietor, of the Daily Telegraph. There was a rebellion going on somewhere in the East. Dillon struck the clever editor; he was employed by the Daily Telegraph and has remained in their employment ever since. For several years he was its accredited correspondent in Petrograd, and now and then all Europe was either delighted or affrighted by some special item of news which Dillon was able to anticipate the world in hearing by his intimate friendship with Count Witte and with all the other representative men of Russia.

But Dr. Dillon is a restless spirit and often he was away from Petrograd searching out the key to the enigma of some great and perilous European problem. With his extraordinary knowledge of languages, with his Irish sweetness of approach, he is able to penetrate to every secret council chamber of Europe. There is no statesman of Europe whom he does not know personally. It is almost bewildering to hear him, on a brief visit to London, describe his forthcoming tour.

"I must go to France," he will say. "There is a point I want to discuss with M. Clemenceau. After that I must really see the Prime Minister in Madrid, and I have an invitation to have a little talk with the king. From Madrid I have to go on to the Balearic Islands because Maura, the leader of the Conservative party, and in my opinion the ablest statesman in Spain, has gone there for his vacation and has asked me specially to give him a call."

"And where next?" you ask, breathlessly.

"Oh; I have to go to Rome. I am still on the track of that curious Austrian intrigue by which Rampolla was kept out of the Papacy when Pius X was chosen instead of him. Perhaps I may see Sonnino, who is coming to the front again."

"And then?" you ask, still breathless.

"Oh; of course, I must go to Athens and have a talk with Venizelos."

Helped to Make Venizelos.

Which brings me to one of the many strange episodes in this strange, weird, nomad, mysterious figure. Dillon is one of the men who helped to make Venizelos. He knew Venizelos when Venizelos was a lawyer who had never gone out of his native Crete.

It will be remembered that Venizelos had his rougher experiences in Crete, extending to his raising a little rebellion and going to the mountains with his followers and defying the powers of the Cretan government. I am not sure that Dillon was not his companion during this desperate enterprise. Anyhow, the two men became great friends. Dillon saw the immense potentialities of this small provincial lawyer, wrote him up, and within a few years Venizelos was the omnipotent prime minister of Greece.

You will always find that Dillon is at the centre point of the European storm. He went to Vienna when Count Berchtold was contemplating the note to Serbia which precipitated Europe into the present war. Then when the question of Italy's entrance in the war was hanging in the balance, Dillon was there, sending long telegrams daily to the "Telegraph" and recording the ups and downs of the tremendous struggle from hour to hour.

When the Balkan States came to London to try to settle their differences, Dillon was in Claridge's hotel, and every morning the Daily Telegraph contained as full an account of the secret sittings of the Balkan spokesmen as if Dillon had been sitting in the room.

He was with Witte in Portsmouth when the treaty between Russia and Japan was being negotiated, and his communications, sometimes private and through third persons, had something to do with the result.

Just before the war he had got Talaat Bey, one of the most powerful of the Young Turks, to agree to meet Venizelos in Brussels and patch up a peace between Turkey and Greece.

The hand of Dillon, hidden, often unknown, is under many of the big transactions of European history, and still he remains the quiet, shy, rather silent man; and he was born on the quays of Dublin.

CANADA'S REVENUE SHOWS INCREASE

Month of August Slightly in Advance of the Month a Year Ago

OTTAWA, Sept. 10. The Department of Finance issued today the revised financial statement for the last fiscal year, together with the statement for August and the first five months of the current year.

The total revenue to the end of the fiscal year was $333,078,481. Consolidated fund expenditures were $135,523,295 and on capital $107,389,383. Under the heading of war outlays $60,750,476 was spent up to the end of the fiscal year. On public works, including railways and canals, $41,447,739 was expended, and for railway subsidies $5,191,507.

Where Revenue Comes From.

The revenue was made up as follow: Customs, $75,941,249; excise, $21,479,790; post office, $13,046,664; public works, including railways and canals, $12,953,487; miscellaneous, $9,652,379.

The August financial statement places the revenue at $19,240,844, an increase of $44,000 over August, 1914. For the first five months of the present fiscal year, the aggregate receipts have been $60,089,196, a decrease of $200,000.

The August postal revenue doubled that of 1914 and amounts to $1,899,779. Likewise public works, railways and canals revenue increased in August.

A decrease is shown in expenditures on consolidated fund in the five months of the fiscal year of about four million dollars. This year's total under that head is $38,870,712.

On capital account, the five month expenditure totals $13,898,679. The net debt on August 31 was $472,408,856, an increase of 140 millions.

Temporary loans of $145,940,000 are largely for war purposes. The note circulation in the year was $152,065,684, an increase of $38,000,000.

How Fat Folks May Become Thin

By Elizabeth Thomas

Perhaps you are suddenly becoming stout, or it may be that you have been putting on weight for years. In either case the cause is the same lack of oxygen-carrying power of the blood. This trouble occurs in adults of both sexes and all ages, but it may be overcome very easily and without any of the privations that most people imagine necessary to reduce their weight.

Simply go to your druggist and get some oil of orlene capsules. Take one after each meal and before going to bed. Weigh yourself so as to know just how fast you are losing weight. Wonderful results have been accomplished by this inexpensive recipe, but be sure to get the genuine oil of orlene in capsule form. It is sold only in original sealed packages. Any large druggist can supply you, or a large size box will be sent on receipt of $1.00. Address F. J. Little Drug Co., Box 1240, Montreal, Can.

NEWSPAPERS' AID AGAINST DISEASE

NEW YORK, Sept. 10.—Printers' ink is now being used to educate the people in the prevention of disease. Health officers, school teachers, social service agents, employers and others are using the columns of the newspapers to spread information about the dangers of tuberculosis, typhoid fever, infantile paralysis, diphtheria, and other diseases.

Among other things it prevents tuberculosis and builds hospitals. It cures the sick, saves the lives of children and controls epidemics of smallpox. Thousands of babies are today alive in New York State, largely because baby clothes of printers' ink were administered to the public by the state and local departments of health.

You may cure yourself of that cough in the privacy of a sick room, but to cure the public of all its ills you must get into the newspapers.

Tribute to the part that newspapers play in the promotion of public health was also paid by Dr. W. L. Park, Commissioner of Health of Rockford, Ill. The Departments of Health in the larger cities, he said, had taken the newspapers into their confidence and had secured the co-operation of the press in the presentation of health information.

The Programme and Promise of Peterboro' Choral Society

The above Society starts out on another season's work on Tuesday evening, when the first practice will be held in the Collegiate Hall at 8 o'clock.

A well organized and efficient Choral Society is a distinct educational asset to a city, and should not only be a means of pleasure and instruction to the members themselves, but should have a tendency to raise the morale of a community provided the musical offerings of the Society to the public are of the highest standard, both in regard to the class of music performed and the quality of its performance.

The Society is to be congratulated on having prevailed upon Mr. John Allan, organist and choirmaster of St. Paul's Church to assume the post of Conductor and Musical Director. Mr Allan's long choral experience in the Old Country and also in Canada testify to his qualifications for such a post, and under his baton the public of Peterborough may confidently expect results that will cause the city to feel a justifiable pride in their Choral Society.

Quality, not quantity, will be the aim of the Society and the public is assured that nothing will be offered to them that is not in as thorough a state of preparedness and as near perfection as diligent study can secure.

Mr. Allan informed the Executive that he was proud to say that he has never yet experienced the discouragement of a poor audience. Everything he has offered to the public has been enthusiastically supported by them, and this he says is accounted for by the fact that he has offered them nothing unworthy of their cooperation, and that has created a feeling of trust in the mind of the public that they will get full value both for their attendance and their money.

This policy will be continued by Mr. Allan in connection with the Choral Society. It is the intention to give Handel's "Messiah" about Christmas time, and to institute yearly performances of this great work the aim being to give them along the traditional lines, as followed in the Old Country, making a specialty of the chorus work and securing the best soloists.

The Executive extends a very cordial invitation to all good singers to join the Society, and their attendance at the first rehearsal on Tuesday will be appreciated.

There are many qualifications needful in the good chorister, among others a voice, then a willingness to learn and to utilize the instruction given, regularity and punctuality in attendance, a desire to be friendly with your fellow members, but the greatest qualification of all is unselfishness, to get a perfect blend in choral work every member must be prepared to practice that virtue.

He will have the able assistance of Mr. George Chandler, choirmaster of All Saints' Church, as musical colleague, a post Mr. Chandler has filled with great acceptance for some seasons; also Miss Flowers will again act as accompanist.

A CHARGE OF ASSAULT

Defendant Was Indebted to Former Peterborough Photographer

BRANTFORD, Sept 11—Considerable excitement was caused near the corner of King and Dalhousie streets when Lewis Whittaker, it is alleged, was assaulted by his father-in-law, Mr. Titos Robinson. Whittaker was allowed out on suspended sentence, two years ago, having been found guilty of stealing a camera and a short time ago a charge of stealing $30 was laid against him by Wilfrid Ormie the local photographer, formerly of Peterborough. To this charge, Whittaker after being remanded for several days, was allowed one month in which to work off his indebtedness in the employ of Mr. Ormie.

While walking down Dalhousie street, with his wife, who is Mr Robinson's daughter, Whittaker encountered Mr Robinson and the latter, according to Whittaker struck him in the face. A great crowd of people assembled during the disturbance which followed, and Sergt. Wallace and Constables Cox and Stuart were threatened with a busy time for a few moments. Mr. Whittaker lodged a complaint against his father-in-law and the latter will be charged with assault in police court.

Sir Wilfrid Had Bad Night

Examiner Special:

OTTAWA, Sept 11.—Sir Wilfrid Laurier's physician reports this morning that his patient passed a restless night and suffered considerable pain from the effects of the operation. He states, however, that this was to be expected, and that Sir Wilfrid is making satisfactory progress towards complete recovery.

63 Per Cent. of 1915 Taxes Already Paid

Sixty-three per cent of the 1915 taxes have been received by Tax Collector Green, according to his latest report to the Council. This is identical with the percentage of the 1914 taxes received at this time last year. From this comparison it may be inferred that the citizens have the money for their taxes or rather had, and also have promptly made their payments when considered alongside last year.

Valour of Canadians

OTTAWA, Sept. 11. "The stand which Canadian troops made at St. Julien and their wonderful bravery is known all over Europe" said Abbe Perrin, Superior of the Canadian College at Rome, who is in Ottawa today on a mission to the Papal Legate and Archbishop Gauthier. "I visited recently many small villages in both Italy and France. When the people found I was a Canadian they were most enthusiastic. They praised in the most eulogistic terms the Canadian troops, and I myself, just because I was a Canadian, was treated with the honour of a wounded soldier. The valor of the Canadians is on the lips of all Europe. I was proud indeed, to be able to say I am a Canadian."

The Canadian College at Rome will be closed, so far as studies are concerned, until the war is over, and it is in connection with this and the question of reopening it when the war is over that the Abbe is visiting Canada. He offered the College as a hospital for Canadian troops, but as they are already well provided for, and it was some distance from the front, the offer was not accepted. The Abbe met Sir Robert Borden while in Paris, and while here will pay his respects to the Prime Minister and also to Sir Wilfrid Laurier.

Observer.

To the Editor of The Examiner.

Dear Sir,—I noted with pleasure and interest the businesslike and satisfactory report of the Local Branch of the Red Cross Society, printed in your impression of yesterday. I am struck with the generosity reflected in the receipts—contributions—and the care with which the disbursements seem to have been made.

But, as one deeply concerned in the cause and the persons the Society represents, I wish to point out one thing in the disbursements, that, it strikes me, will tend to produce less money to disburse. I notice the large sum of $17500 paid to a Toronto firm for one kind of article gauze.

Now, we are all keen in the interest of doing our shopping, and keeping city money, at home, and it does not seem good, nor fair, not consistent, to have the money, contributed by our citizens, spent out of the city, to the commercial benefit of outsiders. I am told that the reason is the article can be bought at a slightly cheaper rate in Toronto. That may be a proper thing to defer to, when nothing but hard business, uninterrupted by sentiment, is considered, but I doubt if the lessened encouragement to contributing it may cause, will, in the long run, make the outside purchase at a little lower price, a profitable practice, or one in the interests of the work of the Red Cross.

I am, as I said, deeply interested in the Red Cross work, and would not like to see anything done to lessen the spontaniety and cheerfulness of the contributions of our citizens, upon which the Local Branch has to depend for the munitions of the splendid war it is carrying on.

Yours truly

Contributor.

Peterborough, Sept 10, '15

Editor of The Examiner

Dear Sir,—I will thank you to publish these lines in your valuable newspaper.

Several weeks ago Messrs. Rackam and Park went around our city asking for subscriptions to buy a field kitchen for the regiment, and I understand they collected a considerable amount for that purpose, and some time ago parties were asking why the amounts had not been acknowledged and there was a reply I believe from Messrs. Rackam and Park that as soon as they got back to Barriefield they would acknowledge the different amounts subscribed, and by whom, but although I believe these gentlemen have returned to Barriefield some weeks ago I have not seen any acknowledgment, but I think they have a right to do so.

I also notice that the Government have issued orders forbidding officers and soldiers from collecting money from people to buy field kitchens or machine guns. Under those circumstances I think that Messrs. Rackam and Park should hand all the money they have collected back to the different parties or hand it over to the Red Cross Society or the Patriotic Funds after they have published the list and amount collected for field kitchen in the Peterborough daily papers.

Thanking you, Mr Editor, I remain,

Yours,

One of the Subscribers.

A SURPRISE FOR THE TEACHER.

Miss Smith the teacher, was hearing the history class. The pupils seemed unusually dull. Now, she said, Mary followed Edward I., didn't he? Yes, ma am, replied a little girl. And now, who followed Mary? asked the teacher, hopefully, and was silent for a moment. Then Elsie raised her hand. Yes, Elsie, queried the teacher. "Who followed Mary?" "Her little lamb, teacher," said Esie, triumphantly.

IN THE CLUTCHES OF RHEUMATISM

The Great Suffering of a Calgary Lady Before Relief Was Found

There is still a very prevalent belief that rheumatism is due to cold or wet weather. This belief is probably due to the fact that when the blood is thin and watery there is an acute sensitiveness to atmospheric conditions and a change to wet weather often means a return of the excruciating pains. Rheumatism, however, is rooted in the blood, and it can only be driven from the system by building up and enriching the blood. Hot baths and outward applications of linin nt may give temporary relief, but cannot cure. If the disease is not attacked through the blood, it simply fastens itself more firmly on the system and the sufferer ultimately becomes hopelessly crippled. The truth of this is proved by the case of Mrs. Frank Ford, of Calgary, Alta. Mrs. Ford says: "I was an almost helpless cripple from rheumatism. It seemed to have settled in every joint. My arms and hands had to be bandaged. My ankles were so swollen that I had to use crutches. After doctoring for a long time and growing steadily worse the doctor advised me to go to Banff Springs. I stayed there for eight weeks, taking daily baths and returned home poorer in pocket by about $150 and not one bit improved in health. I then entered a local hospital, but did not derive any benefit. I was in such constant pain that I almost wished to die, and I felt sure I would be a lifelong cripple. It was at this stage that a friend who had been greatly benefitted by Dr Williams' Pink Pills urged me to try them. I began the use of the Pills and after taking them a few weeks the swelling in the joints began to go down and the pain was relieved. This greatly encouraged me and I continued the treatment until in the course of three months the cure was complete. I had thrown away the crutches, could walk anywhere and do my own housework, and I never felt better in my life than I do at the present time, and all this is due to the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. I have also given the Pills to my daughter who suffered from anaemia and she has gained in flesh and become a strong, healthy girl."

If you are suffering from rheumatism or any weakness of the blood give Dr Williams' Pink Pills a fair trial and they will speedily restore you to health and strength. Sold by all medicine dealers or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 by The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co. Brockville, Ont.

A FINE RECORD

The results of the examinations during the past year show a magnificent record for Albert College. With one exception all Piano and Vocal students were successful in passing Conservatory and College examinations, most securing honours and first honours. All candidates in Art whose work is examined by Prof W. A. Sherwood, R.A., C.A., passed, many with honours. All students in the Expression Department were successful.

In the Departmental examinations 100 per cent. of those who wrote on Matriculation and Faculty got their standing. In Normal Entrance and Junior Matriculation ten students were successful, three securing honours, and only one had spent two years on the work, the time allowed by the High School.

College opens on Sept. 6th, and at present prospects for a good attendance are bright.

How London Looks When Under Fire

fills the sky. The dome of historic St. Peter's Cathedral looms up against the the old verger, half dressed. It has a side street. At the gateway stands the old verger, half-dressed. It has been his duty for the past half century to guard the church against thieves and lies as other sextons have guarded it for centuries past.

But he's got a bigger job on his hands than any of them ever had before.

The Verger's white-haired wife stands beside him. They are talking with three girls such as never comes into the lives of church sextons except on nights like this.

They are pointing out to the aged couple with cheaply gloved fingers the slowly fading yellow form of the Zeppelin.

We are brothers and sisters in the streets of London tonight, neither man nor woman, neither good nor bad, just human, outraged, mad, unwilling to die. It is a miracle the great gas-bag in the air brings about.

On the plinth of Chinese Gordon's monument sit a soldier and a girl. She is tracing invisible figures on the stone pavement. His arm is around her, but face is bent to mine.

Maybe they've seen the Zeppelin, but just now she's listening to the old story that will be new when the books telling the story of tonight's Zeppelin raid have crumbled into the dust.

They typify London and England unchanged one iota by this Zeppelin raid that only end of or the loss of forty or more burning lives.

Doctor Said Only Hope Was In An Operation

Was Skeptical When He Began the Use of Dr. Chase's Ointment—Relief Came Quickly

Here is a plain, honest statement in regard to Dr Chase's Ointment. Between the lines of this letter you can read the gratitude which its writer feels. One does not suffer from annoying, distressing piles for ten years without appreciating a cure when it is obtained.

Almost every mail brings the report of someone who has been cured of piles by the use of Dr. Chase's Ointment. Such statements are never used without the permission of the writer, and until we are satisfied that the cure is genuine and the writer a person of responsibility.

You may believe in operations for piles, and think there is no other cure. Write to Mr. Ingles, enclosing stamp, and he will gladly verify his statement. He will tell you that the pain, the expense, the risk of an operation are quite unnecessary. That relief and cure come with the use of Dr. Chase's Ointment.

Mr. Ernest W. Ingles, Penticton, B.C., writes: "I suffered from piles for ten years and though I tried all kinds of ointments and injections I really had no permanent relief until I used Dr. Chase's Ointment. When I began this treatment I had absolutely no faith in it, for I had been examined by a well-known physician in Vancouver, and he said that an operation was the only thing that would benefit me. It was surprising the relief I obtained from the very first box, and now, after using four boxes, I am practically cured. My case was so exceptionally bad that I received no relief day or night, and for this reason the results are wonderful."

You can obtain Dr. Chase's Ointment from any dealer at 60 cents a box. If you do not want to risk this much send a two-cent stamp to pay postage, and mention this paper, and we shall send you a sample box free. We are so certain that any sufferer from piles will obtain relief by using this ointment that we do not hesitate to make you this offer. Edmanson, Bates & Co., Limited, Toronto.

Weather beaten skin had best come off, for no amount of beautifying will ever make such skin pretty to look at. The surest, safest, easiest way to shed the despoiled cuticle is with the treatment suggested. Put the wax on before retiring, as you would cold cream, and rinse it off the next morning with warm water. Minute particles of scarf skin will peel off day by day, gradually showing the healthy, youthful skin beneath. One ounce of mercolized wax, obtainable at any drugstore is enough to make any discolored or spotted complexion clear, white and satiny soft. Its action is so gentle no injury is caused and the face shows no trace of its use.

Burning heat, irritating winds and dirt are such wrinkle makers that the daily use of the following astringent-tonic lotion at this season is highly advisable. Powdered saxolite, 1 oz., dissolved in witch hazel ½ pint. Used as a face bath this is a splendid wrinkle remover and preventive.

"GOD SAVE THE KING"

CITY HALL PARAGRAPHS

Ald. A. A. McIntyre, Chairman of the Property Committee, proposes to call a meeting of his committee some time early next week.

Help Changed.

There has been a change in the executive of the city's incinerating plant. This change is one of the matters that the Property Committee will be asked to adjust.

Too Much Wood.

It is claimed that too much wood is consumed at the incinerator. This has constituted a difficulty ever since the plant was opened. Those who are in a position to know say that the amount of extra fuel consumed depends on the management.

Tracks Are Laid.

The street car extension on Charlotte Street is complete and about ready for use. Concrete has been laid between the tracks and the remainder of the road is undergoing similar treatement.

Building Permits.

Mr. James Kendry will erect a garage at 754 Water Street at a cost of $600. Permission has been granted to William Detcher to construct a verandah at 9 Hilliard Street, to cost $100.

WITH OTHER MUNICIPALITIES.

Wentworth County Council decided to refuse to pay High School fees to Hamilton.

Increased the Grant.

Bruce County Council at a special meeting at Walkerton unanimously voted $4,000 per month for patriotic purposes as long as the war lasts, thus increasing their previous grant of $1,000 by 300 per cent.

Will Investigate Complaints.

The Hamilton Board of Education decided to ask the Department of Education to appoint an architect to investigate complaints about the plans and specifications of Adelaide Hoodless School.

DEFENDER OF LIEGE IN PRISONERS' CAMP

BERLIN, Sept. 9 (by Wireless Telegraph to Sayville, L.I.)—A Paris newspaper printed an item from Belgium to the effect that General Leman, the brave defender of Liege, had died of a broken heart in a German prison.

The fact is that the General is living in Magdeburg with other officers in a prisoners' camp and is being treated according to his rank. He is nursing his gout, but otherwise is in excellent health. He read his obituary notice with delight.

Had "Cholera Infantum."

WAS WASTED TO A SHADOW.

Cholera Infantum is one of the most common summer complaints of infants, and many die who could be saved if taken in hand on the first sign of the trouble. It begins with a profuse diarrhoea, very often accompanied by vomiting, and the matter ejected from the stomach has a bilious appearance. The child rapidly loses flesh and becomes weak and languid.

Mrs. W. Fallis, 455 Jones Ave., Toronto, Ont., writes: "I have used Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry for my three boys, and I do believe it saved their lives. One of them had cholera infantum so bad he was wasted to a shadow, and the doctor had given him up, but 'Dr. Fowler's' cured him. I have also used it myself for colic and find it an excellent remedy. I would not be without it in the house."

Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry is the original remedy for the cure of all bowel complaints. It has been on the market for the past 70 years.

When you ask for "Dr. Fowler's" see that you get "Dr. Fowler's."

Lakefield Gives Over 50 Recruits

Members of the 46th Recipients of Various Gifts From Friends

Over fifty Lakefield men have already enlisted since the commencement of the war. Wm. Lemay and Stanley Hill, recent recruits, were presented with gold pieces by the Epworth League, of which they were members. Sherman Mahood received a wrist watch from the Anglican Young People's Association and choir, and Mr. W. Quinn, who has been secretary and librarian of the Presbyterian Sunday school was the recipient of a fountain pen from the school. He was also presented with a wrist watch by Mr. Theo. Crawford, with whom he had been employed as a clerk.

Mr. Allan Clark as remembered by the choir of the Presbyterian church from whom he received a fountain pen.

Mr. Clarke was also the recipient of a wrist watch from the members of Lakefield Lodge, I.O.O.F., and a Masonic signet ring from the staff of Mr. J. A. Porter's store, where he had been working for the past four years.

Lieut. G. R. Browning, of the Lakefield company of the 46th Regiment, has offered his services to his king and country for overseas service. Lieut. Browning will likely receive a commission in one of the battalions now being organized.

Harvest Festival at The S. A. Temple

The annual Harvest Festival week at the Salvation Army Temple will open with special services on Sunday and will conclude next Saturday night with the sale of the fruits of the harvest that have been received. Special srervices will be held very night next week.

WILD DUCKS ARE SCARCE AT LAKES

Scarcity of wild ducks is reported from Rice Lake and Chemong Lake. Ben Loucks stated that on the opening day of the season there were a few of the early varieties, but there has been practically no shooting since. Around Mud Lake the birds are decidedly scarce, although it is believed that in a few weeks they should be fairly plentiful. A report from Crow Bay indicated that they were fairly plentiful in that district.

"The Trail of the Lonesome Pine"

"The Trail of the Lonesome Pine" which comes to The Grand next Friday, Sept. 17, shows the brilliant and popular dramatist, Eugene Walter, at his best. He has faithfully mirrored the delightful scenes of the book, and the scenic frame and stage setting arranged are gorgeous indeed. June's great love for Jack Hale, the jealousy of her cousin, Dave, the rough, yet sincere affection of her father, Judd Tolliver, the humorous simplicity of Uncle Billy, and Ole Hun; the quiet strength of Hale, the feudal scenes, the guiding motif of the opposed sides, and the picture of the mountaineer's household are strikingly impressive by the mobility and breadth of their portrayal.

Neither pains nor artistic ability have been spared to give Mr. Walter's play a truly fine presentation, and it enjoyed long runs in Boston, Philadelphia and other cities to capacity business. You see what you imagined in the book, the story of romantic love developed in the heart of a primitive girl in the fastness of high encircling purple mountains, the touch of lofty skies with the lone pine bowing homage to the royal wind and the mountain brook's silver gleam—June's mirror. The play will be presented by the New York cast, and the production is a massive one, maintaining the splendid standard of the New York and Boston presentation of the piece.

Private Doherty was six feet in his socks; the sergeant was much shorter. The sergeant looked along the line. "Head up, there, Doherty," he cried. Doherty raised his head. "Up higher" said the little sergeant. "There, that's better. Don't let me see your head down again."

"Am I to be always like this?" asked Doherty, staring away above the little sergeant's head.

"You are."

"Then I'll say good-bye to ye, sergeant, for I'll never see yes again."

"PEG SAVES HER COUSIN"—Scene in Act 3.

"PEG O' MY HEART" GRAND OPERA HOUSE MONDAY, SEPT. 13

The delightful Irish wit of "Peg O' My Heart" is the first consideration, and rightly, in the production now to be seen at the Grand Opera House. It ripples, it scintillates, the scenes take on added charm from the brogue, and behind a cloud, with every promise of rain, and yet it is fair weather all the time, the sunshine, the warmth and irresistible humour kindly in intent, come to the surface and the well-meant witticisms and laughter

IN THE WORLD OF SPORT

Giants Turned the Tables On the Senators Yesterday

Won a Snappy Ten Innings Game by 3 to 2 Thanks to a Nice Brand of Pitching by Thompson —Max Swanston Caught for Ottawa.

MADE GOOD IMPRESSION

The Cuban Giants came into the tabloid yesterday, to attack the Canada Baseball champions, and by 3 to 2 in a snappy ten innings battle Thompson, the Giants' crack twirler, had a wide margin of Kobat in the heaving department, and the Senator sluggers found the Giants' pitching none too easy, four safeties being the sum total of their efforts with the willow. Thompson had a nice assortment and as sharp breaking curves which he used with judgment, and with perfect support he would have won in the orthodox number of innings by the shutout route.

Max Swanston, the East City artist, was used throughout the game by Manager Shaughnessy, and the Ottawa youngster made a most favorable impression. He threw to bases nicely, handled a couple of plays at the plate in good style and tore off a feature stunt in the ninth when he headed off a base runner at third on an attempted steal.

Kobat offerings had no terrors for the Giants, who stepped into them with a relish, collecting eleven hits, four of them for the half way station.

The officers and men of the 58th Battalion were the guests of the ball clubs, parading to the park headed by the new band. The latter, under the direction of Band Sergeant Hedley, played a number of selections during the game. The soldier boys saw a well-played game of ball and cheered to every echo all the way. Especially appreciating the antics of Catcher Powell, who kept things going all afternoon by his remarks.

The Giants started in scoring in the second. With one gone Johnston got a life when Kobat dropped Dolan's throw. Brown's clean single to centre sent the shortstop to third, and on a pair pulled off a double steal Johnston beating the return throw to the plate. Valentine rolled to Smykal at 1st. Fuller fouled to Swanston.

Ottawa got a chance too in the fifth to score up. After Shag had fanned Smykal singled. When he stopped at 2nd Fuller threw to centre field as if to second completing the steal as Marks threw the ball which bounced over Barnes' head.

It came west at a gallop and the sixth scoring a counter on Barnes' single, a sacrifice, Malette's single and Johnston's double over left field. Brown was out Kobat to Smykal and scored on T. Fuller's long sacrifice fly.

The ninth saw Johnston lose Dolan's fly in the sun, Brown's single

ST. JOHN'S CHURCH AND ENLISTED MEN

A typed list of members of St. John's Anglican congregation who have been ordered to the front, or who have enlisted for active service, has been placed in the Church porch. The list comprises between eighty and ninety names.

Members of the congregation are earnestly requested to peruse this list and should there be an error in any name or description, or should any omission be noticed the Wardens of Mr. W. Johnston (of Dunvale and Johnston) will be pleased to rectify the mistake before a permanent list is made out and printed.

AT GEORGE ST. CHURCH.

The Junior Epworth League of the George St. Methodist Church will resume after the summer holidays at 10 a.m. to-morrow (Sunday), in charge of Miss Gladys Pentland and Mr. Clarence McKee. Rev. W. E. Smith, Medical Missionary in China, who is supported by the Young Peoples' Societies of the Peterborough District, will be the anniversary preacher in George St. to-morrow. The financial meeting of the Peterborough District will be held in George St. Sunday School Hall on Wednesday, Sept. 15. Rev. C. F. Manning of Toronto will conduct the missionary conference in connection with the district meeting.

CHARLOTTE STREET RADIAL EXTENSION

Now that the Charlotte street car line extension is about complete, arrangements will be made for inaugurating a street car service. This will probably be in operation in time for the Peterborough Industrial Fair which opens on Thursday next and continues until Saturday. The new extension runs from Park street to the boundary on Charlotte street and south on the boundary road to Patterson street.

RAILWAY MAGNATE DEAD

Examiner Special

MONTREAL, SEPT. 11.—SIR WILLIAM VAN HORNE, RAILWAY MAGNATE, DIED HERE THIS AFTERNOON.

THANKSGIVING DATE NOT DECIDED

OTTAWA, Sept. 11.—The Cabinet has not yet decided upon the date of Thanksgiving Day. The two dates under consideration are Monday, October 11, and Monday, October 18.

WOMEN WADE IN FRESH CEMENT

Women on Charlotte street seem determined to wade through the fresh cement which is being laid, as in the case of the street pavement, not that they injure the cement or do any particular damage, but they are likely to burn their shoes and walk off with some of the mixture. The Standard Paving Company is making good progress on Charlotte street. All the street railway ties and rails are down to the boundary, the ties being imbedded in cement. The foundation is hardening and will soon be ready for the surface layer. Operations will likely be commenced on Park Street on Monday. The Warren Company are also advancing their sections on Hunter and George Streets, the whole paving work providing considerable work for the city's labour.

THE OTONABEE CHAPTER OF THE I. O. D. E.

The usual monthly business meeting of the above Chapter will be held on Monday afternoon at 3 o'clock, in the Art Room of the Public Library.

A full attendance of members is desired as the winter's work will be discussed and planned.

Mrs. Allan acknowledges with warm thanks receipt of a cheque for $25 from Mrs. Sherwood for the cot in the Red Cross Hospital.

Would any ladies who desire to join the Chapter kindly send their names to Mrs. John Allan, 539 Downie Street.

Stock Markets

Up to 1st September, there were 461,537 bales of 1915 cotton, as compared with 189,317 to same date in 1914.

The Iron Trade Review says:

In order to guard against the protracted deliveries that the steelmakers are obliged to promise, railroad managers now are deeming it prudent to reserve early mill positions during forward periods. Heavy steel works operations continue unabated, and new high records are being attained. The Steel Corporation, which now is running at over 95 per cent. of ingot capacity, last week produced the largest tonnage of steel of any similar period in its history. Heavy shipments in August together with a minimum of effort to load up with new orders for forward delivery probably will result in about a standoff in the unfilled tonnage statement of the leading producer for last month. The pig-iron market is active and strong. Several steel works have reached the limit of their own output and are buying pig-iron in the open market. A notable instance of this was the taking of 40,000 to 50,000 tons of hot metal from nearby merchant furnaces at Buffalo by the Lackawanna Steel Company.

The New York Stock Exchange firm of Boers & Owen assigned for the benefit of their creditors. Charles H. Dickinson, sole surviving partner of the firm made the assignment because of the death of John W. Boers, the Board member of the firm. Mr. Boers as a boy was a messenger for Baker, Dreyer & Co., the firm of Boers & Owen was formed in 1897. W. F. Owen died in November, 1912.

The Executive Committee of the Tennessee Copper Company met in the National City Bank, but decided to dispense the business transacted. According to authoritative reports, the much-talked-of Russian contract for sulphuric acid has not yet been closed.

Directors of the General Motors Company met, but took no action on the common stock dividend. The Finance Committee, however, met and will report to the full Board next week.

In the annual pamphlet report of the Norfolk and Western Railway just issued it was set forth that net income available for dividends on the common stock in the year ended with June last was $9,620,233 equal to 7.71 per cent. on those shares, as compared with 5.81 per cent. earned in the preceding twelve months.

Directors of the Butte and Superior Copper Company declared an extra dividend of $5 on the company's shares in addition to the quarterly dividend of 75 cents. Three months ago the company paid an extra dividend of $2.50 a share.

Four of the porphyry copper companies listed on the New York Stock Exchange—Utah, Chino, Ray Consolidated and Nevada Consolidated—correlate the regular quarterly dividends on their shares.

In addition to the regular quarterly dividend of $2.50 a share, Phelps Dodge & Co. have declared an extra dividend of $3 a share. Last June the company paid $8 extra and last March $1 extra.

An initial quarterly dividend of 50 cents a share was declared on the stock of the Magma Copper Company.

The International Steam Pump preferred stockholders committee headed by McDougall Hawkes filed in the United States District Court a petition for permission to intervene in litigation previously begun by other interests in the company. The Hawkes committee protests against the proposed reorganization.

RE-ORGANIZATION BREWING.

There is a growing belief that new interests have bought their way into Rock Island and it is hinted that Nathan L. Amster, the resigned Director on the board of the railway, does not represent these new interests. One report had it yesterday that George M. Reynolds, President of the Continental and Commercial National Bank of Chicago and other Chicago bankers, were doing the buying. A man affiliated with the Amster faction insisted yesterday that it had drawn up no reorganization plans, and that no slate had been prepared to fill the four vacancies on the Board of Directors. He stated that the Phelps-Dodge interests, who practically dictating themselves from the property, would still be interested parties in reorganization matters. He said there had been much "constructive buying" of Rock Island. An assessment of at least $30 on the stock was inevitable, he thought, and would be the making of an excellent property out of the Rock Island system.—New York Times.

NEW YORK PRESS COMMENTS—

Sun—The stock market has all the signs of underlying strength.

Wall Street Journal—Some of the best observers say large interests are evidently trying to check upward movements while accumulating stocks for a big advance later on.

Financial America—The speculative element on the floor is disposed to put out short lines.

Journal of Commerce—It is understood that Britain is to send gold to quantities sufficient to provide large credits at favourable terms.

Commercial — New England has plenty of money for investment and were it not for international complication of the U.S. Standard stocks would be much higher.

Robs Housekeeping of its Hardest Work

Makes it easy to clean those Hard-to-get-at Places

Dusting, Cleaning and Polishing All At Once

The old way to clean a hardwood floor or woodwork was to dust it, then clean it, then oil and polish it. A half day's task—lots of back breaking work—and even then the result was not always satisfactory.

But the new way—with the

O-Cedar Polish Mop

—you dust, clean and polish all at once. Easy, quick and satisfactory. No stooping or bending. No hard rubbing. A few minutes' easy work and the result is always satisfactory.
